SMALL INVESTORS IN BROOKLYN LOTS.

REALTY TRUST owns large plots of lots in various locations along the elevated railroad lines between Manhattan and Coney Island and along the lines of the proposed subway recently promised by the Rapid Transit Board of the city in response to the requests made by the various local improvement associations. These lots are offered now at low prices and on very easy terms of payment. THEY ARE BARGAINS NOW and are being rapidly absorbed by the leading builders of this section.

Don't neglect this opportunity to buy. Write or call for locations, prices, and terms. A LITTLE MONEY INVESTED now in Brooklyn lots will bring BIG PROFITS IN the near future.

REALTY TRUST also offers TWO-FAMILY HOUSES in the same locations on very easy terms. THE PRICES ARE LOW and the terms on which the houses are offered enable persons who are now renting to buy at a monthly cost about the same as rent. Write or call for particulars and prices NOW.

BOARD OF ESTIMATE AGAINST THE MAYOR

Outvotes Him in Favor of Alexander Hamilton Park.

ITS COST WILL BE $250,000

Mayor Thought Congested Section Needed Parks More Than Convent Av.—Metz and Coler Disagree.

For the first time Mayor McClellan lost control of the Board of Estimate in yesterday's meeting. The Mayor was outvoted on a proposal to establish a park in Convent Avenue, to be known as Alexander Hamilton Park. The cost is estimated at $250,000. Both Controller Metz and President McGowan of the Aldermen took up cudgels in favor of the plan. Mr. McGowan became especially enthusiastic over the thirteen historic trees planted by Hamilton on the park site.

"Those trees are as dead as the late Mr. Hamilton," retorted the Mayor. "I was up there last week looking things over, and I can see no use for spending this sum of money for this purpose."

Controller Metz declared that the city ought to do something for patriotic sentiment, but the Mayor insisted that the congested localities should have their parks before park money was spent on the more open sections of the city. On the roll call President Coler of Brooklyn and President Bermel of Queens alone voted with the Mayor—six votes out of sixteen. President Cromwell of Richmond did not vote, and the plan was put through by a vote of 9 to 6.

Controller Metz and President Coler then got into an argument over the correctness of real estate figures submitted to the board by Mortimer J. Brown, head of the Finance Department's Bureau of Real Estate. Finally the two men were named as a special committee to decide on the purchase of a site for a firehouse at Knickerbocker and Gates Avenues and a site for a schoolhouse at Evergreen and Grove Avenues. Mr. Brown reported in favor of paying $2,250 for the firehouse site and $64,500 for the schoolhouse site.

President Coler objected to these figures, and said that James L. Brumley, a real estate expert, said the property was worth no more than $48,540. On the firehouse price Mr. Coler agreed, but he said the Real Estate Bureau was wrong in the other matter, and he insisted that the board should let the matter go to condemnation proceedings. This the Controller insisted was a reflection on his Real Estate Bureau, which he defended. As the question had been raised, however, he insisted on having the matter go to condemnation proceedings.

"Now you'll see what the city has to pay for the property," declared the Controller.

"It's a good thing to stir this matter up, for the city is altogether too extravagant in its realty purchases," said Mr. Coler later.

Mr. Metz and Mr. Ahearn, the special committee on a school site at West 138th Street and Fifth Avenue, recommended taking the property at $153,000, and the board approved the purchase.

At least a dozen applications to establish small parks in different parts of the city were referred to a "select committee." That committee for the last two years has meant the President of the Board of Aldermen, the Controller, and the President of the Borough interested. A hundred or more proposals have been sent to the committee from first to last, but the committee has never yet made a report.

Brokaw Loses Auto Suit.

The jury that heard Edward W. Browning's suit against Irving Brokaw, before Justice Giegerich, in the Supreme Court, to recover for an automobile which Brokaw sold to him for $2,100, rendered a verdict of $300 in favor of the plaintiff yesterday. The $300 represents the cost of replacing a damaged cylinder.

WILLCOX, TOO, AGAINST PROPOSED POST OFFICE

Local Officials Oppose Site Offered by the Pennsylvania.

A FLUE FOR TUNNEL DUST

Provision for an Interior Court Would Also Hinder Handling of Mails, It Is Said.

It was learned yesterday that the New York Post Office authorities are opposed to putting the new Post Office on the Eighth Avenue site proposed by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. Their reason is that the plans for putting the building there, as set forth by the railroad company, would make of the new Post Office a huge ventilating shaft for the Pennsylvania's tunnel.

While Postmaster Willcox declined yesterday to reveal the nature of his report to Postmaster General Cortelyou in the matter, it is well known in the Post Office that he is against the proposition, and in more than one communication has vigorously opposed the purchase of the site, the terms of the deed transferring it to the Government, and the proposed plans for the building. Mr. Willcox, it is understood, has studied the deed at the direction of Mr. Cortelyou, and the more he sees of it the less he likes it.

The deed provides that the building plans shall give the Pennsylvania space insuring light and air. It is this provision that has made Mr. Willcox object and Mr. Cortelyou hold the deed for a year without deciding on its acceptance or rejection.

According to the plans under consideration the new Post Office, built according to the Pennsylvania's need for air and light, would be bounded on all sides by an open space and would be cored in the middle by a shaft. The surrounding or outside ventilating space to be reserved, according to the plans proposed, would be twenty feet on three sides of the building and ten on the fourth side.

The shaft, or interior court, would be 100 by 150 feet, as the plans provide. The Post Office authorities think that, however well equipped the Pennsylvania's underground system might be electrically, its enormous traffic will cause to be carried skyward through the interior shaft a mass of vitiated air and steel particles and dust that will make it impossible for any of the Post Office windows on this shaft to be open in warm weather. The volume of noise is considered insignificant as compared with the chimneylike use of the proposed new Post Office.

A friend of Postmaster Willcox drew attention yesterday to the fact that the Pennsylvania was asking $1,700,000 for the surface rights for this site, and alleged that in the transaction the railroad would obtain ventilation and air for which it would otherwise be obliged to pay.

An effort was made to learn whether McKim, Mead & White, architects for the Pennsylvania, had a tentative ground plan of the new Post Office, but a representative of the firm told a TIMES reporter that instructions were to give no information on the matter. It is understood that Postmaster Willcox believes that a court would interfere with the proper handling of the mails, a free and clear floor space being the first essential for speed, in his opinion.

It is pointed out that the Chicago Post Office is a failure because of a lack of free space, the centre of the building being obstructed much as the proposed court would obstruct the new New York Post Office.

In Chicago, 120 more clerks than ordinarily would be needed are employed on account of the construction of the building, and 120 more clearks means perhaps $120,000 a year to the Government. Again, the geographical location is disapproved by Mr. Willcox, despite the fact that advantage would be gained by nearness to the railroad. Mr. Willcox was asked if he thought the location was a suitable one aside from other features considered objectionable, and he answered that his reports were in the hands of Mr. Cortelyou and he could not divulge them.

It is known, however, that the Postmaster would prefer some other part of the city for a new Post Office, although what location he may have in view he has not told.

CITY TO TEST WATER LAW.

To See If It Can't Get a Supply from Suffolk County.

Action will be taken by the city next week to test the constitutionality of the law prohibiting the city from going to Suffolk County for a water supply for Brooklyn. William C. Cozier, Deputy Water Commissioner for that borough, is responsible for the plan outlined.

Commissioner Cozier has erected five pumps on land owned by the city near Amityville, in Suffolk County, and has also had wells dug. There is a flume 8,000 feet long to connect the wells with the Brooklyn water mains, and next Monday the pumps will be started. A million gallons of water will be drawn daily from this supply, thus forcing the courts to pass upon the constitutionality of the law prohibiting such action. Mr. Cozier says that counsel has advised him that the law is worthless, so he is going to find out.

UPSETS ORDERED VERDICT.

Justice Van Kirk Sends Damage Case for Tunnel Death to Higher Court.

After directing the jury to assess damages in an action brought by an administrator to recover for a man's death, Justice Van Kirk in the Supreme Court yesterday set aside the $10,000 verdict in order to have its validity tested in the higher courts. The defendant company held that it was not responsible for the death, inasmuch as it resulted from the performance of duties which the victim had voluntarily assumed.

The suit was instituted by the administrator of Edward Deuker, an electrician, who was killed in the tunnel construction work of the New York Central Railroad above Forty-second Street. Deuker rang a gong in the tunnel to warn employes of the approach of locomotives. While doing so he was killed by a switching locomotive.

LAWYER SUES TEACHER TO COLLECT A FEE

I. L. Bamberger Wants $1,500 for Obtaining $4,580 Judgment.

WON CASE AGAINST THE CITY

And Has Got $300,000 in Judgments for Public School Teachers, First and Last.

Miss Nora Curtis Lenihan, a school teacher of 124 East 128th Street, is defendant in a suit brought by Ira Leo Bamberger of 309 Broadway, formerly Chairman of the Law Committee of the Board of Education of Brooklyn. Bamberger is popularly known as the "School Teacher's Lawyer," having obtained a judgment against the city for approximately $300,000 as back pay for 3,414 teachers of Manhattan and Brooklyn a few years ago.

Bamberger is trying to collect a fee from Miss Lenihan, for whom he recently obtained a judgment for $4,580.55 in the Supreme Court of Brooklyn as back pay for her work as Principal in the public schools. There is a controversy as to just what Miss Lenihan should pay the lawyer. The case was recently referred, by Justice Burr of the Supreme Court in Brooklyn, to Referee Lewis A. Fawcett.

Miss Lenihan filed an affidavit setting forth that when she engaged Bamberger as her attorney she "desired to pay him in cash for his services so that he would have no lien or other claim against the judgment" to be obtained. She says that Bamberger offered to try the case for $350, and when she asked him if he would accept $300 he said he would. She then says she paid the money on Sept. 15, 1904.

Miss Lenihan says in her affidavit that later Bamberger sent for her and asked her to sign a paper agreeing, as a further retainer, to pay 30 per cent. of the judgment. She says she declined to sign, and that, when she told Bamberger so, he "displayed some feeling over my refusal to sign the paper and told me to get another lawyer."

On Feb. 5, she says, she served notice upon Bamberger not to collect the judgment and upon the auditor of the Board of Education not to pay it. Then, she declares, she was served with an order to show cause why Bamberger's lien upon the judgment should not be determined to be the sum of $1,500 in addition to the costs and disbursements advanced by him.

Miss Lenihan says she distinctly remembers the agreement for Bamberger to accept $300 in full for his legal services, although no such agreement is mentioned in the receipt for the money. She is prepared to produce a witness to swear that the payment was in full.

Bamberger, in his petition for Miss Lenihan to show cause, says his fee should legitimately be in excess of $1,500. He says it is one of the most difficult school cases he ever tried; that the court declared it to be a difficult and extraordinary one, and that the fee he demands is reasonable. He denies that he gave a receipt for the $300 as payment in full for his legal services, and produces a copy of it to prove his case. The receipt simply reads:

"For professional services in the matter of claim to rank and pay of Principal, $300."

He also directs attention to the fact that mental reservation was made by Miss Lenihan in desiring to pay for his services in cash. She didn't communicate any such desire to him, he declares. He concludes:

"I consider the said Miss Lenihan's position very unconscionable. According to her views, she would not only have procured my services for nothing, but would have made a profit of $49.49 out of them, in addition to receiving the full amount of her claim and a return of the $300. I consider her ungrateful, and I defy anybody to get a word of disapproval concerning me from the thousands of the school teachers I have had the pleasure to represent at one time or another."

Testimony is to be taken on both sides.

RUSE FREED THE BURGLAR.

A Confederate Got Him Away by Impersonating a Detective.

The police are particularly anxious to lay hands on a broad-shouldered man, who acts as lookout for a band of burglars on the upper west side, and, when occasion requires, pretends that he is a Central Office detective. The latest successful exploit of the band was the robbery of the apartments of F. M. Da Costa of 438 Central Park West. This expedition netted them on Wednesday afternoon $1,000 worth of jewelry.

Mary Hogan, nurse of the Da Costa children, had occasion to return to the flat Wednesday afternoon when she found herself confronted by a young man with a pistol. He threatened to kill her if she made an outcry. When the two other young men in the apartment had ransacked it thoroughly, filling their pockets with stick pins and other small articles, including a diamond brooch, they forced the girl to give them a meal, and before leaving threatened to kill her if she gave the alarm within an hour.

As soon as the robbers were gone the maid opened a window overlooking Central Park West. She cried for help and pointed out the three fleeing men. Two made their escape over the Park wall. The third, running up the street, was captured by a crowd of men and boys. While some one went to find a policeman a big man, showing a badge, came up and grabbed the prisoner, saying:

"I have been after you for two months and now I have you. Come along to Police Headquarters and have your picture taken."

Praising the crowd for their good work he boarded a car with his prisoner. The police have not seen them yet.

FREE FERRIES—SOME DAY.

Commissioner Bensel Tells of London County Council's Example.

Commissioner Bensel of the Department of Docks and Ferries believes that ultimately the city will run the Staten Island Ferry free and that this action also will be taken in regard to the Thirty-ninth Street (South Brooklyn) Ferry and any other lines which the city may acquire.

"The London County Council is running a free ferry across the Thames, and I do not see why we in New York should not imitate the example," said the Commissioner yesterday. "The ferryboats are nothing more or less than the extensions of the public highways, and if the city builds and maintains highways and bridges, why not ferries? The bridges certainly do not pay as business propositions, for they take in only what the trucks and the street cars pay.

"Many fault-finders complain because the Staten Island Ferry is run at a loss. We expect it to be run at a loss of $300,000 a year when the project first was considered, and I do not believe the loss will exceed those figures. We counted on paying for the purpose of giving proper consideration and service to citizens. Then, too, the city gains in the long run through the increased value of property in Richmond. Already we have found a twenty-four per cent. increase in the number of passengers carried."

PESTERED THE ORGANIST.

O'Sullivan Wrote Her Love Letters—Now He's in the Psychopathic Ward.

Cornelius O'Sullivan, who lived at Mills Hotel No. 1, in Bleecker Street, went to the Madison Square Church House, at Thirtieth Street and Third Avenue, and fell in love with the organist. That was not what he went there for, but he couldn't help it. She did not return his affection. When she received fervid letters signed "O'Sullivan" she turned them over to the Rev. Dr. Beattie, who helps to run the Church House as a branch of Dr. Parkhurst's Madison Square Church.

Then the trouble began. It ended with O'Sullivan being sent to the psycopathic ward at Bellevue Hospital yesterday by Magistrate Cornell.

After a week or two of love letters for Miss Ida Parker, the organist, and a very different kind of epistles for the parson, who frowned on his suit, O'Sullivan arose in meeting at the Church House night before last and announced that he had something to say. Whatever it was it was drowned out because the parson signaled to the organist to play, and she played. A second time O'Sullivan arose, and this time Dr. Beattie persuaded him to go into the study. Then the minister called a policeman and told him to arrest O'Sullivan.

In the unromantic atmosphere of the Yorkville Court yesterday O'Sullivan admitted that he was in love. The discouragement he got caused frequent trips through swinging doors in Third and other avenues.

"I went around last night to apologize for the letters I'd written," he said. "Dr. Beattie must have misunderstood me if he thought I wanted to disturb the meeting. I guess a cat can look at a King."

IMMIGRATION.

A Fascinating Subject as It Is Discussed in Prescott F. Hall's Book on Its Effects in This Country.

BY EDWARD A. BRADFORD.

THIS current week a single immigrant ship debarked 2,000 wretched creatures, broken in spirit, weak in body, and just able to pass the inspection admitting them to our shores as not certain to become public charges. And this ship's company is no exception in either quality or numbers. Speaking first regarding numbers, there is an amazing contrast between the new and old volume of immigration. When single ships bring thousands it is no wonder that a single year's arrivals exceed a million, and that this year's total is at an unprecedented rate. New England's population was produced from 20,000 immigrants before 1640. Less than a generation before the Revolution Franklin estimated the Colonies at about one million descendants from an orginal immigration of 80,000. The first census after the Revolution, in 1790, gave a total population of 4,000,000. The records of immigration begin with 1820, and during the generation from the close of the Revolutionary War until then immigrants numbered a quarter million, a single quarter year's arrivals now. Before this current year is ended the arrivals from 1820 will exceed 24,000,000.

There is nothing to equal it in history, and history is itself little more than a compendium of migration of races. Their procession across the world's stage dwarfs that of nations or dynasties. The Tartar invasion of Europe, the Roman invasion of more than one continent, the invasion of America first by the Spaniards, later by the English, and lately by all the tribes of the earth, each migrant people drifting or traveling to the West, these are the greatest facts in the developments of peoples and nations. We are assisting and witnessing a racial development rivaling Burbank's experiments in plant life. Never was and never again can be such an opportunity for human stirpiculture. Yet immigration is thought dry and tedious even by those who marvel at Burbank's almost incredible results with mere plants, although we could if we would most powerfully mold and direct the sort of person a typical American should or will be. And indeed by merely failing to mold him for the better we are molding him for the worse, and will yet be sorry for it.

IT is bathetic to treat such a question as matter of dollars and cents, but this generation has ears for no other call. And the economic effects are stupendous. It costs $1,000 to rear a child to 14. The ages of the last million to arrive are unknown, but it is not exaggeration to say that the immigration of 1905 added a billion to the National wealth. But this is only the beginning. Millions had preceded them, and the product of their labor is authoritatively estimated at $600,000,000 annually. Paper and pencil will be needed to figure out what billions that makes for each generation. It is hardly worth mentioning that in 1904 immigrants showed at the Barge Office $21,000,000 in cash. There is an offset, of course. There are towns in Ireland and entire districts in Italy which are identifiable by the prosperity diffused by remittances from the United States. But this is rather fuel for flames than money lost to us, for it stimulates further immigration as nothing else could do. At times it has seemed that this flood of labor has created another offset nearer home, but of recent years there has been no unemployed problem except for strikers. Economically it must seem that the question whether immigration pays has been answered affirmatively. We would have developed more slowly in wealth and numbers except for foreign recruits.

But we would have developed more naturally and wholesomely if earlier experience is any guide to what later years would have produced. Between 1790 and 1830 we grew from 4,000,000 to 13,000,000, an increase of 227 per cent. There is nothing like that in any other people's experience, and the increase was even higher in quality than in numbers. We were a native, a homogeneous, an acclimated, and athletic people. By 1850, 2,500,000 immigrants had been added to the population, but the population just about equaled what it would have been if the previous rate of increase had been sustained; that is to say, the decrease in birth rate offset the increase by immigration. Is there any reason to connect the facts? Why should there be room to say that Americans ceased breeding because immigration multiplied? It was because immigration altered its character, and produced racial and social changes still proceeding at such a rate that the general tendency is verifiable by simple observation. And the recorded facts sustain the evidence of anybody's eyes and experience.

THE high quality of early immigration needs no proof. It has proved its quality by its works. The Pilgrims, the Quakers, the Pennsylvania Dutch, the German rebels, and refugees of later years, the Irish expelled by famine—these were stocks to produce a people to be proud of. Not all of them came among the earliest. There were not enough of them even so late as at the civil war, when native Americans were the stoutest in body and heart of the armies of North and South alike. In those days travel was so tedious and so costly that oceans were crossed only under the stimulus of the strongest motives. Weaklings who attempted that strenuous struggle for life succumbed, and the survivors were men indeed, with women worthy of them. But those of this sort come in decreasing numbers and in pitifully small totals nowadays. As travel became easier and cheaper, not love of liberty at any sacrifice, but mercenary motives animated later comers. It would have been bad enough if a worse quality of the same familiar stocks joined us as the result of State-aided immigration—meaning assisted departures of dependents, defectives, and delinquents. It would be flattering to believe that recent arrivals were attracted by admiration for our institutions. But truth to say they come by thousands for no better reason than that steamship companies advertise us like a show for the sake of earning passage money for dividends. Oceans are traversed as easily as the journey from New York to Albany was made contemporaneously with early immigration, and the cost is a tithe. Under these conditions we no longer get the peoples to whom we are kin, who understand us and whom we understand. We get people of alien bloods and tongues and habits. We are developing race and class and social distinctions and hatreds such as were unknown when even parsons worked with their hands and every man respected his neighbor. We have foreign colonies whose numbers are below the arrests of that nationality each year. We have un-American crimes and criminals of outlandish names. We export as well as import Anarchists. When next industrial depression strikes us we shall have an unemployed problem to dwarf our Coxey army, and perhaps to cause London to marvel even as we are marveling at London's misery.

Mr. Prescott F. Hall writes with conviction, but not with prejudice or passion. He holds a brief, but his argument is sober and reasonable. His new book, "Immigration," (Henry Holt & Co.,) bristles with figures whose compilation is useful even to those of different ways of thought. Perhaps nowhere else can be found equally full and conveniently arranged statistics, and as good an epitome of legislation.

CENTRAL ASIA.

Capt. Rawling's Book on the Great Plateau and Dr. Merzbacher's on the Central Tian-Shan Mountains.*

Written for THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW OF BOOKS by CYRUS C. ADAMS.

THESE books testify that the day of large geographical discovery has not wholly been replaced by the era of minute and detailed study of the earth's surface. Both works are, in part, revelations of the unknown. In his story of the Gartok expedition Capt. Rawling gives the first account written by a white explorer of the extreme southwestern part of Tibet, where Tibetan industry and civilization have been chiefly developed. Dr. Merzbacher, on the other hand, has sounded to its core the central Tian-Shan, the position of whose dominant peak was not even known. The books are not long, compared with other recent records of exploration, but pioneer research is largely represented in them, and very effectively because scientific methods have directed the investigations.

Capt. Rawling's journey in 1903 on the high western plateau of Tibet led him through new territory differing little from that which Bower and Deasy had well described. But our meagre literature on this unique and wonderful region cannot dull the interest with which these fresh details will be read. Almost uninhabited and barren, a more desolate and uninviting region scarcely exists outside the realm of polar ice and snow, and yet, as Capt. Rawling says, "It has an irresistible fascination for the man who has once traveled there."

As Rawling unfolds these endless plains before us we see an undulating surface, most of whose shallow valleys are higher than the top of Mont Blanc; with patches of snow here and there, though it is Summer and in the latitude of New York; with many a peak or mountain chain no higher above the plain than our Highlands, as seen from a Hudson River steamer, though they are covered with snow and outtop Mount St. Elias in Alaska; with winds rising to gales, bringing snow and hail and temperatures in June that are many degrees below freezing, and with myriad lakes varying the monotony of the wide waste, though not a drop of the water reaches the sea, for the fresh lakes empty into the salt ones, and the latter are bitter with the heavy load of minerals they carry.

It seems strange that any human beings should live amid these unkindly conditions, where even patches of good soil, covered with rich and thick grasses, are likely to be permanently frozen two feet beneath the surface. But even the Tibetan plateau has its allurements. Hundreds of thousands of antelopes and other game wander over parts of the great table land, supplying the few nomads with food in plenty. As among the Eskimos, the meat is usually eaten raw. Some of the valleys are rich in gold, and thousands of pits show where Tibetans from the south have recently been digging for the metal. Fodder was so scarce that eighteen of Rawling's ponies died in a few days, and the churlish authorities of Tibet, hearing of his presence, kept him away from the south, with its many settlements, and finally turned him back. By dogged perseverance in overcoming great obstacles the expedition succeeded in mapping 35,000 square miles of hitherto unknown country.

This first journey led into the heart of the northern desert at a time when Tibet was rigidly closed to foreigners. The next exploration was made under exactly opposite conditions. The route was through the rich and thickly populated valleys of the upper Brahmaputra, and—wonder of the world!—the work was done with the permission and under the protection of the Lhasa Government. The shell of Tibetan exclusiveness had at last been broken by the notable success of Younghusband's mission to Lhasa.

Most of the Tibetans live in this southern part of their country, along the valley of the Brahmaputra, where the sun is more genial and the winds less fierce than on the plateau to the north. They have been so veiled behind their wall of fanaticism and inhospitality that this record of a long journey through their settlements shows them in a different and indeed in a more favorable light, for they are really a more agreeable people than we had imagined them to be. The privilege came first to Rawling to travel among them as their friend and under the protection of their Government, and the story of the journey through the villages and among the fruitful fields could scarcely be spoiled even by dull narration, and this book is brightly written.

*THE GREAT PLATEAU. Being an Account of Exploration in Central Tibet, 1903, and of the Gartok Expedition, 1904-5. By Capt. C. G. Rawling. Illustrations, maps, appendix and index. Pp. xii.-[illegible]. 8vo, cloth. New York: Longmans, Green & Co. $4.

THE CENTRAL TIAN-SHAN MOUNTAINS, 1902-3. By Gottfried Merzbacher. Published under the authority of the Royal Geographical Society. Illustrations, map, and index. Pp. ix.-[illegible]. 8vo, cloth. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. [illegible]

The new treaty between India and Tibet stipulated that trade marts should be opened to the rest of the world at three places, two of which were well known, but Gartok, further west, had never been visited by a European. So Rawling was sent up the Brahmaputra to carry the news of the treaty to Gartok, and a strong party of surveyors under Ryder was attached to the expedition to map the unknown country. The result was a good map of the mountain region bordering the route all the way from Lhasa to the southwest corner of Tibet on the Indian frontier, a work which won for Ryder one of the gold medals of the Royal Geographical Society.

While the surveyors were busy mapping the land Rawling was taking notes and photographs of this strip of the earth that no white man had seen before. Compared with the part of Tibet he had known he found it a paradise, in spite of its elevation of 14,000 feet above the sea, where the Winters are very severe and snow is always in sight on the mountains. But these valleys glow with heat in Summer, and the mountain snows feed many a stream which the Tibetan farmers lead in irrigation ditches to fructify their fields.

Rawling found no lack of hospitality among the people, and everywhere they welcomed him to their cottages and set food before him. Their intentions were good, but he thinks that special training will be necessary to make Tibetan cookery agreeable to the foreign palate. The renown of his physician spread abroad, and scores of the sick were brought to be treated.

WHAT Rawling saw and learned proves to us that we have known very little of the Tibetans. He was greatly surprised to find many suspension bridges spanning the Brahmaputra and chasms that were 300 feet in width. The main supports are supplied by two iron chains, the links forged from bar iron three-fourths of an inch thick, and the ends of the chains are buried deep in the earth or fastened around great rocks. A network of ropes hangs from the chains and supports the footpath along which the traveler crosses. Every ounce of the iron is brought from China or India, and the total work involved is enormous.

In the more favorable places many small villages dot the plains or are scattered along the river banks. Each is surrounded by trees or cultivated land. The whitewashed houses are substantially built, and the people look prosperous and happy. The irrigated fields and the cheery folk were pleasing to foreign eyes, and were in striking contrast with all our preconceptions of the Tibetans, of whom the white race has seldom thought excepting as eager to kill all intruders upon their preserves.

But these pleasing aspects came to an end long before the party reached its destination. The fertile fields were succeeded by stony and sterile lands, the Brahmaputra became narrow and rocky, and soon the expedition passed into the basin of the Indus River. A little later the Lhasa treaty was read, for the last time, at the wretched hamlet of Gartok, where it aroused only languid interest. From Simla the Tibetans in the party experienced the unknown delights of railroad travel, and were a happy lot as they quickly made the long journey to Darjeeling, whence they easily reached their homes. This book will be memorable for its history of the pioneer journey that broke the ice between the rural Tibetans and the outer world.

DR. MERZBACHER is an Alpinist who is best known as the author of the most thorough book on the Caucasus yet written. His present work is preliminary to the volume that will contain all the scientific results of his remarkably laborious two years of exploration in the mightiest mountain system of Central Asia.

The present work, therefore, omits the botanical, zoological, and climatological results, though giving much attention to the geological features and to observations on the present and past glaciation of the Tian-Shan. In fact, the geological detail is so generally diffused on most pages and the treatment of the subject is so largely technical, that the book lacks desirable elements of popularity. Every one will enjoy the fine pictures of these towering snow-crowned summits, and there is much in the book that is within the range of general interest, but the book will tend chiefly to edify those whose scientific cultivation is considerably advanced.

The work described is a valuable contribution to geographical knowledge, for it deals with one of the largest of mountain systems, (several times as extensive as the European Alps,) a region still so little known that the best maps of the Russians are very misleading, as Merzbacher found to his cost. He spent two Summers among the mountain chains forming the central and loftiest portion of the Tian-Shan. Khan-Tengri, 23,600 feet high, overtops and dominates them all; and yet the explorer found that the Russian map incorrectly located the great mountain, and it was not till the explorer was in the second year of his labors that he discovered the valley which led him to the foot of the culminating peak.

These mountains are no proper field for Alpinists who cannot enjoy mountaineering unmixed with plenty of creature comforts. No skillful guides and inviting hotels are provided for climbers among these heights. The Central Tian-Shan are so deep in the heart of Asia that they can be reached only after months of travel. The explorer must pitch his tent amid snow and glaciers thousands of feet above sea level; he has nothing to eat excepting the food he brings with him; and half of his Kirghiz porters are likely to desert in the night, and are always certain to show the greatest aversion to snow at high altitudes.

SOME explorers tell too many incidents of their personal discomforts. But it is chiefly by reading between the lines that we gain an idea of the really great dangers and incessant annoyances which beset Dr. Merzbacher and his comrades. More than half their work lay high on the ice fields, which they explored and surveyed. The leader thought nothing of ascending mountain tops of 14,000 to 15,000 feet to obtain good panoramic photographs, and more than once after gaining a height which only the most expert Alpinist could reach he was robbed in a moment of all chance to catch the wonderful view before him by dense fog that suddenly hid the world and made his descent very perilous.

Even those accustomed to the sight of the loftiest eminences have a feeling of wonder and amazement at their first view of the mightiest summits of the Tian-Shan. Few snow peaks are so wild and rugged. They are sculptured into the most diverse forms, and, stretching away as far as the eye can reach, are regarded as one of the grandest of Alpine pictures. Much must still be done before these great mountain ranges of Central Asia are properly explored or correctly mapped, but Dr. Merzbacher's first-rate piece of work has set the standard high for later explorers, and his book is worthy of the scientific labors which he carried out under such trying circumstances.

HENRY MOORE, R. A.

THE biography of this well-known English sea-painter, by Frank Maclean, in The Makers of British Art Series, edited by James A. Manson, is based on the early diary of the artist, his correspondence, and some private papers loaned by friends and the family. The object of the book is set forth in the opening chapter:

> Although, as will be seen, the art of Henry Moore embraced nearly the whole domain of painting, the object of this volume is to show him chiefly as a sea-painter, for it was in this branch that his original talent found its most ample opportunity, and clever and striking as are many of his essays in landscape, animals, and flower painting, it is by his marine pictures that he will mainly be remembered. Popular favor, which he never courted to the detriment of his art, has been bestowed on his renderings of the sea; it is here that the majority of critics allow him unusual power. * * * With Henry Moore the very term "sea-painting" assumes a fresh significance. Apart from other considerations, he was among the first of English artists to treat the sea as a subject sufficient in itself.

And, to show the differences in "conception and treatment" separating Moore's art from that of those who came before him, Mr. Maclean reviews briefly the history of marine painting in Great Britain. Following this chapter come descriptions of Moore's early youth and manhood, his residence in London, his turning to seascape from landscape, the development of sea-painting, and his final years. The closing chapters deal with Moore's friends, his "art" and work, and contemporary marine painters. The appendices give lists of his paintings. The illustrations, half-tone reproductions, are arranged in chronological order, but distributed at intervals throughout the book. (12mo. Cloth. Pp. 215. XVI. Uncut. Gilt top. New York: Imported by Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25.)

New York in Pictures.

Mr. Moses King's "Views of New York" reach us in a new edition. The volume consists of upward of 400 views of the city, or rather of the buildings of the city, for the Irishman's complaint is certainly true of New York: "I can't see the city for the buildings." The illustrations, from photographs, are interesting; the old New Yorker can hardly believe that his town is so good looking and has such attractive places in it.

RURAL EVOLUTION.

Mr. W. L. Anderson's New Book on the American Country Town.*

BY EDWARD CARY.

EVOLUTION in connection with the country districts of the United States is a key to many puzzles, and the guide to the solution of many others, if it be in the hands of an honest and competent student. It is by no means the kind of key with which the burglar and the hotel maid accomplish their respective miracles, opening portals that seem to have each its own and exclusive lock. And the progress of our industrial civilization, especially in complexity and intricacy and in the scope and intensity of the forces brought into play, like the invention of the Yale lock, has made the use of universal keys extremely difficult. Nevertheless, evolution, as understood by the modern scientist, based on, but far outstretching, the conceptions and the knowledge of Darwin, remains the only approach to a "passe-partout" available to the serious inquirer.

The main title of Mr. Anderson's extremely interesting and informing work is at once inadequate and somewhat misleading. "The Country Town" suggests the village or the smallest of the cities; and there lingers in one's mind something of the assumed contrast of "town" and "country" as the words are ordinarily used. The author uses "town" practically as the equivalent of township, that is of the smallest of the civil divisions, of which the next largest, the county, is made up. And this he does, we infer, because the Census Bureau, on whose statistics he draws freely and skillfully, reports mainly on towns and makes no clear distinction between those which are wholly rural and those which contain considerable centres of population that are neither cities nor strictly rural communities. Bearing this use of the word in mind, Mr. Anderson's discussion is clear enough, and his second title, "A Study of Rural Evolution," is entirely satisfactory.

⁂

CURRENT interest in such discussion springs chiefly from the general interest in what is called and what on the surface appears, in many sections, to be the process of "decay," of "depletion" of the rural districts; this process is taken to be fairly represented by the "abandoned farm," and by the thinning out or replacement of the old population, generally supposed to have been "native American." On this side the effects of the process have been graphically, impressively, even sensationally described, and predictions of the gloomiest and sometimes of the most alarming nature have been based on these descriptions. Unfortunately there is a lot of evidence in a good many parts of the country that, taken by itself, largely justifies both the descriptions and the predictions. Mr. Anderson does not in the least strive to evade or to minify this evidence. He does, however, show very clearly, as the result of patient and penetrating observation and investigation, that it is only partial evidence; properly understood it does not in itself amount to as much as it seems to, and there is other pertinent and competent evidence which greatly modifies and to a considerable extent contradicts it.

IT is not convenient here to attempt even to summarize briefly this other evidence. Suffice it to say that it is directed primarily to showing that the "decaying" country town never had the bright and creditable composition with which its present state is so vividly contrasted; secondly, to showing that such changes as have taken place for the worse are not uniform and go along with other changes for the better; and finally, that the "country town" is but a part of an organic social and industrial whole, the movement of which is toward advance and not decline, toward growth and not decay. This part of Mr. Anderson's work is admirably done. It involves a definition of the essential principles of evolution as now understood and a painstaking analysis of the facts which show the application of these principles. The ground covered embraces the available information not merely as to industrial forces, though to these great weight is properly given, but as to social, political, religious, and spiritual forces as well. Nor is the "country town" of the East—where it has been so conspicuously the object of interest—alone considered, but the country town over all the northern part of the Union. And the country town means, in this connotation, the part of the population chiefly interested in and connected with agricultural production, as compared with the part engaged in manufactures, transportation, and trade and dependent on agriculture for food, for the materials of clothing and shelter, and the raw material of most manufactures.

The general conclusions of Mr. Anderson are distinctly optimistic, though far from blindly so. He does not deny and he does not seem at all to understate the facts which apparently compel a pessimistic view, but he opposes to them facts not generally recognized that make for encouragement. He lays much stress—not at all too much—on the influence of the modern industrial system in regard to ease and rapidity and low cost of transportation and of communication. The railway, the telegraph, the telephone, with the necessity they all yield to do business on a very large scale and at lower and lower costs, are steadily destroying the isolation of the farm, steadily bringing the farmers more closely within the sphere of influence of the rest of the people. More and more they are an integral part of the vast system of modern activities. More and more they are raising their products for the markets of the world, and, in turn, are deriving from these markets the things they need and wish and can pay for. These are not merely food and clothing and furniture; they are machinery; they are libraries and periodicals and newspapers; they are organization and methods and aims of the larger societies; they are, in the broadest sense, civilization and culture. Any one who wishes intelligently to grasp, in part at least, what are the ways and what the probable results of this mighty complex of great, enduring, and advancing forces would do well to study the admirable little book of Mr. Anderson.

EDINBURGH MISSIONS.

FISHERS OF MEN. By S. R. Crockett. New York: D. Appleton & Co[illegible].50.

A "WERSH SMILE" is not a smile to be found in the dictionary; but it is the smile oftenest seen on the face of the "crack criminal" of this tale, and "wersh" might well express the taste that is in the mouth during a great part of the reading of it. It is only when one gets toward the middle of the book that one gets any inkling of the meaning of its title. Then one learns that the Fishers are missionaries, and very delightful ones, who are trying to save souls in the "darkest Africa," speaking, spiritually, of Edinburgh slums.

There is Mr. Molesay, the most unworldly wise man. There is the hero with the Indian blood in his veins. And there is the young woman with the witty tongue and the winning ways. There are a couple of automata in the shapes of an over-wealthy uncle and aunt, whence a fortune for the leaving to the chosen heiress and a romance that gets tangled up with an elderly lord and a mysterious murder. As to the facts about the actual murderer and how amazingly the missionaries succeed, from the case of the "kid" to the conversion of the hardened thief into the respectable worker holding a responsible position in a Canadian mine, they can be believed only on the word of the author.

The author is no new hand in the art of fiction, and, to echo the platform Chairman, "We are sure Mr. S. R. Crockett needs no introduction here. We take pleasure in presenting Mr. S. R. Crockett in a new tale."

BREEDING OF KINGS.

Dr. Woods's Study of Heredity in Royalties—A Scientific Book of Interest.*

DR. WOODS'S book is a straightforward, matter-of-fact attempt to solve several important questions. By including all modern royal families it tries to give a fair estimate of the mental and moral status of those privileged personages as compared to the world in general, then it seeks to find the influence on the individual and on the breed of that environment of rank and power in which these elect have lived, and it seeks to throw a little light on the old enigma—Which is the more important, environment or heredity, "or do both somewhat fail to explain all the phenomena and must we postulate a third ultranatural cause working aside from biological laws, to account for all the varying facts of personal history and character?" Each human being has certain mental, moral, and physical characteristics, due to not more than three causes—heredity, environment, and free will. There is but a hundred per cent. of cause for character, and whatever is due to one of these causes takes that much from the others. "It is the chief end of these pages," says the author, "to get an insight, by a scientific method, into the proportionate part played by these factors in the make-up of mental and moral life."

His plan, now that he tells it, is simple; he has taken all the ancestors of the present King of England on both sides for four generations, and all their descendants, all their wives and ancestors in every direction, and graded them according to the opinions of historians and biographers, as shown in the standard biographical dictionaries, into ten grades of intelligence and morality. He thus gets some 832 persons, connected with all the royal houses of Europe, in studying whom he has had to consider more than 3,000 persons. His results include no living persons, the King of Spain being the only living ruler about whom any question is even suggested.

At the end of his study of each house Dr. Woods gives a brief summary of its members, or rather of its members who have reigned or done something of importance. Of the House of Hanover, which ruled over England from 1714 to 1901, he says:

> Among this large number (89) there is not a single person, with the exception of Sophia of Palatine [sic] whom one would think of calling a genius. It is also significant that there is but a slight amount of insanity, George III. being the only one actually insane. Also no true imbecility can be found. * * * We have what we might expect, mediocrity the characteristic, with here and there minds above the average.

OF the present reigning house of Great Britain, that of Saxe-Cobourg-Gotha, Dr. Woods says: "The intellectual average is everywhere near the mean or slightly above, and the moral average is everywhere near the mean or very much above it."

> It is the cleanest and best pedigree to be found in all royalty, and its influence on European history has come to be very great, since its very merits have entitled it to several thrones. In fact, it can be shown that no royal family has been able to maintain itself without degeneration, unless it has taken a good share of Saxe-Cobourg blood. The good qualities, if due to heredity at all, in Austria, England, Germany, Belgium, and Bulgaria, are largely due to it. It probably saved the Bourbons in Portugal.

THIS remark about Portugal is pointed by the fact that with that country alone has Dr. Woods worked out the parallelism between ruler and country. He hopes to do it yet for the other countries of Europe, and therewith to end his study of heredity, royalties, and kingdoms. Of Portugal he has deduced that "the ability of the rulers is reflected in the condition of the lands over which they governed. The moral character seems to have been of less significance." He has a table of parallels to support this conclusion. Of the present King of Spain he writes:

> With father and mother both normal, though father consumptive, two grandfathers weak and eccentric, one of whom was physically degenerate, (or possibly one of them, some unknown subject of Isabella's,) one grandmother, Elizabeth of Austria, excellent, and a third and fourth generation pedigree full of vices and depravities, to possibly revert to, and with one great-grandparent, Charles of Austria, one of the noblest and most brilliant princes that ever lived, and a bringing up of the most careful sort, it is indeed difficult to predict what the future King of Spain will be.

DR. WOODS devotes an interesting chapter to the "Hapsburg lip," ignoring the nose. He finds that this "great, swollen underlip" was in Cymburga, born in the last half of the fourteenth century, and wife to Ernest, the second patriarch of the house. It has persisted since then, still visible "with diminished strength and modified form in the young King of Spain. * * * The persons inheriting the lip were those repeatedly chosen as the progenitors of the following generations."

A chapter on "Correlations and Conclusions" is an important part of the book, to which only reference may be made. The volume is well planned and well worked out, and its facts offer strong evidence of the doctrine of heredity in mankind.

COINCIDENCE.

THE LONG ARM. By Samuel M. Gardenhire. Pp. 344. New York: Harper & Brothers. $1.50.

IT is not at all surprising that the versatility of Mr. Samuel Gardenhire, having already found expression in two such diverse books as "Lux Crucis" and "The Silence of Mrs. Harrold," should make a still further digression into the field of detective fiction and prove by "The Long Arm" that he is a very promising pupil of Sir Conan Doyle. There was a mysterious and extremely shrewd person named Le Droit Conners, who, while not the hero of the story that made Mr. Gardenhire famous last year, nevertheless attracted so large an amount of interest by his clever assumption in it of the rôle of detective that his sponsor has now been moved to give him a book all to himself and a leading part in eight detective stories that afford fine opportunity for the exercise of his extraordinary powers of intuition.

Le Droit Conners is a frank imitation of Sherlock Holmes, even to the inclusion of the admiring historian who assists in all his adventures as a spectator and with his dull wits makes an effective foil for the other's brilliancy; but Conners's methods of solving his problems are not so painfully microscopic, and the man himself is a much more human and fascinating personality. In spite of the plausibility which Conan Doyle succeeded in imparting to the inimitable Holmes and his abnormal faculty of observation, it has always been perfectly well understood that he is too good to be humanly true, but there is really nothing in Conners's accomplishments that is beyond the scope of that instinctive grasp of the gist of matters that goes by the name of shrewdness, and that is by no means an uncommon possession. It is certainly more natural for a creature with mental powers to form a general theory in regard to some mysterious happening and then start out in search for confirmation of that theory than to follow a scent, hound fashion, after the manner of the great Holmes. It does seem now and then that Mr. Conners arrives at his correct conclusions very easily, but that is a fault to which the readers of this form of fiction must always be a little blind.

In the first place, no little glamour is cast over all of these ingenious tales by the extremely attractive personality with which the author has succeeded in endowing the artist detective who takes chief part in them, and has a mystery of his own highly provocative of interest. Incidentally Mr. Gardenhire discloses the nature of his mystery in the poorest story of the lot, and it is learned that an Indian mother very probably accounted for the young man's keen instincts. The special advantage to him of having been born while that mother was partially eaten alive by wolves during an attempt to save his father from the same fate is left to the reader's imagination.

The best story of the eight is the first one, called "A Brother of the Heart," in which a disappointed lover who commits suicide arranges in the most ingeniously diabolical manner for the sure demise of his obdurate beloved, but, unfortunately for the success of his scheme, feels obliged to write a letter about it all to Le Droit Conners, and that astute gentleman saves the lady with great speed. "The Park Slope Mystery" is another good and sufficiently gruesome tale in which a murderer hides his victim by inclosing him in a cement gatepost and setting him up at the entrance of his own house. "The Counterfeiters" is less lurid, but gives Conners an especially fine chance to exercise his logical theories.

All of the stories are good not only from the detective point of view, but from the novelist's as well, and their ingenuity by no means overshadows their human interest, which seems to prove that Mr. Gardenhire has succeeded well in a difficult branch of his art.

Art References in Little.

The latest volume of Routledge's Miniature Reference Library, (E. P. Dutton & Co.,) is Mr. Albert M. Hyamson's "Dictionary of Artists and Art Terms." This is a pocket volume of 178 32mo pages, excellently printed in clear type, in which the student will find the names of a large number of artists of the past and the present, with dates of their birth (and death) and the names of some of their most celebrated pictures. American artists, unless settled in England, are scarcely to be found in the book; it is purely an insular production. But it will be useful to those who prefer small reference books at all hazards to those large enough to give facts with some detail.

FUTURE LIFE
In the Light of Ancient Wisdom and Modern Science
By LOOIS ELBÉ
THIS is the authorized translation of the famous book which has been creating so wide a stir in scientific and religious circles throughout France, under the title "La Vie Future." It will be received with equal interest here, and will arouse very general discussion, as the subject is one which is engaging not only scientists but laymen in ever-increasing numbers.
This volume offers for the first time a complete presentation of all the available evidence hitherto to be found only in the most scattered and inaccessible forms. With great care and exactness M. Elbé has arranged a plain statement of the discoveries, theories and ideas of the greatest investigators together with his own illuminating views and comments, and a mass of authentic information regarding the beliefs of the primitive races.
The book is divided into two parts, the first part being devoted to the Ideas of the Survival as considered by the Primitive races, and the second to Deductions drawn from the Fundamental Sciences.

HORRORS OF WAR.

Baroness Von Suttner's Novel That Won the Nobel Peace Prize.*

It is to be regretted that this reprint of Miss Abbott's excellent translation of "the book that won the Nobel Peace Prize" should be so unsatisfactory in its format. The type is of varying quality, and is frequently faint or blurred; the proofreading leaves something to be desired, and the volume opens charily, until it yields to an emphatic persuasion [illegible] forthwith sheds several pages.

These faults are, however, soon forgotten in the unrelaxing grip with which the story seizes our interest, in the admiration it compels for the motive and the manner of its telling.

It is, of course, a novel with a purpose. None the less—all the more—is it literature of a high order. For, as Mr. Phillips has nobly said:

> The novelists, no less than other men, should strive to make most intelligible to as many of us fellow-beings as possible the fundamental truth that the universe is the common property of us all, and we should help each other to enter into our inheritance and enjoy the fullness of it.

THE BARONESS VON SUTTNER, with the logic of a man and the passionate heart of a woman, hurls her book into the very vitals of the world's monster anachronism, that savage demon which gives the lie to our civilization and our Christianity; the destroyer of ethics, the incarnation of cruelty.

It is an injustice to her story to call it "the 'Uncle Tom's Cabin' of the peace propaganda," for she eschews sentimentality and idealization, pressing home fact and argument to an irresistible conclusion. She has wisely selected for her romance the autobiographical form, and so wonderfully does she tell the story of the young Austrian Countess Martha Althaus that it is difficult to read it as fiction and not as the narrative of the author's own life. The verisimilitude extends to its reticence as well as its revelation. Instead of making the most of every situation there is, in regard to experiences intimate and personal, just that restraint of utterance, that delicate veiling, one would expect from a refined and sensitive woman.

The young Countess is the child of an Austrian General who fought at Custozza under "Father Radetsky." Nurtured amid military traditions, it was the grief of her girlhood that to her the laurels of the battlefield were forbidden. Her study of history stamped upon her mind the impression of the glory of war, and even before her formal introduction into society she became betrothed to a dashing officer of the Hussars.

It was a fairy story, the boy and girl marriage. Youth, love, riches, rank, health, all theirs; and by and by the baby heir, who in his turn was to be a soldier. No other vocation was to be thought of; the profession of war was the source of the highest dignity and honor.

And in the midst of all this joyance came the war of 1859, the disastrous conflict with Italy. Then the scales fell from the eyes of the young wife; then she began to realize the true import of war, and from that hour until the story closes, thirty years later, it is more and more borne in upon her that the duty of every human being is to consecrate his and her powers toward hastening "the era of universal peace, secured by international arbitration."

⁂

THE experiences of the book cover four wars—the war with Italy, the Danish war of 1864 in regard to Schleswig-Holstein, the war with Prussia in 1866, the Holstein question refusing to down, and the siege of Paris in 1871. In each case the author, in the person of the Countess, carefully looks into the causes of the appeal to arms, exposing their glaring inadequacy. She shows the utter subversion of the laws of right and wrong in the code of belligerents; and she gives pitilessly accurate descriptions of the agony, the mutilation, the unspeakable horrors of the field of battle. She is a Verestchagin in words. One averts one's eyes from pictures too terrible to contemplate—and yet they should be burned into the brain and heart of a world too long dazzled by "the glory of war."

Nor does she stop here. The intolerable odors, the disease following swift upon the noisome hecatombs, the anguish of those plunged into sudden bereavement, the worse anguish of those whose beloved are recorded among the "missing," are all made real upon these terribly eloquent pages.

And then she turns to logic; to the arguments of the stern soldier-father, of the friends ablaze with patriotic enthusiasm, of the Christian clergyman; demolishing each with a keen rapier thrust that brings conviction with it. She resorts, too, to the historic method, collecting a "peace protocol," an account of the anti-war sentiment, again and again heard above the blare of trumpets, from Aristophanes, four hundred years before Christ, to de Maupassant, Bodenstedt, Renan.

There are certain bright interludes when for a little the lurid war clouds lift, pleasant glimpses of social life, of intellectual companionships, of domestic happiness. There is a touch of humor, too, a sense of the absurdity of the positions, fortified with platitudes, in which the most of us make ourselves comfortable. But the drama is of necessity a tragedy. We cannot protest, since it must be so to fulfill its purpose. Its art, however, would have been truer had not a single family suffered such overwhelming disaster; and the noble protagonist might have been spared a fate more fearful than that of the soldier who falls in battle, without sacrificing the force of the appeal for peace.

WITHOUT doubt, however, it is a great book, and it is written with the heart's blood of its author. If it seems hopeless to enter a crusade against an iniquity intrenched in the ages, sanctioned by the religions of the world, one can but quote the words of the hero of the story:

> What can I do—I? In truth I am not so foolish as to hope that I personally can lead to this revolution. I say only that I enter the ranks of the army of peace. Did I ever, when in the army of war, hope to rescue my country or to conquer a province? No, the individual can only serve. More yet—he must serve. He who is inspired by a cause can do no other than work for it, he can set his life upon it, even if he knows how little this life in itself can contribute to victory. He serves because he must; it is not alone the State but private conviction which demands this duty of him.

Could unanswerable argument have ushered in "the thousand years of peace" they would long ago have dawned. As the Baroness von Suttner shows, they have been held back by the "training of youth to the idea of the glory of war." Thackeray's "Chronicle of the Drum" would be after her own heart:

> And ever since historian writ,
>   And ever since a bard could sing,
> Doth each exalt with all his wit
>   The noble art of murdering.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> Your orthodox historian puts
>   In foremost rank the soldier thus
> The red-coat bully in his boots
>   That hides the march of men from us.

Thus has been created from earth's earliest ages the "climate of opinion" in which the upas tree of war has grown and flourished. To create another climate in which its very roots will perish is the object of the Peace Propaganda. Of the strong pens springing to its aid none have written with more convincing logic, with greater dynamic force, with more of the enthusiasm of humanity than that of the Baroness von Suttner. The supreme grace of simplicity has been given her, and an exquisite tenderness whereby she holds the heart of her reader in the hollow of her hand. The fleeting vision of the "might have been," with which the book closes, stirs within us something "too deep for tears."

Matthew Arnold found our country full of kindly millionaires "going about like roaring lions, seeking what they might endow." We suggest that some of these place a worthy edition of "Ground Arms" in every family capable of comprehending it, for when its philosophy is grasped and put into action the spirit of Christ's teaching will prevail and there will be an end of war.

A STORY OF ODDITIES.

A WAITRESS who says her wealthy father sleeps on doorsteps and admits having acquired the diamond tiara stolen from a Countess who is her intimate friend, "cannot expect a patient hearing." So declares Mrs. Hemmings, a respectable British matron, fond mother of the hero of this comedy by Archibald Eyre. The fact is that "The Girl in Waiting" (Boston: John W. Luce Company) doesn't need a patient hearing. She is a young woman of too much spirit and originality and involves herself in too many lively adventures to be anything but good company. The good-humored and breezy farce of which Mr. Eyre has made her the star begins bizarrely enough with a scene upon a London doorstep at sunrise. A girl in evening dress is seated upon the stones with a white-haired old gentleman (also in evening dress) sleeping somewhat noisily beside her. A tactless young man comes to the rescue, in spite of all the girl can do to dissuade him, and commits a burglary. Another scene presents the girl and the old gentleman (her father, and a most successful British merchant and member of Parliament) talking over the breakfast cups about what's to be done for his unfortunate weakness. "I must," says the old gentleman, "marry—marry a woman of severe propriety—I'm not sufficiently afraid of you." Which he does while daughter Lilian goes off to spend some time with a humble relative who keeps a pastry shop in a country town.

It is in that country town that most of the further adventures occur, a comic interlude as tea-girl in the shop, a fantastical game of golf with a serious young man, an encounter with a young peer who has stolen his mother's tiara—intending to sell it and give the proceeds to a lady of the stage, an interview with a wicked Jew upon a lonely road, a rescue, and the conversation with the British matron, quoted from above.

The attraction of the little sketch lies largely in a certain whimsicality of view. The girl is a girl who has brought herself up in a very modern way. She wants to make herself over on a sweet domestic model. The serious young man has been tied to his mother's apron strings; the girl wants to harden him up a bit. The young man's mother is eaten up with the meddling spirit, the young peer's mother is a cheerful old creature, rather vulgar and masculine; the girl's father regards his taste for drink with amused detachment and selects the proper antidote (a severe wife) precisely as another might the gold cure.

Taken all together "The Girl in Waiting" is almost as good as some of the things in the same line which have been done by Mr. Morley Roberts. There's a light touch, a venturesome spirit, an eye for human oddities, not a little human sympathy, and a knack of kindly caricature.

◆

"THE SEA MAID."

SOME moderately clever writing has gone into the make-up of Ronald Macdonald's story of "The Sea Maid," (Holt.) It is a tale of love and adventure built out of materials that have proved their usefulness before and doubtless will prove it again. Uncharted islands, mutinous crews, two sets of castaways, including a well-reared but primitive and unawakened maiden, with noble and ignoble lovers, are elements at least as old as Shakespeare, and are still potent to allure and charm. "The Sea Maid" is, in itself, a harmless and in parts an entertaining and refreshing story, showing touches of imagination and of humor; but it is none the less tainted with that peculiar flavor of cheapness—coming perilously near vulgarity—which is the bane of an epoch in which every man who runs (and also every woman) may write as well as read.

This state of affairs often results in a worse product than that achieved by Mr. Macdonald. His story seems, indeed, to be entirely free from deliberate unworthiness. But the penalty paid by craftsmen such as he for their lightness of touch and possible popularity is the unrecognized intrusion into the fabric they are weaving of the tinsel of a cheap, hilarious irreverence, and the red strand of incipient vulgarity. These qualities often appear—as in the present instance—alongside much good feeling and sensitiveness for the relationships of life.

COLUMBUS.

IT is to be presumed that Frederick A. Ober's "Columbus" (Harpers) was written for young people; otherwise there seems no reason for its being, after the works of Las Casas, Herrera, Prescott, and Washington Irving, from whose biographies of the ill-starred discoverer it seems to be compiled.

In Mr. Ober's book there are no new anecdotes of Columbus; the egg story is there in all its addled age; the arguments of the "wise" at St. Stephen's Convent, Salamanca, about the impossibility of the world being round are all there, except the most interesting of all, that "Adam could not have crossed the sea"; the early life of the navigator is skipped over on the plea of a lack of substantiative material, and then the old story of his trials, voyages, triumph, and humiliation is gone over in a way which leaves the reader with a desire to go back to Irving for further details better told.

It is possible that this may be the consummation Mr. Ober wishes to bring about in the young mind. But if he wrote his book on the assumption that the young person needed instruction on the matter in the simplest and most interesting way possible, why, at the very start of his book, in speaking of the discoverer's early life, should he drop the following bombshell around the supposed unsophisticated ears: "As all the world should know, and as it seems hardly necessary to remind the reader."

Mr. Ober, however, seems to have grasped the character of Christopher Columbus. One is used to thinking of the navigator as one reads of him in the school-book primers or as Walt Whitman (to make a wide jump) spoke of him, "a sad-eyed visionary * * * with pious-beaming eyes." Mr. Ober sums him up thus:

> Columbus himself soon forgot his indebtedness to those stalwart aids, who supported his hands when they would have dropped from weariness, as he forgot, or ignored, his promises of reward to others. This innate meanness of a man whose deeds should have raised him above the contemplation of petty things, will appear frequently as his career is followed to the end. That very trait of his nature which had sustained him through all the long years of waiting upon Courts and Kings, and which carried him to a level with royalty, also prevented him from recognizing the worth or merits of any one except the great Christopher Columbus.

Aside from the last sarcastic adjective, this is true, with the exception, perhaps, that writers on Columbus have too often overlooked the magnitude of the man's mission, which he believed was the command of heaven. All his meanness and deceit might well and wisely, if not in a generous spirit, be attributed to that monomania peculiar to men of the fixed idea. Everything was a means to an end, and that Columbus was quite conscious of his own shortcomings, and that he committed them piously and deliberately, is evident from the fact that he vowed he would walk barefooted to the Holy Sepulchre as atonement, confess everything, and devote all his profits to the recovery of that Sepulchre from the infidels.

Mr. Ober's book has one great charm, however, which bursts out occasionally in a way that whets the appetite for more. He has apparently followed in the footsteps of Columbus. His descriptions of the West Indies are perfect, and there is a wondrous atmosphere about his pen picture of that old room in the Convent of La Rábida, near Palos, where Juan Perez, Martin Pinzon, and Columbus planned the discovery of the new world.

> You may see it to-day, the "Columbus Room" of La Rábida, with its floor of earthern tiles and ceiling of cedar; may sit at the table around which gathered those great men who were actually sponsors for the birth of America, for it is still intact in the monastery.

Mr. Ober bears out the assertion that a Jew played quite an important part in the colonization of the new world. He is sure to please the young folk in one particular. He refers occasionally to the only boy who played a part in the discovery of America. Incidentally that boy was always in trouble.

IN WEST FLANDERS.

Mr. Omond Revivifies Bruges and Shows the Modern Aspects of the Flemish Coast.*

FROM the mind of the modern historian who would fain eschew what has not brought forth the practical life of to-day, Bruges, that ancient Flemish town, has been quite banished from formative importance, almost from the sentiment of association. The proximity of Ostend has almost robbed it of any interest whatsoever since antiquarians long ago spoke the final word. And yet, as there is a certain charm in poetical monotony, so there is in the Bruges of to-day, which now, as when Matthew Arnold wrote forty years ago, "still breathes the enchantment of the Middle Ages." Its wharves, streets, and churches still seem deserted. In its convent the pious Béguins still seem to slumber. It is all very tranquil and sad and unaccountable to the tourist when curiosity inspires him to unearth the industrial statistics of the place. He then learns that Bruges does not slumber, and in the elusive trick played his observation he is tempted to agree with that jealous Fleming of Tournai, Georges Rodenbach, that the dormant appearance of Bruges is, in reality, a pose of morbid fastidiousness.

In "Bruges and West Flanders" a touch of Rodenbach is to be found in the colored pictures by Amedée Forestier. But for the author of the text which accompanies them, "John Memmeling and John van Eyck still hold state in Bruges," and we have the most opulent and industrious municipality of ancient Flanders reproduced in all the activity of its business life, in all the lavish luxury and civil ceremony of a worthy wealthy patron of foreign potentates—political, commercial, and artistic. And what Mr. Omond so successfully does for Bruge-La-Morte, he also does for the other towns of West Flanders—Ypres, Furnes, Nieuport—revivifying them with the story of a glorious past. But the artist is ever upon his track with his pictures of to-day, turning the once splendid ports into picturesque fishing villages, gently, and, possibly, unconsciously emphasizing also their note of "morbid fastidiousness," and transforming the ancient sandy littoral into a cosmopolitan pleasure resort whose native population is quadrupled every year by foreign wayfarers.

MR. OMOND does not, however, forget that Ostend has a history; that it once had a celebrated siege which was the wonder and applause of Europe, and that the toil of turning the sands into gold was not the work of a day, conducted by enterprising foreign syndicates, but the evolution of an idea in which both State and people deserve credit. Then, with a sigh, Mr. Omond dissociates himself from the past and from the period of development and gives us statistics: Whereas in 1860 the list of strangers in Ostend contained 9,700 names, three years ago it contained 40,000; 11,000 English, 8,000 French, 5,000 Germans, 2,000 American, we are told, "helped to swell the crowds who walked on the sea-front, frequented the luxurious and expensive hotels, or left their money on the gaming tables at the Kursaal. On one day—Aug. 15, 1902—7,000 persons bathed." The nationalities of the bathers are not recorded. If all we have heard be true, many of those who abstained would have been none the worse for a dip.

THE gratuitous presumption of these figures interpolated in a book which chiefly concerns "Bruges the dead" is quite obvious to the author, but he makes of it a merit of necessity. A contrast seems eminently proper, if only to reveal to the thousands who yearly hurry Ostendward the sweetness and richness of the treasures they ignore. From the gay hues, the joy and the laughter of the most popular and princely bathing place on the Continent, what a contrast to the dead city left behind, which, if they only knew, might revive true sentiment in those who had lost it in careless, useless pleasures. For, not far from them the faded colors, the time-worn brickwork, the indescribable look of decay which, even on the brightest morning, throws a shade of melancholy over Bruges, and imparts the enchantment of tranquillity to all who come its way, may be theirs for the merest trouble.

It is this spirit which animates Mr. Omond's book even in his historical passages. He has been deeply touched by the ruined greatness that surrounds prosperous Ostend and would show others how they may come under the spell.

EGYPTIAN DOCUMENTS.

ANCIENT RECORDS OF EGYPT. Historical Documents from the Earliest Time to the Persian Conquest. Collected, edited, and translated, with commentary, by James Henry Breasted, Ph. D. Two volumes. Volume I., "The First to the Seventeenth Dynasty." Pp. xliii.-344. Cloth. 8vo. Chicago: The University of Chicago Press.

DR. BREASTED does not give us a succession of beautiful pictures of his discoveries; quite possibly he has made none. But he gives us his translations into English of the inscriptions that his predecessors have found. These he has made with all the advantages of recent advances in Egyptology—and of these he remarks: "It should be noted that a complete revolution in our knowledge of the Egyptian grammar has taken place within the last twenty-five years." Without reflection on the work of the first two generations of Egyptologists, he says, he is trying in this volume to make the historical documents of the Nile Land understandable as a whole, and only as he succeeds in obtaining copies which reproduce their originals correctly, and in giving English versions which embody our modern knowledge of Egyptian, will his volumes be contributions to knowledge.

In an introductory chapter Dr. Breasted describes the chronology of the Egyptians in the light of modern discoveries. How great that light is may be gathered from the fact that only ten years ago a new encyclopaedia said of Egyptian dates: "No trace of the use of a fixed era has been found. Of dynasties * * * only the latest fixed dates can be fixed approximately," and goes on to give six dates as those of Menes of the I. Dynasty. Dr. Breasted is able to say that as far back as the fifth millennium before Christ the Egyptians had a year of 365 days, beginning on July 19, the reappearance of Sirius (Sothis) at sunrise on the eastern horizon after a long invisibility. It was divided into three seasons, and the author shows, despite the shifting of these, due to the divergence between the calendar and the solar year—one-quarter of a day each year—that they coincided with nature 4241 years B. C., and that the calendar dates from about that time. With this as a starting point, and the new knowledge of Egyptian to help, Dr. Breasted has worked out the dates of the twenty-six dynasties, placing the accession of Menes 3400 years B. C. He gives also the dates for each dynasty.

The author does not reproduce the original inscriptions, and gives absolutely no hieroglyphs. Grouped under each King in his proper dynastic place are the names of the inscriptions selected; in a note to each is a statement of its provenance, its actual position, (if not in the original place,) a description of its character, and a note of the places where it is reproduced; then, in an introductory paragraph, he gives a brief idea of its historical significance; and, finally, the translation. Some of the interpretations disclose matter of much interest even to non-Egyptolcgists. For example, the "Inscription of Uni," dating from the beginning of the VI. Dynasty, (B. C. 2625) contains a most romantic story, which ought to supply "local color" to a dozen or so of modern quick-fire novelists; the wills of prince Nekure, son of King Khafre of the IV. Dynasty, dating from about 2850 B. C., will interest lawyers. So will that of an unnamed testator, which contains just such a clause as is common to-day, forfeiting the portion of any legatee who shall violate the provisions of the will! The ten contracts of Hepzefi, made with the priests of Siut for post-mortem ceremonies, are also translated, and they have their modern parallels, sustained by the courts, too, in bequests for masses in the Catholic Church.

There is a conveyance of land dating from the VI. Dynasty, Idu to his wife Disnek, and other documents, sometimes on stone, sometimes on papyrus, now on a stela or a pyramid, an obelisk, or a wall; they all go to show the truth of the Preacher's saying, "There is no new thing under the sun."

Stories for Girls.

THE GIRLS OF GARDENVILLE. By Carroll Watson Rankin, author of "Dandelion Cottage." Illustrated. New York: Henry Holt & Co. $1.50.

Fifteen pretty and innocuous stories for girls have been gathered into a little book and called "The Girls of Gardenville," by Carroll Watson Rankin. The stories are not wholly lacking in humor, and though each incident is nicely calculated to point a moral as well as to adorn a tale, the preaching is not of a very incisive quality. The little homes depicted in these stories are the homes of simple, kindly folk whose prototypes, praise be, may still be found in the smaller of our American communities, and among whom, perhaps, one sees the best phases of our National life. But even with this fact to commend them the tales are not vigorous or interesting enough either in content or in style to have other than the negative value of supplying harmless and diluted amusement to young readers.

KARL GRIER

Karl Grier is a brilliant new story, and this sixth sense is the most exciting cause of it.

There is adventure in Grier and there is a stunning girl who—

Heaven only knows what would have happened to her if KARL GRIER hadn't had a sixth sense. The five senses couldn't have helped enough.

What is the sixth sense? Tracy said "telegnomy," but the word is as new as the idea and it doesn't explain much.

Buy Karl Grier, and you will hear a strange story, "creepy" at times; but you will be vastly entertained.

"The man that won't bear watchin' needs it."
"The more I see o' the world, the better I like the woods."
"A girl with a new ring allus hez trouble with her hair."

A Thrilling Story of Love and Mystery

THE GOLDEN GREYHOUND

By Dwight Tilton, author of "Miss Petticoats," etc.

Illustrated by E. Pollak. Price, $1.50

An up-to-date story of love, adventure, and mystery, with wireless telegraphy and all the modern improvements, that will not let you rest until you see how it is coming out. The hero is a rich young New Yorker and former Yale athlete. He is so attracted by a lovely face as to follow its possessor on board an Atlantic liner, called "The Golden Greyhound," from a vast shipment of gold, where he helps solve a baffling mystery, and his rash journey brings great happiness to all but a set of unsuccessful plotters. The book is as rich in humor as it is fertile in invention, and is strikingly handsome in make-up.

MARCH

NEW NOVEL BY MAXWELL GRAY.

The Author of "The Silence of Dean Maitland" Tells of the Colony of the Golden Rule.*

A CONVERSATION lightly tossed among a group of exuberant Oxford undergraduates strikes the keynote of Miss Tuttiett's strong story, to which Dante's "Gran Rifiuto" furnishes the title, and the most pathetic incident of Holy Writ the theme.

In the novel, however, it is not the young man of "great possessions" who goes away "sorrowful" from the Divine call. He is "not disobedient unto the heavenly vision" which comes to him in his room at the ancient university, on an "ambrosial night of good-fellowship and free discussion." It is a woman who makes "the Great Refusal," and how he follows his ideal and she is false to hers is Miss Tuttiett's story.

Quite apart from its purpose—for a noble purpose it frankly has—the romance is one of commanding interest. All its characters are clear cut and very human. The self-made man of vast, ill-gotten wealth, the son who chose poverty and heartbreak rather than continuance in such "business methods," the two heroines, both fair to see and high of heart, but the one steadfastly faithful to the "stern daughter of the voice of God," the other she of the "Gran Rifiuto"—all these, with the group of subordinate characters, are of unusual vitality.

WE remark in passing that in English novels the Cabinet Minister as a wooer is getting to be a bit overdone. It would seem to be the wont of Englishmen to come unwedded into office. Miss Tuttiett has the rare gift of visualizing her descriptions. The venerable university, the resplendent wedding, the tenement-house room, the gorgeous function of Midshire House—every picture the writer throws upon her canvas leaps into life before the inner eye of the reader, and the talk is really talk, not harangue, nor, on the other hand, too carefully scintillating. At the same time, being the talk of people who think, one gains therefrom not a few original opinions and unusual points of view, as well as bright epigrams and cleverly turned phrases. A few dissonances are struck here and there. A man of the fine fibre of Adrian Bassett would scarcely have played his part at Isobel's wedding. The dramatic incident at the fête seems to fall curiously to the ground without the explanation—or the fullness of explanation—which might have quelled the husband's jealous suspicion. It is unnatural, too, that a gentleman—and Lord Aynesworth was certainly a gentleman—should have poured scathing and envenomed contempt over a wife just emerging from narcotic stupor, so that "she felt as if she were being beaten all over with burning iron rods." Only a brute would have done that.

UPON the whole, however, the characters are consistent with themselves, and the author shows her art by being just to all of them; by no means an easy thing. Was not Thackeray cruel to Becky Sharp, George Eliot to Rosamond Vincy, Mrs. Wharton to Lily Bart? Miss Tuttiett permits us to see the best as well as the worst of her people, none of whom we can wholly condemn; not even Sir Daniel Bassett, unscrupulous and hard though he was, nor Isobel, who sold her birthright for a mess of pottage. Sir Daniel had very much of good, and one can see his side as well as his son's, and can give the disappointed old man his meed of sympathy. As for Isobel, only great souls discover, as she did, that the pottage is not the birthright. A smaller nature would have been full-fed and satisfied with that from which hers turned, sickened.

The romance is the vehicle of a dream of good. In the first chapter the boys at Oxford, uncompromising and confident, declare that:

> A rich man is a sneak who rakes all the good things of the earth into his own muck heap. * * * On hearing that one has grown rich the plain man instinctively asks what deviltry did it. * * * Material comfort is the aim and cause of our present civilization. * * * That is the canker at the core, that is the corrosive poison at the springs of national life; the spirit of commercial greed, the lust of luxury, the frenzied passion to be richer and ever richer, to make sudden fabulous fortunes, to outstrip every competitor in the base, bestial game. Our pleasures are material; intellect, imagination, fancy, love of beauty come never into our pastimes; they are crushed out by the brute weight of wealth. Literature is dead, art degraded to mechanism. A spice of intellect in drama, a glimmer of thought in fiction, is fatal. Poetry is a lost art, conversation is extinct, manners are gone, courtesy dwindled to an irreducible minimum. We in England are merging into sheer plutocracy, the States are a despotism of trusts, rent by chronic war between labor and capital. France is a tyranny of intolerant fanaticism at open war with Christianity, Germany a vast barrack under martial law. * * * Tolstoy is materialism embodied; a living witness to the tyranny of Mammon. * * * He is the young man of the Gospel who made the Great Refusal; he has actually heard and echoed through the world the command "Sell all thou hast and give to the poor," and not gone away grieved, but trafficked with his conscience and lied to his own soul. Tolstoy! who has shifted the burden of his riches to the weaker shoulders of his wife, and fares delicately and lives at ease in his comfortable home at her side. Tolstoy! the splendid genius, the warm-hearted man, the neo-Christian. Oh, the house that holds Tolstoy is the saddest spot in Europe.

⁂

ALL this has, of course, much of youthful hyperbole, but it is the germ from which grow the Brotherhood of the Golden Rule, and later the Colony of Brothersland.

The conclusions and aims of the Brotherhood are of great interest, but are too long to permit full quotation. The most striking are, perhaps, these:

> That the spirit of gain is increasing and desolating the whole of society, denying Christianity, destroying beauty, killing art and literature, and converting healthy industrial life into joyless, mechanic slavery.
>
> That no man can, without blame, enjoy the usufruct of wealth unless acquainted with the way in which it is employed or "made," in financial cant.
>
> That all men are born neither free nor equal, but mutually answerable for and dependent upon each other, and that from those born to much much is required.
>
> That no civilization not based on Christianity can escape corruption and dissolution, and that the true aim of civilization, as of education, is the broadest and fullest and most harmoniously balanced development of all known faculties.

⁂

ADRIAN BASSETT, who made the Great Renunciation, and who in making it found life more abundantly, sails in the vessel the Golden Hope with his company of Brothers, to establish their colony of the Golden Rule in British East Africa; and the lessening sails are watched by her in whose thoughts run "Chi fece per viltate il gran rifiuto," one who "realized that she and not the man from whose brain and heart the glorious vision sprang had made the Great Refusal on that Summer afternoon in the enchanted Armida gardens of Ranelagh."

It is all very beautiful, very noble; and though "original sin"—which is selfishness—strides like Apollyon across the path of humanity toward its Ideal Republics, its Utopias, its Altrurias, its countries of the Golden Rule, still it is well to be forced sometimes to stop and think, to bow before the old, immutable laws of right and wrong, to listen to the cries of those crushed beneath the chariot wheels of what we are pleased to call progress, to recognize the things that really matter, to catch a gleam of that "higher vision" which > Poisons all meaner choice for evermore.

"Only dreams have ever really moved the hearts and molded the destinies of mankind," and it is good to dream such dreams as are unfolded in "The Great Refusal"; good, if the readers are not content with dreaming and admiring, for the value of this book, as of all charged with an altruistic message, lies in the active impulse it inspires to "march against Philip."

FIRST AMERICAN BOOKS

THE CAMBRIDGE PRESS, 1638-1692. A History of the First Printing Press Established in English America, Together with a Biographical List of the Issues of the Press. By Robert E. Roden. With illustrations. Pp. 193. 12mo. New York: Dodd, Mead & Co.

THERE is much of interest in Mr. Roden's history of the Cambridge Press, which in a limited edition has just been issued as the second volume in the series of Famous Presses. The Cambridge Press was the first printing press in the English colonies of America, and began its work just one hundred years after Juan Pablos of Brescia set up his press in Mexico. From this Northern press, during its fifty-four years' existence, issued many books of value originally because of their subjects, and now respected because of their rarity. Mr. Roden gives the history of the press and of its publication, so that both for technical and general reasons his book demands consideration.

It was in the President's house of Harvard College that the Cambridge press was set up in 1738-9, with Stephen Day as printer. After him came his son Matthew Day; then Samuel Green, Marmaduke Johnson, Samuel Green again, and Bartholomew Green, and then, in 1792, the press came to an end, the elder Green dying, and his son taking press and type to Boston. The actual press is now at Montpelier, Vt., in the collection of the Vermont Historical Society.

In its fifty-four years of existence, the Cambridge Press issued 186 books and 21 broadsides. How valuable these are is seen from Mr. Roden's bibliography, wherein one after another issue is recorded as "One of the 'lost' books," "Another of the 'lost' books." It was from this press that the two most famous books yet published in America were issued. John Eliot's Indian Bible and the Bay Psalm Book. All of the press's 200 issues are recorded in this volume, with bibliographical notes, and it is astonishing to see how scarce the issues have become. Of the Bay Psalm Book, first edition, 1640, only ten copies are known, but four of which are perfect; only two copies exist of the second edition, 1647. Eliot's Indian Bible—New Testament, Old Testament, and complete Bible—are rare books; of the entire Bible, published in December, 1663, one copy has brought nearly $5,000, and all copies of any one of the three forms bring consistently high prices. The form of this volume, no less than its matter, deserves notice. It is a duodecimo of nearly 200 pages, printed on hand-made, deckle-edged paper, in De Vinne type, and bound in olive-green boards with cloth back and paper label; it is of very convenient size. It will prove itself a necessity in the library of any collector.

WHAT ST. FRANCIS WROTE.

THE WRITINGS OF ST. FRANCIS OF ASSISI. Newly Translated Into English, With an Introduction and Notes. By Father Paschal Robinson, of the Order of Friars Minor. One volume. Illustrated. Pp. xxxii.-208. 12mo. Cloth. Philadelphia: The Dolphin Press. $1.

IN his "Who's Who" autobiography, M. Paul Sabatier says very truly: "This sight of learned men of all nations and denominations joining hands as they made their way along a path marked out by a French Huguenot was wholly new." He was alluding to the effect that his discoveries and studies in the literature relating to St. Francis of Assisi had brought about. It is more than thirteen years ago that he began them, and published his "Life of St. Francis." Since then every year has seen another contribution to Franciscan literature by some Catholic or Protestant writer. It was, in effect, a Huguenot who introduced St. Francis to the notice of his co-religionists as well as to that of Protestantdom. Rather more than a year ago the Friars Minor at Quaracchi, in Italy, issued a critical edition of St. Francis's works—a book certainly needed, for preceding modern editions had been prepared, as a rule, by the devout rather than the critical, (we do not refer to Sabatier.) Now comes Father Paschal Robinson, O. F. M., with what he hopes is an "accurate translation of the Latin text of the authentic writings of St. Francis as it stands in the critical Quaracchi edition," and thus enables English-speaking people to get as good an idea of the real St. Francis as his writings offer, as distinguished from the largely imaginary being of many recent worshippers.

Father Robinson's work in every way is worthy of its subject. He has translated into excellent English not merely the Latin text of the saint's writings, but the ruder Umbrian writings as well—the famous Canticle of the Sun, or Song of All Creatures. If this were left out, we almost doubt if the volume would have been deemed genuine by the modern amateurs of the saint. Father Robinson has further added a literary introduction, an appendix, a bibliography, and an excellently complete index, and has given footnotes as they were needed. Altogether, the volume is that of a thoroughly devout scholar, and should take the place of much of the well-meaning literature of St. Francis which has become so common of recent years, but has little to commend it except its good intentions.

And the outward appearance is worthy of the contents of the book. The volume is well printed, on good paper, and most attractively bound in flexible cloth. It contains reproductions of Andrea della Robbia's statue of the saint and three reproductions of pages of the saint's autograph manuscript and letters. The publishers may feel entirely satisfied with their share in making a very excellent volume.

AVERY'S HISTORY.

A HISTORY OF THE UNITED STATES AND ITS PEOPLE. From Their Earliest Records to the Present Time. By Elroy McKendree Avery. In 15 volumes. Vol. II. Cleveland: The Burrows Brothers Company.

THE second volume of Mr. Avery's monumental history deals with colonial history of the period of the English Restoration in 1660. The settlements of the Dutch in New Netherland and the beginnings of New France are also treated. It is, of course, upon the English settlements that a history of the United States lays most stress.

The brief chapter on the evolution of a colonial system is one of the best in the volume. It shows how halting, adventitious, and unsystematic was the course of the mother country, how the royal province came to prevail over the earlier types of corporate or proprietary colony, and how ill-defined were the relations between England and America. The significance of the transition to the form of royal province is dwelt upon, and thus the foundation is laid for a correct understanding of the American Revolution. "Imperial control," the author says, "was one of the legitimate and essential functions" of the empire. It was not the fact of this control, but the way in which it was developed at the hands of British statesmen in the eighteenth century that led to the rupture. Mr. Avery says justly, however, that Americans of our generation who studiously ponder upon the errors of their fathers in the decade following 1865 will, perhaps, "not insist that all unwisdom is born of ill-will."

The volume is concerned with both the Colonial and the imperial side of American history during this period. For a complete view of the subject, both the internal history of the Colonies and an account of the English colonial system has to be given. In describing the Colonies, greatest stress is properly laid upon New England. His discussion of the Massachusetts theocracy is fair and judicious. He shows how real democracy began in Rhode Island, and points out the importance of the teachings of Roger Williams. Mr. Avery neither condemns nor exalts the intolerance of the Puritan politico-religious State system.

A guide to the sources for each chapter is given in a general bibliographical appendix; but no attempt is made to estimate the varying values or to discriminate between them. Mr. Avery tells us what his purposes are in writing his history. He has desired to make a book useful for the general reader as well as for the historical student, to co-ordinate facts as well as to analyze them, to be impartial, accurate, and clear, and to study the period by "transverse sections rather than by longitudinal fibres." Like its forerunner, this volume is admirably bound, illustrated, and printed. There is no index.

REMINGTON'S NEW BOOK

THE WAY OF AN INDIAN. Written and illustrated by Frederic Remington. New York: Fox, Duffield & Co.

IT is one thing to show the way of an Indian by means of brush and pencil. It is another thing to show it by word and sentence. Mr. Remington has a fancy for both methods, and if he does not fully succeed in making us feel as if we had been inside the skin of a redman known among his tribe members as the Fire Eater, at least we are given, as we should expect from an artist, a vivid and picturesque exhibition of this typical Indian and his ways.

There is something appealing about his belief in his shadow as a sort of "oversoul" and in the fact that only when that shadow flew away from him would he succumb to Fear.

The way of the Indian, it goes without saying, is tragic, to himself and to all whom he encounters. Etched in blood (vermilion, Mr. Remington calls it,) is this path indeed, and the war paint, the scalp-lock, and the medicine of the Good God typified in the black batskin are much in evidence, while the pitiless snow whiteness of the hunted creature's last rocky mountain stronghold accentuates the contrasts as strongly as ever colorist could wish.

L. Frank Baum's New Juvenile.

The Reilly & Britton Company of Chicago announces the publication at the end of the Summer of a new book for children by L. Frank Baum, author of "The Wizard of Oz," &c., who is now in Europe. It is a "wonder book," said to be full of quaint humor and quite different from anything the author has so far done. The illustrations, which will be reproduced in color, are in the hands of John R. Neill of Philadelphia.

MRS. BURNETT'S STORY.

THE DAWN OF A TO-MORROW. By Frances Hodgson Burnett. Illustrated. Pp. 15d. 12mo. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.

NOTHING human is foreign to Mrs. Burnett's sympathies. We cannot recall any living writer equally at home in societies so many and diverse "The Dawn of a To-morrow" adds yet another to the multitude of fields she has made her own. It takes the reader among the poorest poor of London, "the submerged tenth." A girl of the streets, a child calmly looking forward to a like career, a thief, an old woman, whose youth was spent in dance halls, where she was "one of the worst," and who, when she became old "got wusser"—this is the group elected to save a brain-sick and heart-atrophied king of finance bent upon self-destruction.

The girl "Glad," a sort of "Kim" of the slums, is the most striking character. At 12 years of age all evil is to her an open book, and yet there is an invincible innocence about her. She is one in whom is born the passion for humanity, the divine instinct of helpfulness. The bit of wreckage from the dance halls, Jinny Montaubin, is, we think, Mrs. Burnett's favorite character, but she is not so human and real as Glad. During a year in the hospital she has learned from an unknown "lidy" to believe in the Divine Goodness, and her life has become like that of the lowly Lay Brother Lawrence of more than two centuries and a half ago, "the practice of the Presence of God." There is something, however, very elusive in her faith that nothing bad is a reality. It is not unlike Christian Science applied to things of the spirit. We are inclined to think that Glad, by bringing a desperate man into contact with real and helpable misery had more to do with his salvation than any one else. However that may be, faith and works went hand in hand in giving the dawn of a to-morrow to the man who thought he had come to the end of everything.

The little story is tenderly told, leaving the reader with a softened heart and broader sympathies; perhaps with a new faith in the Presence that is "closer than breathing, nearer than hands and feet."

"FOLLY."

THE story of "Folly," by Edith Rickert, (the Baker & Taylor Company,) is a novel which, so far as externals are concerned, misrepresents itself to the reader at first sight. The appearance of the book suffers from the distressing frontispiece, which purports to be a likeness of Folly and an embellishment as well. However, we are all inclined to deal leniently with books and other things that improve upon our expectations, so perhaps the bookmakers builded better than they knew.

The novel is concerned with the old triangular problem of a woman and two men, of whom the husband sometimes figures as an all but impossible mixture of complaisance, uprightness, and stupidity. The latter quality, however, is assumed and no one is the worse for the deception. Except for a certain artificiality in the handling of some of the situations and the resulting dialogue, the story is a good one and well told. The artificiality, it would seem, is more often the result of an amateur's self-consciousness in the mere handling of the tools than a misconception of the pattern to be wrought. And the problem, it must be said, is treated with some insight and strength of purpose. The upshot of it all comes with a kind of halting eloquence from the lips of an older woman and Folly's friend: "* * * Am I all wrong, or isn't that kind of thing bound to end in a tragedy? Even when King Mark is a good man and keeps out of the way, it doesn't do for daily life, does it? * * * Does that sort of—of attraction, shall I call it?—I mean, is it really irresistible? * * * Because if it is, this world is only a series of pitfalls. And I don't think it is—for most of us anyway."

And in the end the world does not prove a pitfall to Folly, for she works out her own salvation. Now, it is a difficult thing for a sinner to work out his own salvation convincingly—almost as difficult in fiction as in life, and from an artistic standpoint it can hardly be said that Folly does it, but the outcome pleases everybody, and no one better than Folly and her husband.

Teaching Modern Languages.

The R. D. Cortina Company is bringing out four new text books in which the compiler, R. D. Cortina, endeavors to present a new method of learning modern languages. The books are: "English in English," "Espanol en Espanol," "Deutsch auf Deutsch," "Italiano in Italiano." The "method," it is explained, is one of "association and suggestion."

SATURDAY REVIEW OF BOOKS

THE NEW YORK TIMES

NEW YORK, MARCH 10, 1906.

TOPICS OF THE WEEK.

THE April Century will have at least one remarkable and memorable feature, though, perhaps, a number of a magazine containing also chapters in serials by Mrs. Humphry Ward and Dr. S. Weir Mitchell, and an article by the illustrious William Jennings Bryan on "Individualism vs. Socialism," may be safely described in advance of publication as a remarkable and memorable number. The particular feature we have in mind, however, is the graphic narrative of incidents in the battle of Waterloo, written by Lady De Lancey, wife of Col. Sir William Howe De Lancey, who was mortally wounded on the field, June 18, 1815. Lady De Lancey was Magdalene Hall, sister of Capt. Basil Hall, a distinguished British naval officer, who visited this country in 1827, and set down in print some harsh judgments of Americans and their manners, which gave great offense to thin-skinned Americans, and seem to have served Frances Trollope as the keynote of her own book, "Domestic Manners of the Americans." (1831.) Capt. Hall's "Fragments of Voyages and Travels" is a book better worth remembering. William Howe De Lancey was born in New York in the period of British occupation, probably, but the date is uncertain. His father was Stephen De Lancey, who was an officer of the British volunteers in this neighborhood, and afterward Chief Justice in the Bahamas. His mother was a daughter of Mr. Barclay, one of the early rectors of Trinity Church. At the beginning of the Waterloo campaign De Lancey was appointed Deputy Quartermaster General of the British Army in Belgium. His wife, whom he had married two years previously, joined him in Brussels a few days before the battle, and after he fell went to the peasant's cottage in which he lay dying, and nursed him during the last week of his life. Her written narrative of her experiences was prepared for her brother, who showed it to Sir Walter Scott and Dickens, and both were moved to warm expressions of praise. It will be illustrated in The Century with many appropriate pictures, including Lawrence's portrait of Wellington, and fac similes of letters.

A LIVELY little literary monthly, slender in its proportions, sharp, but good-humored in its methods, is The Touchstone, the third number of which has just appeared. It is edited by Sherwin Cody and published in Chicago. One of its aims is "to lead the way to a nobler, loftier, truer literature." To achieve this good purpose it publishes this month a droll caricature of Bliss Carman, and a travesty of the advice given to aspirants to authorship in certain publications which depend for support on folks who want to write. The Touchstone's advice includes these informing paragraphs:

> The North American Review is paying good prices for humorous verse, and is also in the market for strictly fresh hand-picked jokes.
>
> The Atlantic Monthly says: "We buy manuscripts of real merit which have not previously been printed."

Another new small magazine is The Shakespeare Monthly and Literary Companion, edited by John Phin, whose name is often signed to sprightly and well-informed communications in THE NEW YORK TIMES BOOK REVIEW, and published in this city. The first number contains some entertaining reading for students of Shakespeare and collectors of editions of his works.

◆

THE learned philologist, Prof. Walter W. Skeat, who has few living equals, if any, in his own branch of learning, has been protesting, in a letter to The London Academy, against critical introductions to new editions of those works of English literature which the age has agreed to call classical. "All that we want to know about a book," says Prof. Skeat, "is a brief account of its origin and all the facts and dates regarding it that are essential and acceptable." The phrase "all the facts" is one of large significance. Prof. Skeat gives many facts, valuable ones, too, in his edition of Chaucer, his "Two Noble Kinsmen," and his "Shakespeare's Plutarch" that many reasonably intelligent readers do not care a rap for. We are not all concerned with philological origins. But it is precisely the "opinions about its style and its relation to the styles of other writers," which are to Prof. Skeat as a red rag to the traditional bull, that are most acceptable to the earnest student of literature when the opinions are those of the right persons. It is not needful even that the opinions shall be accepted without question. Few will ever agree, for instance, with Swinburne's opinion that Walter Savage Landor ranks as a poet above Byron, and next after Shelley. Yet all who read Landor nowadays (as all ought to who desire to know the best there is in English literature,) may find a charming introduction to him in Swinburne's Encyclopaedia Britannica article. Who cares to read the Elizabethan and Jacobean dramatists, from Ben Jonson to Middleton and Rowley, without Lamb and Swinburne as his guides? It is these very critics, when they are true and constructive critics, who keep the classics of English literature alive from generation to generation. Prof. Skeat is a great philologist, but he will never drive Prof. Saintsbury and Prof. Woodberry, for example, out of business.

OF course there is a great deal of piffling comment and note-making which naturally annoys a man of the equipment of Prof. Skeat. Some of the footnotes in the Mermaid edition of old plays, for instance, are quite superfluous. Yet the task of the annotator is full of problems, and it is always better, after all, to have too many explanatory notes than too few. The trouble with new editions of the classics of literature is that so many of the editors are well meaning, learned men (philologists, may be,) with small imaginative faculties, who pursue their tasks diligently but with no sort of artistic uplift. Such persons, however, are not often open to Prof. Skeat's charge of obscuring their subjects with their own personality. But such Shakespeareans as Furnivall, (with his crotchets and whims,) such students of the lesser Elizabethans as Swinburne, the Johnsonians, like Birkbeck Hill and Birrell, the various editors of Lamb unquestionably are, if it is true that the subjects can be obscured by the interposition of another vivid, highly sympathetic personality between them and the reader. Much depends on the reader's temperament, his mental habit, his power to assimilate. There are persons who would like to have among their editions of Shakespeare a handy volume of the plays with no other introduction than that odd, learned, whimsical essay Dr. Furnivall contributed to the unwieldly Leopold edition, printed in reasonably legible type. Who that reads Landor yearly, with perpetual delight, would not treasure an edition of his works with that Britannica article by Swinburne bound in as an introduction?

MR. WILLIAM MORTON PAYNE, who has been ably reviewing a number of comparatively new novels for his literary newspaper, The Dial, of Chicago, is inclined to believe that W. B. Maxwell, the author of "Vivien," is a woman. He likes "Vivien," but calls it "a woman's novel," and remarks that the name signed to it is "non-committal." But, perhaps, Mr. Maxwell thinks he can afford to be non-committal about his name, nowadays, when four of his novels are in the hands of the voracious English and American readers of fiction. "The Ragged Messenger," which preceded "Vivien," was widely acclaimed. William Babington Maxwell is his full name. His mother is Mary Elizabeth Maxwell, the famous Miss M. E. Braddon, author of many thrilling tales, including "Lady Audley's Secret," "Aurora Floyd" and "Henry Dunbar." Mr. Maxwell lives at his mother's home, Lichfield House, Richmond, on the Thames, and his London club is the Junior Carlton.

MORE novels are written now than ever before; more are published, which is another matter. Many more are read, in proportion to the number of persons who read books, which is, of course, much larger than ever before. What more natural then than the persistent condemnation of the modern novel which one finds in the literary reviews and magazines? Adolphe Brisson, in France, has been lamenting the lack of great novels and great novelists in his Temps feuilleton. Richard Bagot, an English writer of fiction, who shakes the very foundations of Rome, as it seems, when he brings out a new novel of Italian life, has been protesting in The Nineteenth Century against the methods prevailing in the reviewing of fiction. The critic attacks the novelists, the novelist attacks the critics. This is the old drama of the literary life, but the plot has become more complicated, the scene broader. There are so many more novelists, of all sorts; and so many more critics, of all sorts. Mr. Bagot wants reviewing curbed and its field narrowed. Fiction should be critically "hall-marked" as worthy of reviewing before it is given to a reviewer. Some sort of official or set of officials to do the "hall-marking" would have to be appointed—by whom? And for whose benefit? Mr. Bagot's protest seems to be merely the expression of resentment at some supposedly unjust criticism. It is, however, the iteration, the publicity, that does him good, not the expression of good opinions about his work.

OUR cable dispatches announced, some time ago, a forthcoming new "detective story," by George R. Sims, author of "The Lights o' London," "'Ostler Joe," and other things, and hinted that it might be founded on the celebrated Maybrick case. The book, which is now extant in London, and will doubtless cross the ocean ere long, is called "For Life and After." It may or may not be founded on the experiences of Mrs. Maybrick. But it certainly reverses the old order of detective stories. In the very beginning the astute reader is possessed of the key to the mystery. He alone knows that the woman named Marion did not commit the murder at Henley. He follows the enmeshing of the unfortunate woman in a web of circumstantial evidence with a clear vision. She is tried, convicted, sentenced to death, reprieved, and released after fifteen years' imprisonment. Mr. Sims argues that the moment a person is arrested for crime all the machinery of justice is moved to prove him guilty. Well, probably, he generally is guilty. The book is said to abound in good descriptions and in eccentric character drawing—Mr. Sims's forte—portraits of Henley Regatta characters, showmen, broken-down actors, "crooks," and detectives.

NOT only are we to have those charming Cornhill Magazine essays, "From a College Window," in book form shortly, from Mr. A. C. Benson, but he has finished his study of Walter Pater, which will also be published this Spring. His little biographies of Tennyson, Rossetti, and FitzGerald in the English Men of Letters Series were cordially welcomed, and his appreciation of a writer less frequently written about will be even more welcome than they were. Ferris Greenslet's short biography of Pater (1903) is the only one yet published, though Pater and his style have been the subject of innumerable magazine and review articles.

A CUBAN BIBLIOGRAPHY.

SENOR DOMINGO FIGAROLA-CANEDA, Director of the Cuban National Library, has compiled a bibliography of Rafael M. Merchan, probably the foremost Cuban literary man, which has already reached its second edition. Señor Merchan was a Cuban by birth, though often called a Colombian; after studying for the church, he took up literature, and in Havana and in this city became well known as a journalist of thoroughly anti-Spanish feelings.

He lived here for some years, and translated Longfellow's "Evangeline" into Spanish prose, publishing his version in 1882 in Bogotá. At the end of the war of 1898 Señor Merchan was sent as Minister to Spain, a post which ill-health compelled him to resign in 1904. His writings are numerous, on many subjects. Señor Figarola-Caneda's compilation is a decided addition to the future history of Spanish-American literature, toward which it seems to be the first bibliographical contribution.

JAMES McNEIL WHISTLER

THE little book on "Whistler" in the Langham Series of Art Monographs, in which are included appreciations of Durer, Holbein, "Venice as an Art City," &c., (16mo. Pp. 83, VIII. Limp leather. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, $1,) by H. W. Singer, treats of the absence of reverence in the American character as exemplified by Whistler, the painter's disputes with Ruskin, Taylor, Oscar Wilde, Eden, and others; his "Gentle Art of Making Enemies," his "art," his principal paintings, etchings, lithographs, &c.; Whistler's Thames, Venice, and Dutch sets; his hostility to critics and theory of criticism; "Ten o'clock," and Whistler's theory of art. Mr. Singer shows the artist's "unpleasant traits" in order to enable the reader to better understand Whistler's work as a painter of pictures, and he writes:

> Perhaps Whistler's human soul was occupied by a double portion of pettiness, invidiousness, and malice, so that his artistic spirit might be entirely free and unfettered in its greatness. What negative forces there were in his organization were concentrated in his human relations; his artistic existence was without a flaw.

In considering his work, the author "can find nothing pleasing" in Whistler's early etchings. And it is in the "Thames Set" that he is first taken in earnest, although "his great genius did not reveal itself even until long after that." But, with the appearance of the first Venetian etchings, all, writes Mr. Singer, has changed "as though by magic," and he says of Whistler what Helmholtz said of Darwin: He is a genius "because he opened up to aesthetics essentially fresh points of view and guided art into new paths." The half-tone illustrations are sixteen in number and present the most familiar of Whistler's paintings and sketches.

Rhode Island Art.

John Nelson Arnold's little brochure on "Art and Artists in Rhode Island," (8vo. Brochure. Pp. 50. Illustrated, Providence, published under the auspices of the General Assembly by the Rhode Island Citizens' Historical Association,) is an attempt to awaken interest in the aesthetic side of "Little Rhody." The author gives brief sketches of the career and work of those artists who have contributed in any way to Rhode Island art up to 1870. Some of these Mr. Arnold has known, and he has heard of some others whose work he happened to notice. Among the names are John Smybert, John Copley, Gilbert Stuart, (who painted the well-known Washington portraits,) Thomas Young, Washington Allston, Robert Feke, Edward G. Malbone, Charles B. King, H. C. Pratt, C. G. Thompson, James Sullivan Lincoln, James Morgan Lewin, F. S. Batcheller, Edward C. Leavitt, and a number of others who are even less known than some here mentioned. The pictures in the book are reproductions of portraits of Mr. Arnold, J. S. Lincoln, and Gilbert Stuart, and a view of Stuart's birthplace.

NEWS OF THE BOOK WORLD ABROAD.

A Friend of Marie Antoinette—Frederika Macdonald's Rousseau—Palestine Exploration.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES. [Copyright, 1906.]

LONDON, March 9.—Messrs. Chapman & Hall will publish next week a romantic historical monograph, the subject of which is Lady Atkyns, a friend of Marie Antoinette, and her intermediary with the French Royalists in England. The author is M. Frederic Barbey. The same publishers will issue later in the Spring Mrs. Frederika Macdonald's often-announced book on Jean Jacques Rousseau. The purpose of the author is to vindicate Rousseau's character, and her plan includes facsimiles which are said to show how Mme. d'Epinay's manuscripts were tampered with to the disparagement of Rousseau.

⁂

THOMAS MARSHALL'S "Aristotle's Theory of Conduct" will be published next week by Fisher Unwin. The Oxford University Press is preparing "The Great Rebellion of 1381" by Prof. Oman; "Greek Theories of Elemental Cognition from Alcmaeon to Aristotle," edited by J. L. Beare; Longinus, translated by A. O. Prichard, and Propertius, translated by J. S. Phillimore.

⁂

MESSRS. HODDER & STOUGHTON are preparing, not only the book by Frederick Jones Bliss on "The Development of Palestine Exploration," which has already been published in America, but an illustrated record of the discoveries made in connection with the Palestine Exploration Fund. The author of this is R. A. S. Macalister, director of the fund.

⁂

THE new "History of English Literature" which is to be published by the Cambridge University Press, will comprise twelve volumes of 400 pages each. It will cover the whole course of English literature to the end of the Victorian Age. The editors will be Dr. A. W. Ward and A. R. Waller.

⁂

A NEW literary and artistic annual, called "The Sahanachy," will be published by Maunsel & Co., in Dublin, and will be devoted to the works of Irish writers and artists.

W.

A NEW BOOK FULL OF EPIGRAMS.

Mrs. John Lane's Sparkling Essays on English Institutions from the American Point of View.

IT is said that "the thing" now is to be epigrammatic, but epigrams, like truth, should not always be told. There have been makers of bon mots like Sheridan, who made them at the expense of all verisimilitude—Whistler and Oscar Wilde, for example. Their epigrams were hard, cynical, and, therefore, cheap. The inherent falseness of epigrams obtruded itself always through theirs. In her new book, "The Champagne Standard," (The John Lane Company,) Mrs. John Lane yields to the rule that one must say smart things, but her epigrams are uttered, not because they are epigrams, but because they are "in the picture," which without them would lack completeness.

Mrs. Lane's book is a collection of essays on English—really London—matters as viewed by an American. They should please the English, for they are smart and good-humored, sharp and not "nasty"—to use an English phrase of some years ago. And they should please the American public, for the author is a good American, and though she finds fault where fault is to be found in matters American, she still finds our advantages outweighing those of John Bull—which is pleasant and gratifying to our National vanity. The title of her book is that of the first essay, and has nothing to do with "opening wine." It refers rather to those who, with a champagne thirst have a beer purse, (that is our American way of putting it,) and comments on the prevalence of the modern custom of satisfying that thirst. The second essay of the volume, "American Wives and English Housekeeping," was published separately, but goes well in this book. The English reader will be amused at it, and regard it as an instance of the curious insanity that afflicts otherwise sane persons—for Mrs. Lane finds fault with English customs, and that, don't you know, is an impossibility. And the American will like the modified spread-eagleism of the essay, because it's so true! In this essay, the author undertakes to prove that this country is no more expensive to live in than England. She makes a curious introduction: "To start with, the English unit of money value is a penny, the American cent, but observe that a penny is 2 cents." She maintains, with humorous insistence that this difference influences the whole matter of expenses in England.

> From experience I believe that America has a very unmerited reputation for expense. Live well, even if not ostentatiously, in London, and it costs fully as much as in New York or Boston. Houses here are singularly devoid of comforts, and taking the same income, I should say a middle-class American family could live there as cheaply as here, but with more comfort; and when it comes to schooling for children, an item to which I have not alluded, with infinitely greater advantages. * * * How I wish I could clap a big, stolid, conservative, frost-bitten English matron into a snug American house, with a furnace, and heaps of closet (cupboard) room, and all sorts of bells and lifts, and telephones, and then force her to tell me the absolute, unvarnished truth! What would she say?

An essay on "The Extravagant Economy of Women" is worth more thoughtful reading than its jollity suggests. "It takes the great, splendid, masculine spendthrifts in high places to glorify the world with treasures of priceless art. It is the men who keep alive the extravagance, the beauty, and the ideality of life." Here are some scattered sayings taken at random from the essays:

> I am well aware that when it comes to a consideration of the defects of English architecture, I shall be completely crushed by a reference to English cathedrals. It is true, they are glorious. We do not live in cathedrals, however, but in houses, and English houses are far, far behind English cathedrals.
>
> In the political economy of nations the toothbrush is of much more importance than the sword, and toothpowder is infinitely more important than gunpowder.
>
> I ask in all seriousness, are eye-glasses in fiction really so incompatible with romance?
>
> Music may be truly described as the most offensive of the fine arts. Music, as it is taught, is not so much a fine art as a bad habit.
>
> "Artistic temperament!" repeated the editor. "There is no such thing. It is only another name for d—d bad manners and a swelled head."
>
> Even shop walkers and butlers and parlor maids, though undoubtedly very important, should think of Bismarck and not be so dreadfully haughty!
>
> "Most men are stupid—I don't mean their working brains, their bread-and-butter brains, but their society brains. They swallow anything you tell them. They originate everything in this blessed world—but conversation."
>
> Upon my word, I have come to the conclusion that a certain measure of soft soap is not only a social necessity, it is more, it is a social duty, only one would like to offer a plea, just a little plea, for a fair division of labor. It is so hard always to say delightful things, especially if you don't mean them! It is being a thirsty Ganymede at the feast of the gods.

The volume is delightful, and contains many things to laugh over—and afterward to think over seriously.

What Some Authors Are Doing.

Dr. Henry van Dyke's lectures this month at Johns Hopkins University will be on "The Service of Poetry." They will form the 1906 Percy Turnbull Memorial Lectures on Poetry, founded in 1889 by Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Turnbull of Baltimore in memory of their son. Former lecturers have been E. C. Stedman, Prof. R. C. Jebb, Prof. Charles Eliot Norton, M. Ferdinand Brunetière, and others.

Prof. George Edward Woodberry, author of "The Torch," "Swinburne," &c., has been spending the Winter in Tunis and making excursions into the Sahara.

Dr. K. Askawa, author of "The Russo-Japanese Conflict," is the first Japanese to become a member of the Yale University Faculty, for he is to take charge of the department of Asiatic history. At present he is in Japan collecting a library of Japanese works that will be of use to his department. He will begin teaching in the Fall.

Perceval Gibbon is another writer who developed his literary turn of mind while serving before the mast. When a boy he was apprenticed as a cadet on a merchant vessel. He was at sea two or three years and had many adventures and saw many parts of the globe. His last ship was burned and he narrowly escaped with his life.

Dr. Richard Burton having completed his lecture tour in the East will take an extended trip through the South, where, in addition to his lectures, he will give readings from his new Biblical play, "Rahab," which the Holts will issue in a few days. Rahab is shown as an impetuous Oriental beauty in whom the bonds of patriotism and filial devotion are strong, in spite of her waywardness, while she is also influenced by the growing belief in the God of Israel.

Francis W. Halsey is editing the journal of Richard Smith of Burlington, N. J., "A Tour of Four Great Rivers: The Hudson, Mohawk, Susquehanna, and Delaware, in 1769," which is to appear with the imprint of Charles Scribner's Sons. He has written for the volume a brief history of "Pioneer Settlement," as well as an account of Smith's life.

Apropos of the centenary of the birth of Elizabeth Barrett Browning on March 6, the report comes of a movement to place a National memorial to her in Westminster Abbey. Among the many editions of her works is a one-volume edition by Harriet Waters Preston, which Houghton, Mifflin & Co. publish.

Present Day Political Leaders.

The volume by Charles Willis Thompson on "Party Leaders of the Time," which the G. W. Dillingham Company has in press, will appear March 23. The book consists of pen portraits and studies of character of some of the interesting personalities of the "Roosevelt period" of American history. The first part of the volume gives some "Aspects of Roosevelt. Among the "Senate Portraits" are those of Hale, J. C. Spooner, Hoar, Platt, Hanna, Gorman, and others. Those "Seen in the House" include "Uncle Joe," Williams, Tawney, W. A. Smith, Littlefield, Bourke Cockran, Hearst, &c. At "The Other End of the Avenue"—in the White House—are the late John Hay, Secretary Root, Taft, Knox, Count Cassini, Wynne, Dunnell, and two or three other men, while "Out in the Field" may be seen Bryan, "the Fighter," Weaver and Durham, "A ring smasher and a boss," Gov. Higgins and Woodruff, the "boss of Brooklyn." There are 32 pictures in the book. The author is the Washington correspondent of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

The American Nation, Vol. XIII.

Volume XIII. of "The American Nation," the Harper's large undertaking in the history of the United States, is announced for March 15. The title is "The Rise of American Nationality," and the author is Kendric Charles Babcock, Ph. D., who happens at the moment to be President of the University of Arizona. He has written on historical subjects for The Atlantic Monthly and The Forum. The volume deals with the war of 1812, and discusses the causes of that appeal to arms and the differences of opinion which preceded it, especially the most conspicuous manifestation of those differences, the Hartford Convention. Daniel Webster serves as frontispiece, and the field of view includes, naturally, the beginning of the National banking system, the tariff, and internal improvements.

Arnold's "Merope."

Prof. J. Churton Collins has edited for the Oxford University Press Matthew Arnold's "Merope," to which is appended the Electra of Sophocles, translated by Mr. R. Whitelaw. In this volume, which will be ready immediately, an attempt is made to introduce and to bring home to modern readers who are not Greek scholars Attic tragedy in its most perfect form. If the book is favorably received it is intended to follow it with a series of small volumes, each containing some leading Greek tragedy in an acknowledged masterpiece of translation, edited in the same manner.

Caricatures by Caruso.

Next week Signor Caruso, who has made himself famous as a tenor, will disclose another side of his nature, and, with "The Caruso Book,' (Robert Grier Cooke, Incorporated,) will show himself to be a caricaturist as good as many a man who gets "big pay" from a newspaper for his cartoons. The new book will contain nearly 200 hand-colored caricatures of people in and of the Metropolitan Opera House—a rich field for fun, which Signor Caruso, as one of the cultivators, has been able to exploit to his heart's content. Each copy is autographed by the artist.

Mrs. Sill's Poems.

A volume of poems by Louise Morgan Sill will be published early in April. The poems are partly new, partly reproductions of what the author has already published in Harper's Magazine and The North American Review. The title is "In Sun or Shade."

The Unforgettable Book.

We did not publish "The Jungle" by Upton Sinclair until we were convinced that the book was true in every material particular.

Its publication has aroused a storm of criticism—of praise and abuse, but practically all agree that it is a great piece of realistic writing. Since this realism is truth and since these terrible conditions do exist in Chicago—then the book assumes a two-fold importance and provides sufficient grounds.

The first edition of ten thousand copies is already sold out and a simultaneous publication was made in Canada, Australia and England.

At all bookstores, $1.50.

"Flashlights in the Jungle" by C. G. Schillings (the authorized edition) continues to hold first place as the most marvellous book of photographs of Wild Animals taken in the heart of the African Jungle.

No library can afford to be without the authorized and complete edition of this valuable book. (Net $3.80. Postage 38c. Sold in England at $6.00 net.)

Some Piquant Remarks About Amateur Critics and the Technique of Poetry.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

I WAS glad to see in your issue of March 3 that "W. J. R.," Cambridge, (who is, of course, Prof. W. J. Rolfe,) comes to my defense for using the long vowel in the last syllable of "Proserpine" in my sonnet "When I Am Dead" in the January Century.

If the amateur critics who air their views about verse technique in THE NEW YORK TIMES BOOK REVIEW would spend as many years in the study of rhythm and language as have been spent by the poets they criticise, we should not have such letters as that one printed a few weeks ago (I have forgotten the writer's name) which criticises William Watson for using an extra metrical syllable in one of his sonnets. Truly "a little knowledge is a dangerous thing."

I often marvel at the self-complacent ignorance with which many estimable persons approach the subject of verse technique. Do not these people know that verse has a technique as complicated as that of music? Do they fancy that the possibilities of iambic pentameter, for instance, are limited to five metrical feet, each consisting of one unstressed and one stressed syllable, in regular order? Evidently they do. But have they ever studied Shakespeare, or Milton, or Wordsworth, or Coleridge, or Shelley, or even Tennyson? Or, more important still, have they ever studied the stress and time values of the English language? The complexity of stress in English is what makes our language the most perfect medium in the modern world for rhythmical expression. These rhythmical possibilities of English, these complexities in the combination of stress and time, are the daily study of poets, year after year. Yet these little critics verily "rush in where angels fear to tread."

If it were not so pathetic it would be laughable to think of that uninstructed person (whose name I do not remember) presuming to criticise a master technician like William Watson for his use of those variations of the iambic form which not only have been used by all English poets, but which are sought after and studied as a musician studies harmonies.

I should not have burdened your columns with a defense of myself for using the English form of "Proserpine," the legitimacy of such use being too obvious. But I think it is time that some one should protest against the misleading amateur criticism of verse technique which often appears in your columns. It does no harm to the poets, but it helps to foster in the minds of the uninstructed an idea that regularly recurrent stress is a rhythmical beauty, whereas it is really a rhythmical nightmare, as every verse technician knows.

I would suggest that those who wish to acquire some little knowledge of this subject (to master it would require a lifetime) should begin with the sonnets of Shakespeare. They are more conventional in technique than the verse of his plays, therefore I suggest them for beginners. And if any one of your readers cares seriously to undertake this study of verse technique, I know of no one book which contains more valuable hints than Prof. Liddell's "An Introduction to the Study of Poetry." It is not easy reading, nor is it a book for beginners; but after a few months' study of prosody almost any one with an ear for rhythm should be able to follow the sense of it. I do not wish to be understood as unqualifiedly advocating Prof. Liddell's plea for changing our symbols of metrical notation, but I am sure almost any student with the requisite foreknowledge of prosody will find this book of immense value.

I would not recommend Sydney Lanier's "The Science of English Verse" to any but advanced students, as his musical theory may, I think, prove misleading to any but an expert when applied to a language like ours which has not a definite quantitative measurement.

Henry Giles.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

It is very gratifying to read in your Saturday issue a note of appreciation signed "Robert Datus" in regard to the Rev. Henry Giles.

It is many years since he died, but I have never seen any mention of his work. Yet we hear so much about true worth never failing of recognition! In addition to "Illustrations of Genius" Mr. Giles wrote "Human Life in Shakespeare." It was originally written as a series of lectures which he delivered in many places in and about Boston. Nothing so fine has been written by any other American author, especially the chapters on "Man and Woman in Shakespeare" and "The Comic and Tragic Power of Shakespeare."

In Henry Giles's wonderfully appreciative writing on the "Women of Shakespeare" one is filled with the conviction that the keen intuition he displayed was due very much to the marvelous love and devotion of his wife. That love was a great romance, and Mrs. Giles must have been a most noble and unselfish woman. No other would have married a man whose fine spirit was incased in such a misshapen body.

But love is blind, but with the fleshy eye,
That so its inner sight may be more clear.

If any other American has written anything on Shakespeare comparable to these essays in the last thirty years I have not heard of it. If Houghton, Mifflin & Co., the successors of Ticknor & Fields, would publish a new edition of his works, with some notice of his life, they would confer a great boon upon Henry Giles's admirers.

Froude and His Critics.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

I was very glad to read Mr. Bronson's pleasant note on the Froude and Brandes controversy, for it is rather tiresome to note the reliance placed by certain readers upon the criticisms of Froude as a historian. Andrew Lang is an entertaining essayist on a variety of subjects, with some merits as a historian; but criticism is largely his stock in trade, and he is ever on the alert to arouse attention by an attack on the accuracy of others. When his own mistakes and errors in his "History of Scotland," &c., are pointed out he is much perturbed and less interested. But there are one or two things we Americans should consider—First, that England is a country of very bitter partisanship and cliques, where in science and art and philosophy the most outrageous attacks are made on individuals and their writings and where prejudice and ill-feeling are carried to an astonishing length—e. g., the attacks on Turner and Ruskin, the controversies of Huxley-Darwin, &c.; the bitter and personal criticisms made on Kingsley for his novels, especially "Hypatia"; the intensity of the Gladstone opposition, where a neighboring Squire forbade the tolling of a church bell on the statesman's death. Note, also, the long and weary fight Carlyle had to make both for recognition and to get a hearing for his "Cromwell." Any new view that disturbs the prevailing opinions or encroaches on the claims of a school in literature is attacked with all the intensity and some of the venom of the old Edinburgh Review. On this side of the water we have less of such prejudice and can judge more clearly, and we care less for what such a man as Freeman says—a man confessedly a boor in personal life and manner—than for what is the impression made by a history. When Froude put his copies of Spanish documents in the British Museum and challenged Freeman or any one to show a single essential error he spiked Freeman's guns. For it is of little moment that a sharp-eyed critic discovers a misspelled name or an omitted clause here or there. Froude's remarkable originality of research puts Freeman's history, based on the quotation of previous authorities, into a lower grade.

Second—This question is to be settled, and has been settled, by the fact that not only has Froude given us a profoundly interesting and stimulating narrative; but that in all its main outlines and impressions and conclusions it is accurate and true. Of course, he will always have his enemies, because there are those who attach so much personal importance to his description of Mary of Scotland, to Henry, to the Reformation and the attitude of Rome. Neither Gibbon, Macaulay, nor Green have escaped the charge of bias and error, and it is not to be expected that Froude shall have no detractors. The only chroniclers upon whose accuracy of quotation or view no criticism is made are those which are rarely read, scarcely known, and have produced no impression. It is to the credit of Lord Salisbury and Oxford that they at last came to honor Froude and recognize not only his genius but his honesty of character and the value of his great history.

That West Point Chain.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

In the interest of historical accuracy, I should like an opportunity to correct one statement in your otherwise excellent REVIEW, published Feb. 24. Your reviewer says: "In 1775 two of the thirteen frigates authorized by the Continental Congress were built by Poughkeepsie men; they never got to sea, however, Mr. Platt notes mournfully, and were set on fire to avoid capture when the British captured Fort Montgomery and broke the chain at West Point."

The persistence of this West Point chain tradition is remarkable, and all efforts to counteract it seem to be futile. I was particularly careful to explain (Page 41) that West Point was not fortified in 1777, when the British made their raid up the river, and that the chain stretched across the river, and broken by the British, was at Fort Montgomery, guarding the lower entrance to the Highlands. This chain had in part been used at the foot of Lake Champlain, in a similar effort to keep British vessels back, and had then been sent down to Poughkeepsie, where it was pieced out by the forging of additional links, so as to reach across the river at Fort Montgomery.

I also undertook to explain (Page 43) how West Point came to be fortified in 1778-9, as a better location than Fort Montgomery, and added that a second chain was made under contract by the Sterling Iron Works of Orange County, and stretched across the river opposite the new fort. This second, or West Point, chain was never broken by the British, who never again ascended the river beyond the lower Highlands.

An interesting historical monograph might be written about the curious fascination of our Revolutionary ancestors for great iron chains as a means of obstructing navigation. So far as I have been able to ascertain, these chains never were of the slightest service, and there is plenty of evidence in the Revolutionary correspondence that they not only cost a good deal of money, but gave continual trouble, breaking occasionally from their own weight. Where did the idea of their efficiency come from? Were they used elsewhere than on the Hudson and on Lake Champlain?

The Vanity of Mankind.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

It is pleasant to think that THE NEW YORK TIMES BOOK REVIEW accepts the true principle of the open door, and admits to its pages without metes and bounds the consideration of subjects that are difficult to classify. The number of Feb. 24 contains a clear and discriminating criticism of the relative merits of Haeckel and Lodge inviting further reflection upon the possibility of inaugurating some method that will be more in line with sound and logical reasoning. It seems to me that there should be in the interests of civilization an acknowledgment that destructive and constructive theories should bear some relation to each other; that the moral status of the community may not be impaired by materialism on the one side or puerile credulity on the other.

And this serious menace may be averted by confirmation of statements through a more thorough investigation and stern determination to take but one step at a time instead of audaciously generalizing upon some weak and improved hypothesis.

It seems to me that the principal obstacle to the mental and religious advance of the human race lies in the excessive vanity of mankind. It is almost impossible to divest him of the idea that the universe was created for him and that outside of him and his environment but little is worthy of consideration. Aesop's fly upon the chariot wheel is an admirable presentation of the condition.

As illustrating this phase one may often read that other worlds cannot be inhabited because the conditions existing in them are such as would not admit of a place for man. Those who advanced this idle speculation do not seem to entertain the idea that if such worlds are not adapted to man as we know him man may be adapted to the conditions there, for all sciences relating to man teach the plasticity of man, even in such a limited environment as he now exists in. As there is no royal road to learning so there are no short cuts to truth.

It appears to me that if man would enlarge his horizon and entertain the idea that all matter is living and sensitive, he would travel far on the road to concordance with theories and systems that now appear adverse, but yet contain some element of truth.

Exception may be taken to the term sensitive because of the apparent impossibility of confirming such speculation and because it may appear to compromise the pompous dignity of man, but cannot the silly masses comfort themselves with more titles, more automobiles, more wealth, and the res angusta domi? As for the thoughtful people the human comedy is ample compensation.

By entertaining the idea that all matter is sensitive we would be placed in better relation to the objects around us—the supercilious contempt with which even otherwise intelligent people regard things not concerning themselves would yield to the general consensus that, as Napoleon said, "there are no small things." One would think that associated as man has been for centuries with what we (is it facetiously?) term the lower animals, he would be intimately acquainted with them, but it is only necessary to read Burroughs, Jack London, and others to perceive the shallowness of such attainable knowledge.

The "Longworth" Rose

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

M. E. C. in your number for March 3, 1906, is mistaken in respect to what the writer called the "Longworth rose." The rose in question was not the result of hybridization, nor had it any relation thereto. It was what to botanists is known as a "sport." It came from China, and was fully described in the Flore des Serres of Ghent, in Belgium. It is a new variety of the China rose, and in the books is called Rosea viridiflora, Dipp.

In this case the petals were "sported" into small green, narrow leaves. The plant can be bought from all extensive growers of rare plants. It has no value save as a curiosity. The ignorance in a newspaper writer of Cincinnati as to what the plant was caused him to credit it and name it for Nicholas Longworth, who had bought the plant and who grew it as a curiosity, as I have for fifty years.

Miss Driscoll and the Alamo.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

The following statement was made in the publisher's notice of "In the Shadows of the Alamo," by Miss Clara Driscoll: "The Alamo, which furnishes the forthcoming book with part of its title, will be remembered as the historic building which Miss Driscoll purchased and presented to Texas." I wish to correct this statement. The Alamo building, or church, has been the property of the State for many years, and with the purchase of it Miss Driscoll had nothing to do. Lately, however, the grounds about the Alamo were to be sold, and Miss Driscoll very generously advanced enough money to the Daughters of the Republic of Texas to hold the property until they could raise the full amount, $75,000. The Daughters of the Republic raised $10,000, then appealed to the State for the rest. This appeal was promptly responded to, and on Jan. 26, 1905, the Governor of Texas signed the bill which appropriated $65,000 for the purchase of the property. Miss Driscoll, I am told, gave generously toward the amount raised by the society, but the State of Texas purchased the property, and I think it is only due to the State to give her the credit of it.

The Daughters of the Republic of Texas is a society of women lineally descended from the men and women who freed Texas from Mexican rule. Its members are doing in Texas what the Daughters of the American Revolution are doing in the older States. It was through their efforts that the State purchased the field where the battle of San Jacinto was fought, and the purchase of the mission of the Alamo was also the result of their influence.

The Tale of a Quick Translation.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

In the interests of accuracy and as a bit of American literary history not without value, allow me to inform Mr. E. L. Didier, and incidentally your readers, that his account last week of Dr. Palmer's extraordinary feat of translation is quite astray from the facts. Mr. Didier is indeed right in emphasizing Dr. Palmer's gifts, for he was a remarkable man in what he did and was; but why load him down with impossible feats? It wasn't "La Femme" which was translated, it wasn't done in two days, nor done by Dr. Palmer.

The latter was then reader for Appleton, and to that firm came by mail (or was brought) the only copy in this country of Michelet's "L'Amour," a book that had created a sensation in France No other copy could arrive for a week or so—this was in the early sixties—and the translation must be done within those few days to secure the first sale. Dr. Palmer sent for Frank Wood, who, quite a young man, died shortly after, just as he was beginning a seemingly brilliant career, a parallel case to his intimate friend George Arnold. Wood was under the guidance of N. P. Willis, who at that time was at the end of his conspicuous literary accomplishment. Wood tore the book in half and gave one portion of it to Benjamin E. Martin, a boy freshman in the Free Academy—now the College of the City of New York—and known today as a veteran literary man, whose admirable book on Paris, written in collaboration with Mrs. Martin, has placed all lovers of literature and of the French capital under obligations to him. Both these youths had the unusual gift of rendering the spirit of the French author and a love of hard work. When the manuscript went to Dr. Palmer in a few days he sent it to the printer, with only a few verbal changes, and it was put forth under his name, that of a medical man being considered safe in those gentler days. He never claimed the work as his, however, in any other way. The great merit of this translation becomes the more remarkable in the light of these facts, for which, I may add, my authority is beyond question.

An All-Essay Magazine.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

One of your correspondents has suggested an "All-Essay Magazine," and wishes the views of other readers of THE NEW YORK TIMES BOOK REVIEW on this subject. It seems as if such a journal might be made a success in this age of the world, and the earlier times of Addison, Steele, Johnson, and other serious pens might be renewed in this twentieth century with great benefit to thoughtful people. There is too much of the telegraphic style of literature abroad, and a tendency in this hurrying age to do careless, hurrying work. The great masters of literature are set aside and false standards set up as models. The masters are even scoffed at and their books relegated to some neglected corner of the library shelf. In fact, we are in danger of absorbing our mental food from pictorial sheets, flashing with head lines, which, like headlights on the engine, come rushing over and through the literary pastures, scattering right and left the ruminating herd that find their food in quiet haunts.

The "All-Essay Magazine" seems in its conception a most hopeful sign, and if such men as Mr. Bliss Carman and other noted essayists should take hold of the enterprise, contributing of their store of high, serious thoughts, such a magazine would no doubt be a success. But to insure the practical working of such a scheme there might need to be some idea of the number of people who would be willing to give their names as first year subscribers, also some moneyed individuals who would be willing to become sponsors for the new enterprise, at least for the period of its infancy. As years passed it might not need artificial support, but in any literary enterprise one might have to consider not only the deeper mind of the public in its intensities, but also its more trivial, in its peculiarities; its fads and foibles as well as its outward professions of interest in any new departure, and take a direct, open-eyed course between all the conflicting interests.

AMERICAN SPELLING.

A Little Dispute as to Orthographical Proprieties Engendered by "K. H. R.'s" Protest.

I.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

ONE is never too old nor too young to learn, it appears. "K. H. R.," in THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW OF BOOKS, has added to our knowledge—at best a limited article. We have discovered what in our innocence and ignorance we did not suspect—there is an American spelling, as well as American slang and American "push," and an American "oh, we know how to do things in this free country" philosophy. The American courtesy seems to be lost sight of by "K. H. R." But perhaps the Scotch blood, diluted, to be sure, since Nov. 20, 1649, may have suddenly bubbled up and overflowed the amenity. The assertion that "K. H. R." "hates the English" with his or her "whole heart" is sad, but convincing. We fear the entire English Nation—including the colonies—will feel despondent when the emphatic statement becomes known. We had supposed that, as a people, we spoke the English language. But we were mistaken, apparently. Get thee behind me, England, with all thy usages, and don't ever try to impose your little upstart language and spelling and ways upon this much more important country!

Ah, well, we shall understand hereafter how to spell! We foolishly thought that a chemist was more than a mere druggist. The dictionary we possess—alas! an English one, and so not to be trusted—gives the definition as "a professor of chemistry," as well as a dealer in drugs—the druggist merely the latter. But what am I to Hecuba or Hecuba to me? All honor to the one author who "had the courage to use American spelling throughout"! May we inquire his name, so that we may read and be enlightened? Could it possibly be Mr. Dooley or Josh Billings? We only recognize American orthography when it drops the superfluous letter that "prejudice" compels the English to use. We wonder what word, with a similar meaning and American spelling, causes "K. H. R." to "hate the English" so vigorously! Lest our own origin be confounded with that of the detested Albion, since we cannot date our ancestry from such recent English descent as Nov. 20, 1649, we must perforce proclaim ourself as purely American. F. W. H.

Tarrytown, N. Y., March 8, 1906.

II.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

I notice a feverish letter from "K. H. R." on the matter of the spelling of the title of "The Cherry Ribband." Has "K. H. R." looked inside the covers of Mr. Crockett's book? A reader of perception would appreciate the suitability of such archaic (not modern English) spelling to the nature and period of the story. What is this so-called "American spelling" but a half-baked attempt at phonetic rendering, which, carried to a logical end, would be of use, but which in its present state is a farce? "K. H. R.'s" explosive hatred of the English, it seems to me, is beside the question anyway.

New York, March 9, 1906. YANKEE.

III.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

K. H. D. is evidently ignorant of the subject he undertakes to write about. In the first place, let me inform him, it is the English language that he is finding fault with—the same that is spoken and taught more generally than any other language. He refers to the word "Ribband." The spelling is obsolete at the present time, as are many other words very differently spelled than they were in Shakespeare's time. It is not that American spelling is improving, but that the English language is progressive, keeping up with the times, as it were. If K. H. R. will consult his dictionary he will find out the difference between chemist and druggist. The latter is engaged in buying and selling drugs, but the chemist studies the natures of different inanimate bodies. Profs. Faraday, Liebig and others would hardly be called druggists; they were chemists—two entirely different professions, although allied. If K. H. R. is, as he states, a Scotch Englishman, he is indeed an anomaly. He says he hates England and the English; that he is not a Fenian. But, my friend, "Thy speech betrayeth thee." A true Scotch Englishman is proud of his descent, and has every reason to be. I am English, although I have been many years in America, and can truly say I love my own dear little land with a love that permeates every fibre of my being, and am proud of her greatness among nations, and thankful to be able to subscribe myself

Home Songs.

A collection of songs that should be popular is "The Most Popular Home Songs," published by Hinds, Noble & Eldridge. The selection is good; most of the ascriptions of authorship and musical composition are sadly incorrect, however.

◆

MOCK BYRONIC.

MAID OF ATHENS" (Boston: Little, Brown & Co.,) is a story which seeks to borrow glamour from the romantic-satanic Byronic star. The author is Miss Lafayette McLaws, a native of Georgia, who has written other novels, one of which was called "Jezebel." In spite of a certain familiarity—proved by quotation in the text—with the Byronic muse, especially the lyric which gives the present story its name, it cannot be said that Miss McLaws reflects much of the Byronic heat and light, while her Oriental atmosphere is distinctly of a kind never made in the East. That is the more pity, because most of the scenes lie in the cities of Constantinople and Athens—some of them in the very harem of the Grand Turk. Briefly, this is the tale: Count Riga of Athens died for Greece and Countess Riga slew herself to avoid falling into Turkish hands. The lady Thyrza Riga, their daughter, was brought up in the house of a renegade uncle, secretary to the Grand Vizier in Constantinople, grew to be a beautiful girl there, and became the familiar of the young Princesses of the Sultan's house. Moreover, she learned English and French from a young Frenchman in her uncle's employ. Then came a blue-eyed Englishman that way—his name was Byron. He made his song of The Maid of Athens for her sake, sang it to her as (disguised as a slave) he rowed her "caique" upon the Bosphorus, won her love and sought her hand. But a wily Turk, a rival suitor, spoiled it all; he forged letters, and a convent completed the tragedy. The Byron of the story is a mush of sentiment and excellent intentions—weak, but not wicked, and there's a good deal of press agent work for patriotic Greece, the ancient Greek dramatists, and the glories of the Parthenon, none of it founded upon much knowledge. The ending is dramatically ghostly and sentimental.

IN FURTHER ARDENNE. A Study of the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg. By the Rev. T. H. Passmore. With illustrations and map. One volume. Pp. xiv.-316. 8vo, cloth. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. $2.50.

MR. PASSMORE may not rank as an explorer like Stanley or Nansen; yet he has discovered for us a part of Europe—of all continents, Europe!—which until now has been almost unknown to English people, and quite unknown to Americans. He writes of the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg. Who has been there? Who knows where it is? Editors, thanks to the Emperor William's reported intention to seize it, have to keep their eye on it, and by the aid of the index find it on the map and see why it is important. But they cannot be said to know anything about the place, except that it exists, and is worth fighting for, perhaps. Mr. Passmore says of Luxembourg: "Some of my friends think it is a railway station in Paris. * * * Perhaps there may be Londoners who think Waterloo is a terminus and nothing more." As a fact, the author has done for the Grand Duchy what Stanley did for Darkest Africa—turned on the light.

This book is not a guide-book; its author will not have it taken for one. He travels around as he chooses, his book skipping "from place to place with confusing haphazardness. It speaks rudely of cherished tourist ideas. It revels in things that any self-respecting guide-book would pass over in silent contempt. It is neither instructive nor improving. Above all, it assumes in the reader legs and heart for walking, a love of unspoilt, uncrowded sweet earth-corners, an open mind about other people's religious notions, and even the capacity to think a little occasionally in a dreamy way." And it is all through a charming book.

Reading it, one instinctively makes up his mind that he will visit Luxembourg when next he goes abroad; he will go to Diekirch, and stay at M. Nelles's hotel, and fish for trout in the Sure, where, Mr. Passmore says, "you had better wear waders." This is no guide-book; it is far better—a book to read, and read again, and then to follow not like the blind Baedekerite, but as one follows Walton. Mr. Passmore is certainly likely, only too likely, to be the creator of a new Luxembourg, a Luxembourg of ten-day trippers, of Dr. Lunn's tourists; meanwhile, having read the book, one had better hasten and see the Grand Duchy before the other travelers arrive.

HARPERS BOOKS

HARPER'S MAGAZINE for March, in addition to eight complete short stories and Margaret Deland's great novel, contains authoritative articles on science, adventure, literature, nature, travel, etc., etc. It prints nothing of merely temporary or "timely" interest, and nothing controversial.

The Genius

A novel of stirring plot by Margaret Potter, and yet a striking presentation of the artistic temperament in its most interesting phases. The story is based upon the life of a famous Russian composer—the sensitive, gifted son of a powerful, iron-handed government official. His career is a strange and deeply moving tale of shifting fortunes, dramatic episodes and final artistic triumphs.

Miss Primose

The freshness and tender simplicity of Roy Rolfe Gilson's books have won for him a large circle of readers. Mr. Gilson interprets child life with rare insight, and his portrayal of little Bertram has the same simplicity and charm that have made his former books so popular. The pictures of village life are exquisitely shaded, and Miss Primrose's romance adds a touch of sentiment and humor to a story of delightful originality.

MARK TWAIN'S Library of Humor

The initial volume, Men and Things, is a veritable encyclopaedia of humor, containing the best work of such prominent humorists as George Ade, John Kendrick Bangs, "Mr Dooley," Artemus Ward, Eugene Field, Thomas Bailey Aldrich, Bill Nye, etc., etc., and Mark Twain himself. That the great editor knows what is best in humor and how to select it goes without saying. Men and Things is the perfection of fun. Its distinguished editor and notable contibutors make it THE humorous book of the year.

HARPER & BROTHERS.

AUTHOR AND CRITIC.

Some Thoughts Inspired by Alice Brown's Story in the March Number of Harper's Magazine.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

ONE wonders if after reading the March number of Harper's it may not come over some of the other readers of THE NEW YORK TIMES BOOK REVIEW that two ideas may or may not impress one from Alice Brown's admirably illustrated story. The first is that it may be after all that Mr. H. M. Alden, the editor of Harper's Monthly, is only too well founded in his belief that the subtlety of our modern life makes the literature of to-day, with its Alice Brown and Ellery Channing, perhaps more of a really great thing than the older forms, which, as memory hangs heavily over us, we so nicely say, as we say also of the old oaken bucket as having of water the purest and clearest, are so much more impregnated with life as it is, so much nearer the human essence, so much more saturated with the milk of human kindness than any they now on tireless presses produce in this present day and hour. Secondly, one feels one can trace out in the hot and bitter suffering of this story enough of facts and burning sands of fancy to form a vision of comparison which may only be a mirage of enthusiasm, or again may be a great human oasis in the desert of our daily life as regards a man we know. Whether the first or second ideas are each or both figments of a nether world remains, as most things do, a matter of relativity, but all the same there comes as one reads this story a queer sense that Alice Brown has produced something, whether she so meant it or not, that fits in with a question lately discussed as perhaps nothing else could have done. Fits in one can say with a coming together that makes the word "fit" rather melt into the word harmony, and as well makes one cry out with a sharp, quickened accent: "Did she mean it for him or did she just so write as for a page out of the common way she understands so well?" It was only yesterday—wasn't it?—that a turmoil raged concerning the right and might of our Henry James plunged into the opaque waters of his "Golden Bowl." Men and women howled within the carved cauldron the jargon song of "The Two and Seventy Jarring Sects." Some of us may have said this and some that, but the sum and total of it all would have been that had the great novelist, by some awkward chance in a railroad station, read it while filling up the lapsed schedule of a belated train, he could only have left for either side or both a sorrow, which, to be blatant, to be blasphemous, could be translated into words only as, "Forgive them, they know not what they do."

But much as he might so feel this embarrassing pity, to put it stronger, even a cynical repugnance, and as much as from time to time others less qualified rise in their cocksure wrath and disgust to say in their answering epistles with caustic rejoinders how none but the great deserve to throw flowers at the elect, still it comes as it always will come, and as Alice Brown makes it come in this story, the fact that it really does not defame the temple for the poor dying, albeit faithful, worms, with their glistening, gaudy, flashing backs, to trail in slovenly words over the pillars placed in relief on the great literary shrine of those to whom heaven has given ten talents. We are led to believe in this story that Maynard was a great writer, somebody to whom, like James or Ibsen, a Huneker or a Jacobs or an Alden, alone could have in finality done justice. And since if it is true that individuality intelligibly stated is style, it must follow that a writer is greater than his critics, and therefore all that in reality remains for the encouragement of the very greatest is the veiled voice of the sympathetic multitude. She says in the story:

"Though a great author, he lacked the comfort of it."

"The world, too, was more his admirer than his friend. It had wearied of his persistent seclusion, his refusal to consider his work more awe-inspiring than that of the man who builds a bridge or digs a garden bed. He had weighed its platitudes and knew, he thought, how exactly its interest in his attentions shrank beside its vanity, in exploiting him. He would have none of it; and so, having for twenty years advertised himself as a recluse, the world had grown tired and had run after rushlights that were at least willing to burn."

"He seemed to be the victim of some great reaction unguessed in its inexorable poise and swing until to-day * * * and his work, mysteriously his through some divine decree, had also fled away and left him poor."

And later:

"He took an inventory of what was left him. There was very little. The house where the doors had closed in upon him he had furnished himself, and he had a dull sense he should get no comfort out of it. And outside life was going on burgeoning and swelling."

But later in the story we have some movement in the dull green adverse waters, and out of the bitter, poignant saltiness a wealth of verdure is cast tangled, in whose meshes are striking bits of gorgeous coral, glistening shells, and brilliant-hued fish and golden jelly masses, as for instance:

"Maynard put out his hand and with a random choice took up a letter. It was a poor little letter in a feeble script. There was no signature, but it was a woman's hand, formed in country schools in olden days. * * * She wanted to express, though late, her gratitude for all he had given her. He laid down the letter. There was a blur before his eyes."

As the reader takes this in he may easily lie back in his chair, close his eyes, and before his shut lids there will come to him the tired, perhaps shabby figure of Louisa Brash, she of the Beldonald Holbein, who in the same magazine walked some five years ago. She surely could have written just such a letter to the man who so exquisitely brought out "that [as Alice Brown says] all created things held something precious."

And as the story unfolds we find:

"They were of all sorts, from the almost forgotten schoolmate separated from his fellow in the throng to the critic of a later day, but they were, as by amazing intention, in one key."

One closes one's eyes again, and one can see the writers of these letters to Maynard as characters of a noble band elsewhere given, as well as those who have spoken as the critics of a later day. One sees the penitent type of Waymarsh speaking in concern to Strether, and Mr. Loomis hiding his article in The Bookman, while Mrs. Bridgenorth talks in the hushed voice of "The Tone of Time" to Mary Tredick about him who so with sympathy painted the word picture of the man, in their own ways, they had loved, and who did it with the loving discernment that it would seem only women understand enough to appreciate. The story goes on to say, (as the doctor speaks,) "I never saw anything of the kind. It looks as if you had been not ignored, but hedged about because you were so precious a seed in a garden bed where there's no other seed exactly like it."

"In the beginning our mothers live for us. We're fed. Then we think we feed ourselves. We get arrogant, and it isn't until we stumble that we know how weak we are, and then we find—God, man! its fellowship."

"With their hands they bear us up—" "Maynard * * * was conscious of thoughts so comforting that they seemed like actual visitants—men and women who wished him well."

"When he had seemed to himself too poor a thing to be cast outside on the refuse heap of abortive life they had wrapped him in a mantle woven, they told him, by his own hands, and led him forth with paeans and rejoicing."

"It was a web of service, a harmony of multitudinous notes, and all mysteriously of the temple."

Therefore, for any novelist or any author it matters but little how high the temple to his name is reared as compared to the hands of the faithful who all in secret may look lovingly for his work. And while in this and that kindly disposed periodical it may seem absurd, nay, ridiculous, to see the hands of the faithful exposed, albeit not always clean and polished, not always of the degree called manicured, in the form of all too crudely written letters, yet, after all, it is the web of service, and some sew by lamplight in badly crowded rooms. Yet surely they are worthy

Shapes of all sorts and sizes, great and small,
That stood along the floor and by the wall,
And some loquacious vessels were; and some Listn'd, perhaps, but never talk'd at all.

And because everywhere and anywhere the shapes of all sizes great and small await with faithful hands, just so will Mr. James, too, like Maynard, some day write his beautiful book.

A New Hampshire Idyll.

THE SPIRIT OF THE PINES. By Margaret Morse. Pp. 158. 16mo. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.

"The Spirit of the Pines" is a graceful little idyll by a new writer. Strange to say, its opening holds its only dissonance, for the heroine's inhospitable impulse is quite out of harmony with her character.

In the solitude of the New Hampshire woods two lovers of nature find more and more points of affinity until all the world is glorified by

The light that never was on sea or land.

But the great White Terror has been present from the first, and the two souls are strong enough to heed its "Thou shalt renounce! Thou shalt renounce!"

Although a tragedy, the little romance is, upon the whole, far from tragic. The letters of the young people are as breezy as the mountain top. There are many touches of humor and of wholesome wisdom:

And so feelings, thoughts, and ideas are to you the realities of life, you say. The inevitable result of an introspective nature and an ample bank account, I answer. * * * If some one before you had not "added columns of figures" rather well you would now be in no position to ignore the practical side of life.

There is a gentle gibe at the unpractical sympathizers who are ready to "give 'absent treatment' to all the sufferers in Christendom," and many racy sayings are to be found in the unique correspondence between a patient upstairs and the dryad whom he watches on her daily walk into the pines.

RECENT POETRY.

Six Volumes of Verse of Varying Merit and Charm.*

THESE "Lamps," whether old or new, burn brightly at one altar. With the exception of the cantata, "By Gaza's Gate," they are simply love poems, but of love past the buoyancy of youth and somewhat within the shadow. Although the emotion is that of maturity, there is no lack of fervor in its expression, no lack, either, of rebellious regret.

The division entitled "A Forgotten Idyll," comprises a group of sonnets, all of them concerned with lovers condemned to live apart. Inevitably it invites comparison with other "sonnet sequences," and while neither so varied nor so polished as Rossetti's or the "Love Sonnets of Proteus," many of the individual sonnets are quite as beautiful both in sentiment and form as any but the very best of these. The introductory lines to the sequence are strongly reminiscent of Morris in the mood of "The Earthly Paradise"—the same long, full vowel sounds, the same intensity of sweetness, the same suggestion of inextinguishable sadness. In the succeeding poems, however, is repeated a certain note of moral vigor more definite than any struck by the "idle singer of an empty day" and akin to the sterner and nobler passion of Christina Rossetti's love poetry. We quote as typical the sonnet on renunciation:

I cannot live without thee; all my days
Lie desolate before me. Suns will glow
Unpitying, and the nights will darker grow,
And colder, while the hand of death delays.
This is the sordid parting of our ways,
Wherein each turns from pleasure, and the slow,
Sad step takes each from the other. Thou wilt go Back to thy home bewildered—in a maze.

Woven of love and duty; fond desire
Striving with honor, chilling thee with cold,
And burning all thy soul with raging fire—
Thus will it be till we are bent and old.
Yet we will conquer—Love that scorneth wrong
Has sung in our sad hearts its perfect song.

"The Marsh" of Mr. Bayard Boyesen is poetic both in feeling and expression, moving swiftly and easily in its dramatic form, but the symbolism is too pervasive and rather obscure and the setting is cumbersome for the matter. His facility in managing the blank verse and the sustained mood of exaltation, even though it is morbid exaltation, give promise of future performance of interest, however.

In "Lyrics of Love," by Charles R. Dinkins, there is little of the light-hearted gayety which we associate with the colored people, and none of the swinging melody to which their familiar songs have accustomed us. The tone throughout is quietly rather than ecstatically religious, and the songs of "secular" love are simple and unimpassioned. But they could hardly have been written by one of another race, and they are full of the spirit of patriotism and brotherly love. Certainly these verses from the "Invocation" which opens the volume may profitably be read by all of the various races which make up our countrymen:

O, teach us, Lord, in spite of strife,
  As one to live, as one to die;
Bound by the higher law of life—
  With Jonathan and David's tie:
United, let our interest prove
Divinest brotherhood of love!

Bid strife depart and warring cease;
  The bone of vile contention move;
Let all our fortresses be peace,
  And all our bulwarks, Lord, be love—
While harvests smile from plain and hill,
And all our humble wants fulfill.

Lord, make us one great nation, strong,
  Yet each his race distinction hold;
But one in love, in toil, in song,
  With Christ the Shepherd of the fold;
Our rulers bless, their hearts make wise
To keep Thine earthly paradise.

Miss Watson's rather fragmentary compilation should have something to suit every taste. The range is wide, from the Collect for Christmas Day, Milton's "Hymn on the Nativity," and the familiar carols, through byways of prose and verse to the recipe for the old "William the Conqueror Plum Pudding"—a sufficiently devious road, with now and then a mental bump which recalls the "thank you ma'ams" of country pilgrimages in the days of our fathers.

As a relief from the purely literary drama a return to the rhymed novel recently has been suggested. M. Dunton Sparrow's "Romance of the Civil War" is a not very energetic attempt in that direction. The simple tale is told in easily flowing verse, directly and unpretendingly, but it hardly can be called poetry. The adventures are those of a pair of young lovers brought together by the accidents of the war, and their appeal would be helped by a sweeter melody and a less hackneyed vocabulary.

The dozen or more love poems by Adah Louise Sutton, which borrow their title from Byron, aim, we may infer, to express an intensity of emotion rivaling his. This decidedly is not achieved, and there is throughout a suggestion of the traditional feminine attitude as these lines from "The Sanctuary" will indicate:

How shall I give if thou wilt not demand?
  Since giving is all my life, I pray thee ask;
  My life itself is thine; mine the dear task
To lay its treasure open to thy hand.

The traditional feminine attitude is undeniably fitted to the poetic point of view, and Miss Sutton has presented it gracefully in her book, which in appearance answers to Charles Lamb's definition of a "booklet." Its modest amount of text is filled out to rather imposing proportions by many illustrations, none of them good, and flower borders, some of which are mildly attractive.

A NEW ENGLAND STORY.

UNDER GUIDING STARS. A Massachusetts Story of the Century End. By Agnes Blake Poor. Pp. 324. 12mo. Cloth. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.25.

ONE may characterize "Under Guiding Stars" as a comfortable story, making moderate demands upon the reader's emotions, but sensible, shrewd, and not lacking in interest. There is rather too much description in proportion to the dialogue, and neither hero nor heroine is particularly attractive, just ordinary, limited, young people, whose affairs one languidly follows to the usual conclusion.

The centre of the stage is occupied, not by these lovers, but by the brother's wife, taken from behind a counter at "Manningham's," and, for a time, a thorn in the flesh to the well-bred relatives of her scapegrace husband. The author has done her best work in drawing this pair, and Bertha is both an original and a fine creation, a young person born to command, to win friends, and to make the best of circumstances, one of those large, rare natures which offer a refuge for frailties, and which do not know how to harbor resentments. The author makes her needlessly offensive in accepting the rule of her father-in-law's home, and does not seem to see what "a fighting matter" the deposition of the daughter of the house must needs have been. But, upon the whole, Miss Poor has succeeded in showing her Bertha just as great of heart and sound of head as she intended her to be.

Just why the novel should be entitled "Under Guiding Stars" is not easy to see. It is a wholesome, readable tale, but, despite the captions of the chapters, it does not suggest any special influence of the "lucida sidera."

A TALE OF HARROW.

THE HILL. A Romance of Friendship. By Horace A. Vachell. New York: Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.50.

A BRAVE little story this—brave in daring to enter the lists of schoolboy stories, where "Tom Brown at Rugby" forever wins out, and brave in daring to do without the usual interest of lovemaking. There is, indeed, but one girl so much as mentioned in these pages, and she peeps out only occasionally and in a casual way. Instead of missing the "eternal feminine," however, we find the fact really refreshing.

It is a brave and a capital idea, also, to call the tale "The Hill" and to connect a certain heroic death on a hill in the Far East with the inspiration gained on the beloved Harrow Hill.

It is not the hero, let us hasten to add, who wins this youthful fame fighting for his country. No, John Verney is left with a future of dogged, everyday heroism to get through with, but the hill patriot is our hero's friend, his David, and owed his bravery at the last, so his letter testifies, to the influence of that very friendship.

It is not surprising, when you have read the beginning, but it is novel to have the dramatic climax reached by so simple an undertaking as a bicycle ride to town and back. To tell why that was an escapade and done to save another's honor would be to give away secrets.

Suffice that no one who has any of the "old boy," which English term is far more telling than our alumnus, and no one who may expect ever to be a student in some school, whether at home or abroad, can fail to find a pleasure in this story.

Myriam Harry's "Conquest of Jerusalem" in English—A New Australian Novel.

WHATSOEVER else may be said of "The Conquest of Jerusalem" and "The Snare of Strength," to be published by Messrs. Herbert B. Turner & Co. next week, no one will call them commonplace. The former, Myriam Harry's novel, tells of a man who, going to Jerusalem with the intention of mastering its archaeology and thus intensifying the reality of Christianity for a doubting world, began by marrying a Protestant deaconess and ended by yielding to a mysterious obsession the source of which was a broken Moabitish idol. The wonderful old city with its history of alternate piety and wild idolatry is the real centre of the story.

⁂

"The Snare of Strength" is Australian and naught else; Australian in its glorification of the light and color and scent of the Australian land; its merciless description of the Australian rustic, ignorant to the core, speaking the speech of East London, incapable of thinking, the terror and danger of Australian politics; and Australian in the Gilbertian situations produced by colonial attempts to play the supposed fashionable London game of Tertium Quid according to supposed Mayfair rules. The author, Mr. Rodney Bedford, describes three typical men, all strong, all rejoicing in their strength, and they run their race with extraordinary vigor and leave the reader breathless, as was the way of the early Australian novels of the bushranging days. Modern worship of athletic has resuscitated the old type of wild rider and bold lover, but he has the modern touch of self-consciousness and knows himself for the man he is.

⁂

It is a bold man who dares to make predictions about the Far East to-day, and, as the Hon. John W. Foster has the caution of the true diplomatist, it is current historical criticism rather than prediction that one expects to find in his April Atlantic paper, "The Reshaping of the Far East." Among its companions in the magazine will be "Criminal Law Reform," by George W. Alger; "Railroad Securities as Investments," by A. D. Noyes; "Making Education Hit the Mark," by W. G. Parsons, whose views on metaphor seem liberal, and "The Testimony of Biology to Religion," by Dr. Caleb Williams Saleeby, an Edinburgh University man, now practicing medicine in London, and doing his best to arouse a medical conscience in the readers of The Chronicle by papers on medical subjects. His wife is the daughter of Mr. Wilfred Meynell and Mrs. Meynell, the poet, and therefore the niece of Lieut. Gen. Sir William Butler and the battle painter Lady Butler, all four authors, and it seems that he does not lack the encouragement of example to fulfill the modern Englishman's desire to go out and write something. As he is but 28 years of age, and is already the author of eight books, he may yet write a vast quantity.

⁂

The effect wrought upon private relations by the somewhat tardy public appearance of purity in American finance is the subject of "The District Attorney," a novel by Mr. William Sage, just added to the Spring list of Messrs. Little, Brown & Co. In it one is shown a father whose ideals are despised and hated by the son whom he has had educated solely that he may be their champion. The son not only refuses to enter his father's office, but, being made District Attorney, strongly fights against the measures of his father's associates, and discovers for himself what the power of money can effect.

⁂

The transfer of Mr. Henry Holt's "Calmire" and "Sturmsee" from a New York list to that of Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. is explained as the effect of Mr. Holt's recent Atlantic paper, and of the peculiar interest in the two books exhibited by Boston readers. Only the Boston Public Library has thus far reported "Sturmsee" as one of the books most frequently demanded, and if there be any demand for "Calmire" it is not because certain Boston religious papers did not endeavor to end its career, professing horror at the praise bestowed upon it by the daily press.

⁂

The "Bibliography of the Writings of Henry James" by Mr. Le Roy Phillips, to be printed in a limited edition, will include not only all editions of the author, but also his uncollected and anonymous writings, and will be carefully indexed. Inserted blank leaves will be provided for new titles, and, alas! only 250 copies are to be printed. This last detail, to use the exquisite word of Master Reginald Bazalgette, is "abbomanabel."

⁂

Mr. George Willis Cooke's "Bibliography of James Russell Lowell" will be limited to 530 copies, of which 500 will be sold, and it will be printed on but one side of the leaf, permitting the owner to add notes at will, and as there are already four biographies, the number of notes may well be very large.

⁂

The Rev. Dr. Charles Cuthbert Hall, President of Union Theological Seminary, has begun the delivery of the sixth course of William Belden Noble lectures at Harvard, taking for his subject, "The Attitude of Christ Toward Foreign Races and Religions." Considering the present attitude of the Chinese and the Japanese toward Christianity, not a few Christians would be very glad of some new light on this subject, beginning to suspect past error. WHO'S WHO IN SCIENCE

AMERICAN MEN OF SCIENCE. A Biographical Directory. Edited by J. McKeen Cattell. One volume. Pp. viii.-364. Canvas 4to. New York: The Science Press.

A "WHO'S WHO" with a limited field is Prof. J. McKeen Cattell's "American Men of Science," (New York: The Science Press.) It devotes itself to workers in the field of pure science almost wholly, though a few persons have been included who "are supposed to have advanced science by teaching, by administrative work, or by the preparation of textbooks and compilations." Except for these, however, the entries refer only to persons in North America who have carried on research work in the natural and exact sciences.

Despite this process of selection, the biographies of more than 4,000 persons are given in the book, both men and women. The biographies are strictly technical, no such personal facts as make "Who's Who in America," and more especially "Who's Who" so gossippy are included here; "Wer Ist's" alone is more businesslike in its notation of celebrities—and "Wer Ist's" is practically but a mass of abbreviations and dates.

This book was prepared by Dr. Cattell originally as the basis for a psychological study of scientific men; but it seems to have evolved into something of more general and immediate value, though its compiler intends still to use it for his psychologic study. Because of its original design, some thousand names are marked with asterisks; these are the names of the leading thousand students of science, chosen by a jury of ten. It is interesting and enlightening to see who and where these thousand great men are. We think the book likely to be of very great value to readers who think.

Appleton's Booklovers Magazine.

Early numbers of Appleton's Booklovers Magazine will contain the results of the travels of Walter Hale, the actor, artist, author, and motorist; Edward M. Conley, late Vice and Deputy Consul General in Mexico, and Broughton Brandenburg. Mr. Hale's contribution will describe the automobile trip he and E. W. Kemble, the artist, recently made from New York to Boston over the old Boston Post Road. "Our Mexican Investment" is the title of Mr. Conley's paper, which will show the commercial importance of the South American State to this country. And Mr. Brandenburg will describe "The Mystery of Ancient America"—the prehistoric remains in Southern Mexico and Yucatan. The articles will be illustrated.

Books in Demand.

The Circulating Department of the New York Public Library reports the following books most in demand during the week ending March 7: Adult Fiction—Miss Glasgow's "The Wheel of Life," Nicholson's "The House of a Thousand Candles," Hichens's "Garden of Allah." Juvenile Fiction—Barbour's "For the Honor of the School," Stratemeyer's "Under the Mikado's Flag," Pyle's "Robin Hood." Miscellaneous—"The Long Day," Bryce's "American Commonwealth," Roberts's "Red Fox."

◆

Melville Philips.

Melville Philips, who has been spending a few months on a Kansas ranch, writes to a friend in this city that he now feels "as hard as nails," and is putting the finishing touches to a novel entitled "An American," while his novelette, "A Full House: Being Three of a Kind and a Pair," is almost ready for the publishers.

◆

Van Dyke's Little Book.

Dr. Van Dyke's perennial "Story of the Other Wise Man," whose first appearance dates back ten years, with large yearly editions all through the interval since then, is about to be reprinted by the Harpers yet again. The new edition is announced as one of 20,000 copies.

Modern Humor.

The Carey-Stafford Company of 63 Fifth Avenue has received many advance orders for their "Modern Humor," five volumes, in cloth and edition de luxe bindings, which will be ready about March 15.

BARBARA WINSLOW, REBEL

By ELIZABETH ELLIS

Even the most critical of critics in the land have succumbed to the charm of this captivating heroine, and have written in her praise.

BARBARA WINSLOW is a book to be read—to be enjoyed—to be talked about.

The cover design, which is one of striking beauty, reflects with great accuracy the character of the story, and one may use it as a guide to the reading or the non-reading of the book.

"TO AUTHORS."—A successful playwright will undertake the dramatization of approved manuscript or published fiction on moderate and mutual terms. Address "Playwright," 392 Times, Times Square.

QUERIES.

To secure attention in this department every communication must be signed with the full name and address of the inquirer, which will not be published unless the inquirer so desires. Trivial questions will not be heeded. Queries will be answered in the order of their receipt, and as the number received weekly is very large, and the pressure upon our columns is always very great, inquirers must always be prepared to await their turn.

S. S. D., New York—I am anxious to identify the following characters in John Hill Burton's "The Book Hunter," chapter entitled "A Vision of Mighty Book Hunters": Archdeacon Meadow, Fitzpatrick Smart, Esq., Inchrule Brewer, Magnus Lucullus, Esq., The Vampire, also referred to as The Dragon. A copy of the first edition of Dr. Burton's book, to which I have access, has marginal notes in pencil, identifying some of the above, but the notes are almost illegible in one case and wholly so in another, so that the "identification" in these instances can hardly be called complete. For example, the name assigned to Archdeacon Meadow may be Wranefram; more probably it is something else. Inchrule Brewer is given as Richard Heber, and Magnus Lucullus as F. Huth. These two are no doubt correct. But who are the others?

"Archdeacon Meadow" is the Ven. Francis Wrangham, Archdeacon of Cleveland, Yorkshire, and later of the East Riding, from 1820 to his death in 1842; "Fitzpatrick Smart" was Charles Kirkpatrick Sharpe, (1781-1851;) "Inchrule Brewer" was Richard Heber, (1773-1833;) "Magnus Lucullus" was Henry Huth, (1815-1878,) and "Thomas Papaverius" was Thomas De Quincey. "The Vampire" and "the Dragon" are probably not identifiable—there was probably more than one person used as the original of this book collector. The description of the collector was distinctly libelous, so we doubt if there was any actual original for it. The lives of these persons in the Dictionary of National Biography will suggest how closely Burton described them. It is interesting to note that though Notes and Queries printed your question thirty years ago, it has never published any answer.

L. A. W., Brooklyn—1. Will you give a list of the "Harper's Story Books"? As I remember them there were two stories in each volume. Are they out of print? 2. Where can I find the poem which was in my old reader "The frost looked forth one still, clear night."

1. Harper's Story Books were by Jacob Abbott, and were 36 in number. They are no longer in print. 2. "The Frost," by Hannah Flagg Gould, is in Volume I. of the World's Best Poetry; it is also in her various volumes of poems, which, however, have been out of print for many years.

C. E. L., New York—Are there any works published on chirography; that is, giving a history of handwriting and of alphabets?

There is an excellent article on writing in the American Cyclopaedia, the last edition of which was completed in 1875; other cyclopaedias content themselves as a rule with articles on palaeography. W. J. Hoffman in 1895 published "Beginnings of Writing," (Appletons', $1.75;) but other books on the general subject concern themselves chiefly with handwriting as a means of reading character, with the study of handwriting in law, and similar matters.

ROBERT R. FREER—1. Are there any published works showing what constellation governed the birth of any person born on "any old day" during the past fifty years? That is to say, what constellation has been the constellation for each day during the last fifty years? 2. Are there any published works showing the supposed influences of constellations, planets, stars, or "what not" on the lives of people, whether those influences are mental, moral, or physical? 3. I would be glad to have you tell me of any such publications, whether they are accepted as standard or whether they are acknowledged to be "fakes."

1. There must be some such works, but it would take an astrologer to identify them. For centuries, in alchemy as well as astrology, the title of a book has never given any suggestion of its meaning or purport. 2. There are many such books—such as "Our Fate and the Zodiac," and others like it. 3. Those who believe in astrology accept the works on the subject as real; those who do not, deride them as fakes.

J. M. PARKER—Can you tell me where the following quotation was taken from: "Attention, Creation! By Kingdoms, Right Wheel." This was the first message sent by Prof. Samuel F. B. Morse at the New York University on Jan. 22, 1838.

According to Samuel Irenaeus Prime, who wrote the authorized life of Prof. Morse, "Gen. Cummings had recently been promoted to a military command, and in allusion to that fact, one of his friends wrote, and Prof. Morse manipulated the instrument to transmit, a sentence which was produced in telegraphic characters." This was the first message sent publicly by telegraph; but no record has been kept of Gen. Cummings's friend who wrote it.

M. H. C.—Continuing your answer to F. W. P., University of Virginia, in regard to the "Mémoirs sur L'Imperatrice Joséphine," &c., let me add that a recent edition of the book, published by Artheme Fayard, 78 Boulevard St. Michel, Paris, contained an interesting introduction by Maurice Vitrac and Arnould Galopin, three or four pages of which are almost wholly devoted to an account of Georgette Ducrest and her parents. The book was originally issued anonymously in 1828, and it was not until several years later that Georgette Ducrest acknowledged its authorship.

S. J. S. Vose—1. In what year did the mutiny on the United States brig Somers occur? 2. Who was the commander? 3. What were the names of those executed?

1. In November, 1842. 2. Alexander Slidell Mackenzie. 3. Philip Spencer, naval apprentice; Samuel Cromwell, boatswain's mate; Elisha Small, ordinary seaman. The "histories" of our navy ignore this incident; but you will find an excellent account of it in Benton's "Thirty Years' View," and another by Gail Hamilton in a magazine not included in Poole's index.

OLD READER—Can you inform me where I can find a book, I think the title is "Lumen, or The Mysteries of Infinity," and the "History of a Coronet"?

The first book is Camille Flammarion's "Lumen; Experiences in the Infinite," published in 1892 by the Cassell Company, but not now in print. The second book is not recorded, unless you mean Mrs. Todd's astronomical book, "Corona and Coronet," published some years ago—ten, maybe.

E. T.—Please name some good reference books on the old masters in painting—especially Rubens; also books on story telling to children.

"Great Masters," by John La Farge, $5; Knackfuss's "Peter Paul Rubens," $1.50. S. C. Bryant's "How to Tell Stories for Children," $1, is the only book on its subject.

R. O.—Please give me the name of the author of these lines:

"Count that day lost
Whose low, descending sun
Views from thy hands
No worthy action done."

The author is unknown. In 1697 James Bobart used the idea as a "sentiment" in a book he was sending to a friend, but it is not believed to be his. It has been ascribed to Marcus Aurelius, Emperor of Rome, (161-180 A. D.) we think.

E. F. C.—Please tell me where I can find the verses in which these lines occur:

"Father, in Thy tender keeping
Now we leave Thy servant sleeping."

These lines are the refrain of the Rev. John Ellerton's funeral hymn, beginning "Now the laborer's task is o'er," written in 1871; it is No. 242 in the hymnal of the Episcopal Church in this country, and also is in Hymns Ancient and Modern.

F. W. V.—Can you inform me where to obtain the story "Flies in Amber," by Edgerton? I don't know whether it was issued in book form or as a magazine article.

According to Poole, such a story by R. Hunt was published in England and republished in the Eclectic Magazine during 1854. There is no record of any book or other article of that name, or of any Edgerton.

CHARLES N. CHASE.—I wish to get a copy of a book, "Yazoo," author, A. T. Morgan, published at Washington, D. C., in 1884. It is a story of the reconstruction period. I do not know the name of the publishers.

"Yazoo, or the Picket Line of Freedom in the South," by A. T. Morgan, was published by R. H. Darby in Washington in 1884. You can see a copy at the Astor Library; the publisher is not of record, and Morgan is not in Allibone.

F. A. RUDD, New York.—Will you be kind enough to tell me to whom the following books are attributed and where they may be obtained: "Le Sofa," "Tanzai," "Ne Adarne"?

"Le Sofa" or "Le Sopha" was written by the younger Crébillon—Claude Prosper Crébillon, 1707-1777—and published in 1745. The other titles may be misspelled; we cannot identify them.

D. J. B., Bridgeport, Conn.—Could you kindly inform me as to the best method of ascertaining the date of first appearance of each work, the number of subsequent editions of each work, and the contemporary estimate of each work as it appeared, of any popular author during the decade 1830-1840?

To do all that you wish will require study; but Allibone's "Dictionary of Authors," 3 volumes, and supplement, 2 volumes, will give you a good deal of what you want, and set you on the way to get more.

SUSAN H. TABER.—Last Saturday F. C., New York, asked for a poem containing the line, "Down here among my people." It is by the late Bishop Huntington, and has that line as title.

Many other friends also have sent copies of the poem, which they say is anonymous.

H. E. A.—The poem which Jennie Ascough, Newark, asks for is "Kentucky Belle," and is to be found in Harper's Fifth Reader, a school text book.

Another correspondent ascribes it to Constance Fenimore Woolson, and places it in Cora Urquhart Potter's collection "My Recitations."

ASTRA.—Please inform me in what famous work of art have we the earliest notice of the use of horses in agriculture.

In the Bayeux Tapestry, which depicts the Norman invasion of England in 1066, and dates from a few years afterward.

M. P. S.—Some years ago I heard sung "Fontenoy." Can you give me the words, or tell me where to find them?

"Fontenoy," by Thomas Osborne Davis, is in "Irish Literature," Pages 823-5, (Volume III.,) and also in Volume VIII., at Page 277, of "The World's Best Poetry."

Appeals to Readers.

W. L. SHERWOOD.—In Mr. Huneker's review of George Moore, Page 94, third column, line 38, appears the phrase, "is to know one's own parish." In the prospectus of the New York Naturalists' Club I used the expression, "To be a good naturalist is to know well one's own parish." I was questioned as to this, and said that I thought I had quoted it from some of Charles Kingsley's writings; but was disappointed in not finding it in any book of quotations, and referred the matter to Mr. Rossiter Johnson for publication in "Notes and Queries." Dr. Johnson wrote, saying that he thought Kingsley would not be guilty of such a generalization, and the inquiry in "Notes and Queries" failed to bring a response. I was led to believe it to be a part of my own composition, although having a half-conscious recollection of reading it somewhere. As Mr. Huneker has paraphrased the saying it must be in literature. I should like to get at its origin.

OVAL PIRKEY.—Some three years or more ago a number of gentlemen met to get out a book of poems—one poem from each author. Did they issue such a book? If so, where can I get it? Does it contain a poem called "Invocation"? Do you know who wrote it?

A. L. R., New York City.—Can you give me any information about Agnes E. Mitchell, author of a poem called "Bringing Home the Cows," and Anna Boynton Averill, author of "Birch Stream"? I wish to use both poems in an anthology, and wish to communicate with the authors.

A. J. BROWN, Somers, N. Y.—I should like to get the poem which describes how the flags were at half-mast, and continues:

"Some man is dead. 'Never,' I said,
'Were flags half-mast for woman dead.'"

BURROUGHS.—What do the letters signify in the phrase, "He left his D. I. O. at their door, and went to the country"?

E. M. A.—Will you kindly inform me where I may find the quotation, "And I smiled to think God's greatness Flows round our incompleteness, Round our restlessness, His rest"?

A. L. D.—Please locate these lines:

"Wise were the Kings who never chose a friend
Until they had unmasked his soul, and seen
The bottom of his deepest thoughts."

J. S. Z., Chicago—I desire to obtain, if possible, the full text of a poem which I heard more than forty years ago, but have never seen in print. I quote the first lines:

"As I lay on my pillow, just dropping to sleep,
I heard a strange sound
That tripped o'er the ground
Like the clink of a horse's hoofs, distant but deep."

GEORGE H. EVANS—I would like to learn the source of the following lines:

"What time that white-winged ship, the soul,
Shall round the misty promontory, death."

MAY ELLIS—What is the poem in which this line occurs:

"It opens the gates of heaven"?

The New Testament of the Indian.

A study of the religion and philosophy of India is given in the English version of Dr. Paul Denssen's work on "The Philosophy of the Upanishads," which appears with the Scribner imprint. The teaching of the ancient Indian seers is traced intelligently and made clear for the student of India. The study of the subject is fascinating, for, as the author points out, "to every Indian Brahman to-day the Upanishads are what the New Testament is to the Christian." There are, among others, chapters on Brahman theology, the Brahman doctrine of the universe, the doctrine of the soul, &c. Dr. A. S. Geden translated the book into English from the original German edition.

East Indian Customs.

Charles Scribner's Sons are importing "Things Indian," by William Crooke, late of the Bengal Civil Service. The book comprises "discursive notes on various subjects connected with India." Information is given about the country and people of India, their history, life, art, marriage, customs, religion, dress, &c. The material has been arranged under a series of subject heads for easy reference and at the end of the various divisions is a list of references.

Advanced Psychology.

Dr. Wallin of the Department of Philosophy of Princeton University has published a curiously interesting and important book on "Optical Illusions of Reversible Perspective." The subject is one of advanced psychology, and Dr. Wallin is, if not the first, one of the earliest students, to investigate it thoroughly. He publishes his own book at Princeton.

Medical Education.

Prof. T. Clifford Allbutt, M. A., M. D., F. R. S., has put into book form the lecture on "Professional Education with Special Reference to Medicine," which he delivered at King's College, London, Oct. 3, 1905. The book presents the entire manuscript, the lecture, it is pointed out, having formed about two-thirds of it. The lecture was called "Medical Education in London."

Old Fashioned Gardens.

Country Life in America is to publish a series of articles by Wilhelm Miller, who is about to start on an extended trip through North and South Carolina and Georgia in order to visit the old-fashioned gardens there. Later these articles will be put into a book on "Old-Fashioned Gardens." Mr. Miller's principal stops will be at Camden, Charlestown, and Thomasville.

The Garden Magazine.

There will be two elaborate tables for sowing flower and vegetable seeds in the April Garden Magazine. Other articles will deal with the shrubbery garden, which may have flowers the whole year through; flowers of the mountains, advice for planting different varieties for home gardens, and a special three-page supplement of "suggestive gardens."

Lippincott Books.

The J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia, has just published an important scientific work, "Electric Meters," by Henry G. Solomon, and a volume, "Mining Law of the British Empire," by Charles J. Alford.

THE PUBLISHERS.

A Life of Tolstoy in Press—Kipling's New Serial—The Large-Paper Hewlett.

An account of the "Early Life of Leo Tolstoy" is in press with Charles Scribner's Sons. It was compiled by the Russian writer's former secretary and present literary representative and intimate friend, M. P. Birukoff, with the help of Tolstoy himself as well as that of his wife. M. Birukoff has drawn his material from the collection of manuscripts, diaries, letters, and other documents intrusted to him by the Count. The volume, which will be fully illustrated, is to be the first of a trilogy, the two following to deal with Tolstoy's married life and career as a novelist and with the period succeeding his spiritual awakening down to the present time.

Houghton, Mifflin & Co. will publish in this city at once instead of next Saturday the new editions of "Sturmsee" and "Calmire," the demand for which has greatly increased upon the announcement of their author, Henry Holt.

At the end of the month the Appletons will bring out George Horace Lorimer's new book, "The False Gods." This is entirely different from his volume, "Letters from a Self-Made Merchant to His Son." It is a "wildly exciting journalistic story."

From the Scribners is to come immediately W. B. Freer's book, "Experiences of an American Teacher in the Philippines," with illustrations from photographs taken by the author. Besides describing the islands, the author discusses the work of the American teachers there.

"The Lady of the Decoration," by Frances Little, is announced for issue next month by The Century Company. The story is told in the form of letters from a widow who goes to Japan to forget her sorrows. She loves a man whom she thinks lost to her. Glimpses are given, incidentally, of Japanese life.

McClure, Phillips & Co. are hurrying through the press Mrs. Mary Stewart Cutting's new volume of "More Stories of Married Life," which they expect to publish this Spring. They are sending out, by the way, the seventh printing of Mrs. H. A. Mitchell Keays's novel of divorce, "He That Eateth Bread with Me."

The Macmillan Company issues Vol. II. of Maurice Hewlett's "The Road in Tuscany," which is Vol. III. of the large octavo édition de luxe of his works. The many photogravure and black-and-white illustrations are the same as in the original edition, from drawings by Joseph Pennell.

Dodd, Mead & Co. will bring out next week Cyrus Townsend Brady's "The Patriots," Louise Closser Hale's "Motor Car Divorce," for which Walter Hale made thirty-six illustrations; Esther Singleton's "Holland Described by Great Writers," and Dr. Beverly Warner's "Famous Introductions to Shakespeare's Plays. By the Notable Editors of the Eighteenth Century."

The Scribners are publishing to-day Jesse L. Williams's "The Day-Dreamer," L. Allen Harker's "Concerning Paul and Fiammetta," with an introduction by Mrs. Wiggin, a new edition of Harker's "Romance of the Nursery," Andrew Lang's "Sir Walter Scott," in the Literary Lives Series, the new uniform edition of Mrs. Edith Wharton's novels and stories, and a new and revised edition of Dr. George P. Fisher's "The Reformation."

D. Appleton & Co. publish this week John Morgan Richards's volume of reminiscences, "With John Bull and Jonathan," and Seth Cook Comstock's story, "Marcelle the Mad." They announce the postponement until March 16 of Robert Barr's tale, "The Triumphs of Eugene Valmont."

McClure's Magazine for May will begin the new serial by Rudyard Kipling, entitled "Robin Goodfellow, His Friends." This is the first serial story from the author's pen since his "Kim" appeared in the same periodical five years ago. It will be illustrated by André Castaigne.

The April issue of St. Nicholas will have an article on Robert Louis Stevenson, "The Lighthouse Builder's Son." It is from the pen of Ariadne Gilbert, and will tell the story of Robert Louis Stevenson from the time he was five years old, through his wanderings, his sojourn at Vailima, and his final resting place on the summit of Vaea Mountain. John Boyd has made the illustrations, among which will be a photographic reproduction of Saint-Gaudens's bronze memorial of Stevenson in St. Giles's Cathedral, Edinburgh.

"Bob and the Guides," by Mrs. Mary Raymond Shipman Andrews, will be published by Charles Scribner's Sons toward the end of the month. It is an amusing story, including pen pictures of camp life in the woods. It is founded on the author's own experiences. The volume will contain ten stories, in all of which "Bob" will appear. The numerous illustrations have been drawn by Fred C. Yohn, A. B. Frost, and others.

"The Day Dreamer: Being the Full Narrative of the Stolen Story," has finally been decided upon for the title of Jesse Lynch Williams's new newspaper tale, with a love story and a political intrigue mixed up. The Scribners are publishing it to-day.

Doubleday, Page & Co. will issue Monday Lady Henry Somerset's novel, "Under the Arch." As has already been announced, this is a story of London life during the Boer war, the principal figures being two soldiers who love the same woman. One of the men is killed in battle. The book presents sidelights of London's "submerged tenth" and "smart set."

"Black's Medical Dictionary," edited by Dr. John D. Comrie, is appearing here through the Macmillan Company. It contains over 350 illustrations and diagrams in the text. In preparing it the editor has endeavored to place it "somewhere between a technical dictionary of medicine and one intended merely for the domestic treatment of commoner ailments." Care has been taken that all scientific terms, descriptions of diseases and their treatment, medicines, medicinal plants, &c., should be presented in the simplest words. There are numerous cross-references.

The title of William Allen White's forthcoming book of sketches of Kansas life will be "In Our Town." McClure, Phillips & Co. will publish it next month.

The John C. Winston Company has set April 2 for the publication date of John Trotwood Moore's new novel of the South, "The 'Bishop' of Cottontown." The Kinneys have made a colored frontispiece and several black and white drawings for the book. Mr. Moore is also the author of "The Summer Hymnal" and "Songs and Stories from Tennessee." These publishers further announce the early issue of a new book of "Toasts," compiled by Clare Victor Dwiggins, author of "Crankisms" and "Completed Proverbs." They will also publish soon "The Rubaiyat of the Egg," with illustrations by Dwiggins.

Dr. Gustav Mann's volume, "Chemistry of the Proteids," which the Macmillan Company is bringing out, is based largely on the second edition of Prof. Otto Cohnheim's "Chemie der Eiweisskörper." Following the introduction on the importance of chemistry for all biological research and the classification of proteids are chapters on the reactions of albuminous substances, albumoses and peptones, the salts of albumins, physical properties of albumins, &c. A "special part" has been incorporated which is given over to the albumins proper, the proteids, the albuminoids, and malanins. Besides the numerous footnotes a list is given of Dr. Mann's writings.

The short fiction in the next number of Appletons Booklover's Magazine will include a new story by Edith Wharton, in which she treats of the relations of circumstances to human motives; a love tale by Edith Barnard, a story of mystery by Ellen Paine Huling, and "The Wisdom of Sheriff McGee," by Catharine Young Glen.

Una L. Silberrad's latest novel, "Curayl," is down for publication by Doubleday, Page & Co. the beginning of next week. The author lives at Essex, England. Among her earlier novels are "The Enchanter," "The Lady of Dreams," "Petronilla," "Heroven," &c.

Charles Scribner's Sons are about to bring out a new edition of Prof. G. P. Fisher's "The Reformation." The book has been revised and thoroughly gone over for the new reprint.

Doubleday, Page & Co. announce for issue in April "How to Make a Fruit Garden," by S. W. Fletcher, in the series including "How to Make a Vegetable Garden" and "How to Make a Flower Garden."

A volume of "Hints to Sportsmen," by H. W. Hanks, ("Niblick,") author of "Hints to Golfers," &c., will come from the Scribners in the very near future. It is described as "a practical handbook for the woods," written in a popular manner and profusely illustrated. "Specific" directions are given for the making of a camp, outfits, cooking recipes, the treatment of sick in the woods, &c.

AGES IN WAITING.

SINCE Edward FitzGerald and others have revived the twanging of Omar's lyre in the oases of Persia, sedate or whimsical English quatrains have been dubbed "rubaiyat." We have had the "Rubaiyat of a Persian Kitten" and several others of less distinction, and we are now threatened with the "Rubaiyat of the Egg," concerning which little has so far been imparted, and the "Rubaiyat of an Automobile," which has been written by Carolyn Wells for Dodd, Mead & Co. Since the bare announcement was made, additional information concerning Miss Wells's rubaiyat has come to hand.

"True" Philosophy of the Motorist.

In the best vein Miss Wells satirizes automobiling, although giving accurately the thoughts and philosophy of the automobilist. She laughingly sets forth the enthusiasms and troubles of the autoist, and "sympathizes" with him when his car refuses to move, or runs away, or blows up. She describes all the "Christian graces" as well as the "seven deadly sins" of the motor car. The numerous illustrations in the book are supposed to emphasize the most cruel situations. The two quatrains following are samples of her verse:

> A look of anguish underneath the car,
> Another start;—a squeak,—a grunt,—a jar!
> The Aspiration pipe is working loose!
> The vapor can't get out! And there you are!
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> Strange, is it not, that of the myriads who > Have Empty Tanks and know not what to do,
> Not one will tell of it when he Returns.
> As for Ourselves,—why, we deny it, too.

Christ and the English Poets.

The volume of lectures delivered by the late Dr. Charles William Stubbs, Dean of Ely, before the University of Cambridge, England, in 1904-1905, and entitled, "The Christ of English Poetry," will finally come from Dutton's next week. It has been the chief object of the author—as he points out in his dedicatory letter to Sir Oliver Lodge, the well known English scientist and man of letters—to impress upon his undergraduate congregation the doctrine that personality is the mightiest force which God can bring to bear upon man; that the Supreme Personality in all history, the most potent factor in all civilized change and progress, is that of Jesus Christ, and how and why, therefore, this claim of Christ to supremacy in all human thought and action ought to affect and influence the moral character no less than the intellectual attitude of every baptized disciple of Jesus. And Dr. Stubbs has attempted to show in his lectures the part played by the poets of England during four periods in "bringing home" this conception of Christ's "personality."

The periods referred to are those of Cynewulf, William Langland, Shakespeare, and Browning. Dr. Stubbs analyzes some of the poems of each man, and has added full explanatory notes to each lecture. Numerous extracts, too, are given from the works of the poets, as well as others mentioned by the author. The relation of the poets—all poets—to the "personality" of Christ is touched upon in the opening lecture:

> * * * A * * potent witness to the varying pictures of the Christ might, I think, be found in the pages of the poets of Christendom; indeed, I can conceive of few nobler, few more useful subjects of Christian apology, than an adequate exposition of the witness which has been borne by the Christian poets of every age to Christ and Christianity. The poets * * * the representative men of their own age, for each poet is, in a sense, the epitome of the imaginative life of his age and nation, sharing with his countrymen the raw materials of his art, though illuminating those materials with the light of his own genius. The poets, therefore, are the most prophetic, the most clear-sighted, the most deep-hearted men of their time.

The "Memoirs" of Dr. Temple.

In explaining the fact that the two-volume work, "The Memoirs of Frederick Temple, Archbishop of Canterbury," which is issued by The Macmillan Company, is divided into seven parts, the editor, Archdeacon Sandford of Exeter, writes in his preface:

> The life of Dr. Temple lends itself to this treatment. Its different divisions are clearly marked and defined; the mental characteristic of the man was breadth, and the fact that different types of mind are represented in the writers may help to preserve this feature of breadth in the general portrait. The subject of it was many-sided, and a mistake would be made if the view presented were contracted. It was characteristic of him that his sense of the dignity of individual life made him shrink from the thought of publicity being given to its more private history. These memoirs accordingly regard his life as far as possible under its more public aspects; they are not a biography, but records of a career.

In the opening memoir, telling of Dr. Temple's birth to 1848, the Rev. Dr. J. M. Wilson recalls the story of the home where the foundation of the character of the subject was laid. And in the supplement by the editor an attempt has been made "at binding together the whole life into a complete unity by tracing the training and self-development which ran throughout the different stages." In these cases use has been made of some of Archbishop Temple's letters home and to a few friends.

The illustrations in the book include photogravure portraits and half-tone views.

⁂

Francis Wilson and Joseph Jefferson.

The series of recollections by the well-known comedian Francis Wilson, now running in Scribner's Magazine, will be issued in book form in April. The volume will be entitled "Joseph Jefferson: Reminiscences of a Friend," and will be embellished by thirty-four full-page pictures: Following are the titles of the chapters: "First Acquaintance," "Characteristics," "Rip Van Winkle," "Recreations," "Joseph Jefferson as a Lecturer," "The Author," "The Rivals," and the "All-Star Performance," "Characteristic Days," and the "Conclusion."

The volume is based on the numerous notes taken by Mr. Wilson of the many conversations on literature, acting, and painting which he had with Jefferson, with whom he was associated in the all-star cast of "The Rivals." Many characteristic stories will be included in the book, as related by the late actor himself in his leisure moments.

The pictures will be from portraits and drawings in the possession of Mr. Wilson and others, and will present Jefferson in all of his characterizations.

⁂

St. Catherine's Great Painter.

A study of "Giovanni Antonio Bazzi: The Man and the Painter, 1477-1549," hitherto usually styled "Sodoma," is to come from the press of E. P. Dutton & Co. next week. The book is a "just and fair-minded" picture of the artist gathered from the "fruits" of the researches of Mr. Robert H. Hobart Cust's "more gifted" predecessors. The opening chapter deals with the questions as to the correct name, date of birth, and birthplace of Bazzi, the traditional origin of the nickname "Sodoma," Bazzi's titles, and a summary of Bazzi's character. Although he does not attempt completely to "whitewash" the character of Bazzi, Mr. Cust shows that Vasari and others who have stated that the sobriquet of "Sodoma" had some underlying evil meaning were wrong. He adds that it might possibly be discovered to be, "after all, only a place name, taken by the artist himself or for some reason yet unknown to us; or, as * * * is more probable, a nom de guerre given him without special evil meaning by some club or society of which he was a member. This we know was a very general custom among the Sienese of that period, and is far from uncommon even to this day." He also shows that Bazzi himself spelled his nickname in a number of ways.

The book continues with an account of the early years and apprenticeship of the painter. His early work in Siena is then described, followed with discussions of his frescoes and paintings, his visits to Rome, his "Fame and Fortune," "The Final Period," and Bazzi's pupils. In the appendix are notes on the portraits of Bazzi, lists of his pictures and drawings, authorities consulted, and documents. The fifty-six illustrations in the book, some of which are in photogravure, have been selected by Mr. Cust with a view to assist the student to form an opinion of Bazzi's methods and artistic development.

A Foreigner's View of Burma.

The following from the preface to "A People at School," by H. Fielding Hall, which comes from The Macmillan Company, gives some idea of the author's method of treating of, and his attitude toward, the Burmese:

> Some years ago I wrote "The Soul of a People." It was an attempt to understand the Burmese, to see them as they do themselves, to describe their religion and its effect on them. This book is also concerned with the Burmese. * * * This is of the outer life, of success and failure, of progress and retrogression judged as nations judge each other. It is of the Burmese as a race, or nation. * * * And although in this book it may seem that there is much that is not in accord with the former one, that is not, I think, really so. For life is complex. It has many sides, it must have many ideals. And although one ideal be opposed to another, they may yet both be good and both be true. We can never get far enough away, get high enough up, to see life whole. * * * Meanwhile we but see what we can. I hope, therefore, that this book may be found no less true than the other; that it may be accepted as in a way its complement and companion.

In Part I. the author writes about "The True Burma," "Twenty Years Ago," "Mandalay," "On a Frontier," &c. Part II. contains chapters on British rule in India, "The Oriental Mind," "The Village Community," "Courts and People," "Civil Law," "Honesty and Truth," "Buddhism," "Women," "Burmese and Immigrants," &c. The book is the result of personal experience and observation.

The Gambler Abroad.

Katharine C. Thurston's "Gambler," published in the United States by the Harpers in September, has lately appeared in England under the patronage of the Messrs. Hutchinson of London. The English serial publication was simultaneous with the American. The book issue, in spite of the delay, seems to have attracted the attention of the British reviewers.

MARY OF SCOTLAND.

MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS has always been a puzzle, and probably always will be; thrown from one partisan novelist and historian to another so often that "history" is but a comparative term when applied to her and her times. There is no impartial decision when the question deals with her. Or at least there was none. Now it seems that one has been made—and by a woman—in Florence Maccunn's new volume, "Mary Stuart." It tells her story simply, with little attempt at decoration, and absolutely dispassionately.

There is no real connection between this book and Maurice Hewlett's "Queen's Quair," yet this life may well be read by those who have read or shall read the novel. It is an excellent corrective to Hewlett's refined salaciousness and his twisting of history. To Mrs. Maccunn Mary Stuart is not a wanton, but very much of a woman; in prison at Loch Leven, for instance, she speedily "won the favor and good will of all the household, as well women as men," (as it was reported to the Lords,) and the author adds: "A curious state of affairs if she were the mere wanton some of them declared her to be."

Historians are greatly concerned with the authenticity of the Casket letters, and these Mrs. Maccunn appears to accept as really written by Mary. She holds the Queen guilty of her husband's murder, an accessory before the fact, ignorant only of the details of the crime, and her opinion of Mary's relations with Bothwell before their marriage are summed up in a few words: "She herself withheld nothing—honor, conscience, her high estate * * * she threw them all into the balance." Yet, granting this, Mrs. Maccunn is not carried away by hatred of Mary's wickedness to denounce her, and, on the other hand, she is not inspired to attack Elizabeth by disgust at the latter's duplicity. She tells the tale of the "Rival Queens" with the moderation of the real historian, rendering judgment and passing sentence none the less relentlessly because of tears in her eyes. Her book is an admirable piece of work, and we think should long remain the standard short history of one of the most familiar of the many Queens of Tears. The illustrations of the volume are peculiarly well chosen, and out of the beaten run of pictures used in similar books; they add decidedly to the value of the volume.

Plato.

The Macmillan Company publishes in the Classical Series "Selections from Plato," edited, with an introduction and notes, by Lewis Leaming Forman of Cornell University. The aim of the book is to "offer an introduction, first to Plato's language, with the constant aid of grammar and dictionary; second, to the noble figure of Socrates, as presented in Plato's pages. Many suggestions are given to the student in the freshman class which would enable him to prepare a lesson on Plato. Another set of notes in the appendix contains information on syntactic habits of Greek.

"The Far Country."

Florence Wilkinson's new volume of selected poems will be entitled "The Far Country." McClure, Phillips & Co. will bring it out immediately.

All That Was Possible

By HOWARD OVERING STURGIS,
Author of "Belchamber," etc.
With Colored Frontispiece by F. S. Coburn. Crown 8vo, $1.50.

MR. STURGIS has written another striking work of fiction. All That Was Possible is not a book to give away carelessly, for it deals with a subject which is forbidden in conventional conversation. It fulfils its title by showing the hopeless pathos that is inevitable when social conventionality bars the return to honorable living.

THE INCOMPARABLE
WHITE
THE CAR FOR SERVICE

THE WHITE STEAMER ABROAD.

The favorable comparisons frequently made between various American machines and the best-known of the foreign makes are interesting, but we believe that a specific statement of the sales abroad of these American machines would be more convincing.

This company has a branch office in London (exclusively for its automobiles) which was established in 1901. We also have flourishing agencies in Paris, in Antwerp and in Milan. Our cars are thus sold in four European countries in competition with the home product. The price abroad is the American price plus all extra charges for freight, duty, etc. The number of White Cars already contracted for to be delivered in Europe this season reaches well into three figures.

This extensive European organization insures that White tourists will receive abroad every courtesy and attention.

In addition to our European business, we have agencies in Japan, in Australia, in the Philippines, in Hawaii, and in Mexico. As an example of the importance of these agencies, we might call attention to the fact that there are more Whites in progressive Japan than all other makes combined.

X. THE BEARS AT NIAGARA FALLS

The bears had heard of this great resort,
Of its fame at home and at foreign court;
Of its bridal parties and lovers' walk,
And its hackmen bold and their jolly talk;
Of its Suspension Bridge and Prospect Park,
And Indian trophies made of bark;
And its Whirlpool Rapids, Gorge and Cave,
And the battles fought by soldiers brave.

Their train pulled in at half-past nine;
The air was warm; the day was fine.
They started off at once to view
The rolling rapids and the big horse-shoe.
They sat for awhile on the very brink
While the roaring waters made them think
Of bygone days and fun they had,
And of things they did a little bad.
They walked around for an hour or more
To see the water and hear it roar.
They crossed a bridge to the other side
And back on a coach for a little ride
They asked a Canadian if he knew
Why Niagara water was split in two
With the biggest half on the British side,
And if he thought it was a fair divide?

They were in the woods in the island park
Cutting their names into beech-tree bark
When a boy came close, quite unawares,
And said, "Hello there, Roosevelt Bears!
I have hunted for you high and low;
I want to show you where to go."
"Hello yourself," said TEDDY—B.
"What's your name and what's your fee?"
"I'm secretary of the N. B. C.,
My name is Tom; we're a club of ten;
There's Bob and Dan and Hub and Ben,
And Will, he's lame, and Joe and Jack.
And Fred and little Neddie Black
Who lost his arm on the railway track.
We study nights and work all day
Showing tourists the easiest way
To get about and what to see;
And charge the very smallest fee.
We meet at seven o'clock at night
And divide our money square and right."
"I like your talk," said TEDDY—G.
"Bring me Neddie Black," said he.
"I'll pay him wages good and large,
And add refreshments without charge."
"I'll take Will," said TEDDY—B,
"The boy that's lame, he'll do for me."
The boys were brought and the Roosevelt Bears
Were now relieved from tourists' cares.
Tom was asked to come around
In the afternoon to a picnic ground
And bring the fellows every one
For a basket lunch and an hour's fun.

The bears and boys did every stunt;
They shot the rapids on a punt,
Standing up with poles in hand,
And waving hats to folks on land.
They rode the Gorge like a shooting star,
And came back again on a trolley car.
They saw the Falls from every nook
Where tourists stop to have a look.
They went behind, the boys their guide,
And saw the Falls from the other side.
They dressed themselves in rubber suits,
With rubber hoods and rubber boots,
Which covered up all but their nose
And made them look like Eskimos;
They signed a book, the tourist list,
And stepped on board "The Maid of Mist"
Which tipped and tossed and tried its best
To make the Roosevelt trip a test
Of how near the Falls a boat could steam
Before being forced back by the stream.
They did the Falls and now were through;
There was nothing left for them to do.

"How do you like it?" said little Will,
"This water tumbling down a hill."
"Like it, you ask," said TEDDY—B,
"What else could the water do?" said he.
"If you'll come with me out West some day,
I'll show you Falls running the other way.
They call them geysers or some such name,
But they're uphill waterfalls just the same."
"Your show's all right," said TEDDY—G,
"We came this way the Falls to see.
We've seen the Falls; we've heard its noise;
And now I want to see the boys.
I'm nearly starved; I want to eat;
I want to rest my eyes and feet,
And work my jaws and have a chat
About boyhood days and things like that."
"If you'll come with me," said little Ned,
"I'll find a place where you'll get fed
On doughnuts round and heaps of cake
And pumpkin pies, my mother's make."
So off they went as the way he led
And found the place just as he said,
The jolliest spot to have a lark
In the thickest woods of the island park.

The boys were there, the happiest bunch
That ever ate a basket lunch:
There was Bob and Dan and Ben and Fred,
And Jack, the president, and little Ned,
And treasurer Joe and Will and Hub,
And Tom, the secretary of the Club.
They ate their lunch all seated round
On stones and logs and on the ground.
The bears related stories brave
Of fights they had in a mountain cave:
Their winter home in the wildest land
Where once there lived a robber band.
This cave was under a mighty rock,
And its door of stone was made to lock
So tight and fast that once 'twas done
The bears were safe from hunter's gun.
This cave, they said, had sacks of gold
Stored there by robbers who never told
Their hiding place till all were dead.
"And now the gold is ours," they said.
They asked the boys to come out West
And spend the winter and have a rest
And see the cave and get a sack
Of this hidden treasure to carry back.

When the lunch was o'er the fun began:
TEDDY—G took Jack and Joe and Dan
And showed them how to climb a tree
To the very top, the Falls to see;
While TEDDY—B entertained the rest
With tricks that he could do the best.
They gave each boy a dollar bill
And five apiece to Ned and Will:
The two new fives as extra pay
For the work they did so well that day.

"We must be off," said TEDDY—B,
"We've a hundred thousand things to see;
We'll send you postals when we're gone
To let you know how we're getting on."
TEDDY—G said he would surely write
When he got back, and each boy invite
To their home out West on the mountain side,
And send them money for the railway ride.
The boys lined up, a happy row,
As the train pulled in for Buffalo.
The bears shook hands with every lad
And said what a jolly day they had
A speech was made by TEDDY—B
"Good-bye; good luck; do right," said he,
"Remember that Niagara's views
Were made to cure folks of the blues;
Its rainbow sign is Niagara's laugh;
If we need it East, we'll telegraph"
The lads replied, "Hurrah! Hurrah!
When you've seen New York, come back this way."
As the Buffalo train moved out of sight
The bears called back with all their might,
"We leave for Boston town tonight."

WOMEN AND CHILDREN KILLED IN MORO BATTLE

Mingled with Warriors and Fell in Hail of Shot.

FOUR DAYS OF FIGHTING

Nine Hundred Persons Killed or Wounded—President Wires Congratulations to the Troops.

MANILA, March 10.—Brig. Gen. Bliss made a reconnaissance toward Mount Dajo during the week previous to the attack of the American force upon the Moro stronghold there, but it had no effect upon the hostile attitude of the outlaws.

An unofficial report says that the families of the Moros remained in the villages situated in the centre of the crater at the apex of the mountain, and the women and children mingled with the warriors during the battle to such an extent that it was impossible to discriminate, and all were killed in the fierce onslaught. Major Gen. Wood is not available at present to confirm this report. It is supposed that with Brig. Gen. Bliss he is returning to Manila.

Associated Press telegrams from Zamboanga say that the attack on Mount Dajo commenced on Monday. There were four days of hard fighting, during which it is estimated that 900 persons were killed or wounded.

The Moro constabulary commanded by Col. Scott is receiving much praise from the entire expedition. The Federal troops and constabulary formed three columns and assaulted the Moro stronghold, advancing by three trails to the mountain top. The constabulary were placed at the head of one column.

The wounds received by First Lieut. Gordon Johnston during the recent battle with the Moro outlaws at Mount Dajo, on the Island of Jolo, are severe, a slug having passed through his right shoulder. He performed a gallant deed when he scaled the wall of the Rio crater and was blown off the parapet by the force of exploding shells.

All the other men who were wounded are reported to be in a favorable condition.

Six of the organizations of the troops which came from Mindanao are either en route home or have been ordered to return to their headquarters. Jolo is quiet and the Sultan and head man are reported as saying that general satisfaction is expressed over the extermination of the outlaws.

Americans are now arriving at Zamboanga from Jolo. The consensus of their opinion is that the whole trouble was due to the fact that the Governor, Major Hugh Scott, permitted the outlaws to fortify themselves within sight of the City of Jolo. The military authorities at Zamboanga have refused since then to give any information to the press.

Constabulary detachments are now engaged in the mountains of Northern Luzon rounding up the bands of savages and head hunters who are on the warpath.

WASHINGTON, March 10.—President Roosevelt to-day sent the following cablegram to Major Gen. Wood at Manila:

Washington, March 10.

Wood, Manila:

I congratulate you and the officers and men of your command upon the brilliant feat of arms wherein you and they so well upheld the honor of the American flag.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

No additional information reached the War Department to-day regarding the fight. The cable between Jolo and Zamboanga is broken, and it may be a day or two yet before a full report is received. The department is not even advised of the composition of the force employed by Gen. Wood, and can only make conjecture from the regimental assignment of the officers mentioned in the first dispatch.

The news of this fight clears up the discussion aroused by the report from Manila a few weeks ago concerning the activity among the three regiments stationed near there. It was said then that they were preparing for a possible emergency in China, but it is now developed that it was the Moro campaign for which they, or parts of them, were destined. The presence of Gen. Wood and Gen. Bliss at the fight shows that the movement against the Moros was deliberately undertaken. Gen. Bliss is in command of one of the brigades stationed near Manila, and apparently went down with Gen. Wood especially for this fight.

At the War Department this afternoon Secretary Taft said that he desired particularly to make it plain that the fight in no way meant a return to hostile conditions generally throughout the islands. The Moros are entirely distinct from the Filipinos, and a fight with them no more means renewed trouble with the Filipinos than if it had occurred in the Carolines or any other place hundreds of miles away.

The Moros are a savage people, differentiated from the Indians of our own Western frontier only by their greater agricultural development. They are impateint of forms of civil government, and recognize only the authority of force represented to them by the power of their dattos. They can be held in check only by the constant presence of the soldiers, and probably for a long time the maintenance of peace and quiet in their islands will be achieved only by force. The problem of civilization among the Moros is one of time.

MRS. HENRY B. COXE TO WED.

Widow of Coal Operator to Marry London Physician.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, March 10.—Mrs. Isabel B. Coxe, the widow of Henry Brinton Coxe, the coal operator, is soon to marry again. In letters to friends in this city, Mrs. Coxe, who is spending the Winter in New York, has announced her engagement to a Dr. Hill of London. Mrs. Coxe is about 60 years old, while Dr. Hill is said to be about 50 years old.

During the Spring and Fall Mrs. Coxe sometimes stays at her country place, Malvern at Paoli, on the main line of the Pennsylvania Railroad. The estate is one of the most beautiful in this part of the country.

Near by is the country home of one of her sons, Alexander Brown Coxe, who is named for Mrs. Coxe's father, Alexander Brown of Brown Brothers & Co. Another son is Henry Brinton Coxe of 130 South Twenty-first Street, this city.

BLOCK MISSES NORDICA.

Drops at Opera Matinee—Hits a Stage Hand.

A crash that startled the audience and nearly resulted in serious injury to Mme. Nordica occurred on the stage of the Metropolitan Opera House at the matinee of "Il Trovatore" yesterday afternoon. A heavy piece of wood that formed a part of one of the drop scenes fell to the stage, just missing Mme. Nordica and grazing the forehead of Max Wolfe, a scene shifter.

The heavy brocade curtains had just fallen on the tower scene of Verdi's opera. To one of the biggest audiences of the season Mme. Nordica had twice sung the "Miserere" with Mr. Knote and the chorus. She and Campanari had just finished the duet with which the act ends.

Mme. Nordica, in the dark robe and scarf of Dona Sol, and Mr. Campanari came to the footlights and bowed. Then, as the applause continued, Mme. Nordica came forward a second time from the right side of the opening. An usher stepped out from the left and handed her a bunch of red and white roses. Raising the flowers to her face she bowed again. Then she turned to slip behind the curtain at the right.

Just then a sharp crash sounded on the stage and the damask drop sagged forward. Mme. Nordica caught at the folds of the drop with one hand and swayed uncertainly back into full view of the audience, almost dropping her flowers. Mr. Campanari caught her hand and half supported, half led her behind the curtain.

After a moment, as the audience still applauded, Mr. Campanari came forward again. Mme. Nordica advanced only a few steps, holding one hand to her head, as if a little dazed. She looked pale and smiled apparently with difficulty. The audience, seeing that nothing really serious had befallen her, redoubled the applause.

What had happened was this: A piece of drop scenery which forms one of the walls in the opening scene of "Die Meistersinger" had been lowered at the front of the stage ready for use in last evening's performance. A heavy strip of wood about five feet long attached to the lower edge of this drop had in some way become loosened. The lifting of the curtain caused it to weaken further and drop to the stage.

The piece missed Mme. Nordica only by a few feet. One edge of the wood hit Max Wolfe, a stage hand, who was helping with the damask drop, cutting a painful gash on the forehead. Mme. Nordica saw the accident and it was this that caused her agitation.

If Mme Nordica had stepped behind the curtain a second earlier she could hardly have escaped a severe and possibly fatal injury. As it was, although she was plainly pale and unnerved just after the accident, she recovered sufficiently to go on with the last act.

The singer was said last night to be none the worse for the shock she received yesterday afternoon.

SENATOR BREAKS LEG AT SEA.

Col. Domville of Canada Has a Bad Fall on the Lucania.

Senator James Domville of Canada, Lieutenant Colonel of the Eighth Hussars and President of the Central Railroad of Canada, who arrived in New York on the Cunarder Lucania yesterday, had a leg broken in two places last Monday afternoon, when the liner was about 600 miles west of Queenstown. Senator Domville was on his way to the saloon when he slipped and fell from the main companionway. The broken leg was set by Dr. Sydney Jones, surgeon of the Lucania, and as soon as the vessel docked Senator Domville was assisted off the steamship and hurried to the Grand Central Station, where he caught the first train for Canada.

Senator Domville said that while in England he had succeeded in interesting English capitalists in the electric railroad which, he said, when completed, will link Montreal, Ottawa, and Toronto, and will be the longest railroad in the world operated entirely by electricity. The railroad will be 662 miles long. Senator Domville said he had no trouble in raising the $25,000,000 necessary to complete the railroad. He added that never before in her history did the future of Canada look so bright.

MOTHER DIED, SAVED BABY.

David W. Tarbill of Cincinnati Held for Woman's Death Under Auto.

Special to The New York Times.

CINCINNATI, March 10.—Mrs. Anna Johns, a gypsy, was to-day killed at Peeble's Corner, by a big touring car, driven by David W. Tarbill of the D. T. Williams Valve Company. Tarbill, who is a wealthy member of clubs, is held on a manslaughter charge.

Mrs. Johns, with her baby in her arms, was crossing the street, and while she was dodging a trolley car, the machine, which was filled with a party of merrymakers, bore down on her. She threw her baby across the car to safety and then went under the wheels.

REJECTS STUDENT'S PLEA.

New Haven Judge Says Lewis of Brooklyn Must Go to Jail.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., March 10.—Warren Chester Lewis of Brooklyn, Yale '07, was unable to obtain a reopening of his case in the City Court by Judge Tyner today, and will go to jail for ten days for assaulting Policeman Bright unless his appeal is sustained.

Lewis was in a scuffle at the New Haven Theatre and, the police say, attacked Bright in order to permit two classmates who had been arrested to escape. Lewis was convicted, but brought in new evidence to show that he had been attacked in mistake by the officer. He is out under bonds pending his appeal.

Another Euthanasia Bill.

Special to The New York Times.

DES MOINES, Iowa, March 10.—The Iowa Legislature was astounded to-day when Representative F. N. Buckingham of Buena Vista introduced a bill in the House entitled "An Act to Require Physicians to Take Human Life Under Certain Conditions." The bill provides that when a patient is suffering from an incurable disease, his life may be taken by means of an anesthetic upon the recommendation of three reputable physicians and the Coroner, and with the consent of the patient.

TAFT MAY BE DRAFTED TO THE SUPREME BENCH

For the Third Time He Urges the President to Forego the Plan.

WOULD END PRESENT TASKS

Wants to Complete Panama and Philippines Work—Shift Would Clear Root's Path to Presidency.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, March 10.—For the third time Secretary Taft has received an offer of a place on the Supreme Court bench, and for the third time he has urgently requested the President not to insist upon the appointment. This time, despite the fact that Mr. Taft has spoken so plainly as to leave the President in no doubt about his feeling, there is little doubt that he will be drafted.

Mr. Taft's friends feel that if the President insists upon putting him upon the bench at this time it will be the reverse of a compliment to the Secretary. It will be, they say, taking him away from an uncompleted task which he desires to finish, and there is no pressing necessity for it. They assert that to appoint him to some future vacancy, when his Panama and Philippine work is done, would be a great and appreciated compliment, but that the only explanation of such action now would be a desire to get Mr. Taft out of the Cabinet because the President was not well pleased with his work. They call it a case of kicking the Secretary upstairs.

The offer has been made to the Secretary and urged upon him with great force. He has succeeded by strong representations in getting the matter held up for the time, but it is stated on very high authority that the President will make the appointment of Justice Brown's successor at an early date, and that successor will be Taft.

Mr. Taft's appointment will put an end to him as a Presidential possibility, and will leave the President free to give support to the Presidential ambition of Secretary Root.

Mr. Taft's objection to the appointment, however, is known to be not to its character but to the time. Ever since he was chosen by President McKinley to head the Philippine Commission in 1900, it has been well understood that his personal ambition was for judicial rather than administrative preferment. He has openely stated that his desire was at some time to go on the Supreme bench.

This is the third opportunity he has had for the gratification of that ambition. Twice within the last four years a Justiceship has been offered to him, and both times he declined it. Both times he was engaged in Philippine problems, which had aroused his interest to the point where his personal ambition was entirely subordinated. Now, for the third time, he finds himself in the same situation, with even greater engagements drawing him away from the attraction of the judicial career.

The Secretary feels that he is entitled to go on with his work as Secretary of War. He is in the midst of three great problems, the Panama Canal construction, the Philippine situation, and the army-reform scheme.

The criticism of the canal work which has been made recently has aroused the Secretary to the point where he desires to demonstrate that the work has been well and efficiently done, and is going on rapidly and thoroughly. It has become a personal matter with him, and he does not wish to retire under fire. He wishes to confute his critics and point with satisfaction to the triumph of the work begun by him. He does not care to have it said that he failed, and was taken away from his task and that the President appointed in his place another man who succeeded where he had not.

At the same time he is more actively interested in securing the passage of legislation for the Philippines than he has ever been before, and he is very desirous of securing the enactment of certain bills effecting changes in the army organization, which are now pending in the House.

The President has not as yet definitely announced his purpose of drafting Mr. Taft. He has before him, in addition to Mr. Taft's name, those of eight or ten distinguished lawyers and jurists, among them being Judge Gray of Delaware, of the Third Judicial Circuit; Judge Willis Van Devanter of Cheyenne, Wyoming, of the Eighth Judicial Circuit; Judge Horace H. Lurton of Nashville, Tenn., of the Sixth Circuit; Solicitor General Hoyt of the Department of Justice; Judge Swasey of New Jersey, Representative Richard Wayne Parker of New Jersey, and Lloyd Bowers of Chicago, general counsel of the Chicago & Northwestern Railway.

Mr. Taft's friends still hope that one of these will be chosen, but the hope is not strong.

The prospective retirement of Justice Brown has renewed the reports of Chief Justice Fuller's retirement. So far as can be learned there is no prospect whatever of Mr. Fuller's resignation. His last utterance on the subject was that no Chief Justice had ever resigned, and that he was not going to set the fashion.

SHE STILL WORKS AT 102.

Mrs. Lovett Celebrates Her Birthday—Born in Jefferson's Term.

Special to The New York Times.

TARRYTOWN, March 10.—Mrs. Lavinia Lovett celebrated her 102d birthday to-day at her home in Beekman Avenue. Among the many who called to congratulate her were Mr. and Mrs. John D. Archbold, who drove up from their country seat and brought Mrs. Lovett a huge bouquet.

Mrs. Lovett was born in Sleepy Hollow during President Jefferson's term, and has resided in this section all her life. Her husband was born in 1800 and died in 1878. Mrs. Lovett has large real estate holdings here and looks after repairs, collects rents, and transacts her business personally. During the Fall she was quite ill, but now she is enjoying good health and besides caring for all her business does her own housework.

TELLS SENATOR HE LIES.

Salt Lake Man Interrupts Dubois Before Philadelphia Mothers' Congress.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, March 10.—From his place in the audience at the Mothers' Congress this evening V. S. Peet of Salt Lake City startled the audience by interrupting the remarks of Senator Dubois with the exclamation:

"Mr. Speaker, you are telling lies."

Senator Dubois paused and said:

"What is it, young man?"

"You have made several misstatements regarding the Mormon Church, Sir, which I did not hear you make several years ago when you were running for office."

"Are you a Mormon?" asked Senator Dubois.

"No, Sir. I am V. S. Peet of Salt Lake City. I defy you, Sir, and I offer a reward of $1,000 to you or any one who can prove the occurrence of plural marriage since the issue of the manifesto, and there never was any political influence exercised by Mormons. I have issued a pamphlet, which you will find at the door."

"Yes," interrupted the Senator, "I have one. I think it is the rottenest booklet ever issued."

"I do not know who you are," began the Senator again, "nor do I know what security you have for this reward you offer."

"I have told you who I am, and Col. Loose is my backer."

"And who is Col. Loose?"

"Bradstreet's will give his rating."

"Ah, yes; I have heard of the gentleman," remarked the Senator, and he walked from the platform.

POLICEMAN WINS AUTO RACE.

Leaps from Wheel Into Speeding Car After a Three-Mile Chase.

Bicycle Policeman John Dillon of the Westchester Station won out in a three-mile race with a touring car along the Country Club Road and Pelham Bay Parkway yesterday. The car, occupied by George Weed of Noroton Heights, a cotton merchant at 39 White Street, and Edward Hoyt, was going forty miles an hour when Dillon called to it to stop. The chauffeur only put on more speed. Dillon mounted his wheel and took up the chase, overtaking the auto at Pelham Bay Parkway, a mile away.

The machine dodged from one side of the road to the other, getting out of the way of vehicles, until two big coal wagons were overtaken. The chauffeur manoeuvred between them. Then a mail wagon was approached. The driver, John Diehl, swerved to the right, his wagon toppled over an embankment, and Diehl fell into a ditch. He escaped with slight bruises.

The chauffeur and the occupants of the machine saw the mail wagon overturned, but did not slow up.

Dillon managed to overtake the machine, catch hold of the rear seat, and spring in. He clung tight for a mile, when the chauffeur brought the auto to a stop. Magistrate Crane, who had left the bench, re-entered the Morrisania Court and accepted $300 bail for the chauffeur, furnished by Weed. Dillon had sprained his leg in getting into the machine.

SUBWAY PUNCHING MATCH.

Jostled Passengers Fight for Nearly Twenty Blocks in a Crowded Car.

Patrick Singleton, a broad-shouldered cooper, of 230 Wooster Street, Manhattan, stood upon the platform of a Lenox Avenue express train in the Subway during the rush hour last evening. At Fourteenth Street the crowd rushed into the car, and Singleton was jostled about in lively fashion. Finally, Solomon Culver of 224 West 122d Street, who was getting aboard, bumped into him.

"Sorry," said Culver, "but I'm being pushed from behind."

"Aw, cut it out," growled Singleton, striking Culver in the face. Culver struck back. The men fought all the way to the Grand Central Station. Women and children screamed, and the motorman tooted his whistle for help. When the Grand Central Station was reached Policeman Ring arrested the two men, who were still fighting, and took them to the East Fifty-first Street Station. Singleton was locked up.

THROWN BY RUNAWAY HORSE.

Policeman Badly Hurt in Trying to Stop a Grocer's Nag.

While attempting to stop a runaway horse yesterday afternoon Policeman Loughrin of the East 126th Street Station was thrown by the animal and painfully hurt.

The horse, which was owned by Amandus Whitthorn, a grocer of 2,244 Seventh Avenue, was left standing in the street by its driver, Edward Whitely. An automobile frightened the animal and it started on a mad gallop down Seventh Avenue. Loughrin ran out to grab the bridle. He missed, but caught the tailboard and climbed in. Then creeping out on the shafts he threw himself on the horse's neck and caught him by the nostrils in an effort to shut off his wind.

The horse struggled fiercely and was making for the sidewalk when he fell, throwing the policeman headlong. The runaway was caught. Dr. Reed of Harlem Hospital dressed Loughrin's injuries. The driver was arrested on a charge of negligence.

BIG RATE WAR THREATENED.

New York Central Has Decided to Take a Hand, it Is Said.

CHICAGO, March 10.—The management of the New York Central lines, according to the Record Herald, has decided to take part in the passenger rate war with both standard and differential roads. Unless the Erie and the Grand Trunk immediately agree to arbitration of the differential question notice will be sent to the Inter-State Commerce Commission of a reduction in Eastern fares by the Lake Shore, the Michigan Central, and the Nickel Plate Roads.

Such action would involve every line between Chicago and the Atlantic Seaboard in a bitter rate war. The threatened reduction in fares would affect every through train on the three lines except the Twentieth Century Limited and the Lake Shore Limited. The full standard fares plus the excess fares still would be exacted on these trains.

The Pennsylvania Road, it is said, will give its notice concurrently with the New York Central lines, reducing the rates on all trains over the Pennsylvania and the Panhandle Roads, except on the Pennsylvania Special and the Pennsylvania limited trains.

BALLOONS BREAK AWAY AND SPOIL BIG RACE

Stevens's "Ship" Carried Off by Gale Toward the Atlantic.

L'ALOUETTE IS SMASHED

It Also Is Carried Off, but Strikes Post and Collapses—Race Had Been Postponed.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSFIELD, Mass., March 10.—The first international balloon race in America under the auspices of the Aero Club, which was to have started this afternoon and which was postponed until to-morrow on account of the high winds prevailing, will not take place, as the balloon owned by Leo Stevens, broke away in a sudden gale at 9:25 o'clock to-night and possibly is sailing somewhere over the Atlantic Ocean if it has not been wrecked. The second balloon, L'Alouette, owned by Charles Levee, the French aeronaut, also broke away, but hit an iron post in the grounds of the Pittsfield gas works, and was ripped open and collapsed. The silk was saved, and is not too badly damaged to be repaired and used, but Stevens's is gone beyond recall.

The two balloons were anchored in the field from which they were to ascend on the property of the Pittsfield Gas Works. They had been filled with coal gas during the early morning and afternoon and were ready to ascend at 4 o'clock. It had taken six hours to fill both, owing to the interference of the wind, but the task was finally accomplished. By means of numerous sand bags they were weighted to the ground and the dying of the wind awaited to make a start. But the wind did not die, and it was decided to postpone the start until to-morrow morning.

It was necessary to impress a number of spectators gathered to witness the ascents to keep the huge globes under control. Even then, Charles Levee's L'Alouette broke away and was hurled against the crowds of spectators, dragging its sandbags behind it. Its network was broken in a dozen places, but the quickness of those in charge of the experiments enabled them to secure it before serious damage was done. The breaks were repaired and the huge spheres more securely fastened.

But no one reckoned on such a gale as sprung up to-night, and in spite of all precautions the tethering ropes of both were broken. Stevens's loss is set at $1,200. Levee's damage can be repaired for $100. Levee advised against allowing the balloons to remain inflated, but others thought that they were protected and would ride out the gale. The Blue Hill Observatory near Boston has been instructed to watch out for Stevens's balloon, and there is a faint hope that it may be recovered.

The balloon was made at Stevens's airship works in Ninth Avenue, New York, for the Aero Club, and the race which was to have been made to-morrow was to test the relative qualities of the French and American balloons. It had a capacity of 345 cubic meters of gas and was about three-quarters full. It weighed about a ton filled and was about forty feet in diameter. The balloon was marked in large, distinctive lettering "Aero Club, No. 1, New York, Leo Stevens."

Watchmen at the field say that the wind threw off the sand bags and extra bags with which the balloon was weighted down, and that it slipped out from under the net and rose high up into the air and proceeded in an easterly direction. Augustus Post and Cortlandt Field Bishop of the Aero Club, after a conference to-night, announced that experiments here would be postponed for a time, and it is understood there will be no further attempts at ascensions until there is mild weather, probably not until May.

Ten thousand people stood for hours in the chilling air, hoping that the weather would moderate.

At 4:30 o'clock the balloons were filled. It was decided to send up a pilot balloon to ascertain the direction of the wind, and one went swinging away to the east with a rush and sailed out of sight over the Hoosac range of hills. It was while this was under way that Stevens's balloon, "Aero Club, No. 1," suddenly burst away from its anchorage and at a single bound cleared thirty feet, knocking down a row of spectators and dragging its sand ballast after it. There was a stampede of spectators, but the call for assistance brought half a hundred to Stevens's aid in subduing it. The force of the wind had torn the overnet in a dozen places.

It was not until close to 7 o'clock that the project to fly was abandoned.

DOWIE DRAFT NOT HONORED.

Returned from Zion Bank to the First Apostle at Jamaica.

CHICAGO, March 10.—It became known to-day that payment of a draft on the Zion Bank sent by Dr. Dowie from Jamaica had been refused. The draft was returned to the First Apostle by Deacon Alexander Granger, Financial Manager of Zion, with a polite note suggesting that he curtail his expenses as every one in Zion City was doing.

This action was taken after a conference with acting General Overseer Voliva and others of the new financial cabinet. The amount of the draft was not stated, but Deacon Granger explained that it had been refused because Dr. Dowie's personal account in the bank was exhausted.

CASHIER SCARED DESPERADO.

Leveled Revolver at Man Who Said He Had Nitro-Glycerine.

Special to The New York Times.

UNIONTOWN, Penn., March 10.—A man about 28 years of age entered the First National Bank at Salem to-day, and finding Cashier Charles H. Hempstead alone, demanded money, at the same time displaying a small bottle which he said contained nitro-glycerine.

Hempstead quickly leveled his revolver at the stranger, who beat a hasty retreat, saying he would see him again. Constable Allaman gave chase, but the man escaped. His identity is unknown.

HUGHES WILL NOT TESTIFY.

Records Show All He Knows About Corporations in Politics.

WASHINGTON, March 10.—Charles E. Hughes, counsel in the insurance investigation in New York, has declined to appear before the House Committee on Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress to testify concerning the prevention of corporation contributions to political campaigns.

Mr. Hughes stated in a letter to Representative Gaines of West Virginia, Chairman of the committee, that he cannot throw any more light on the subject than is contained in copies of the proceedings of the insurance hearing.

ROCKEFELLER ON MARS.

So His Family Physician Says—Playing Interplanetary Golf.

Special to The New York Times.

CLEVELAND, March 10.—John D. Rockefeller, according to his family physician, Dr. Hamilton Biggar, Sr., is on Mars. Dr. Biggar, responding to inquiries made over the telephone, said:

"Mr. Rockefeller is on Mars. That's a planet, you know, near Jupiter. He's up there playing golf. One might have heard the whacks quite plainly. One of the golf balls went clear over to Jupiter."

MIDNIGHT FIRE IN HOTEL.

Guests of Kensington in Newark Flee in Night Clothes—One Overcome.

NEWARK, N. J., March 10.—A midnight fire in the Kensington Hotel, at Park and Mulberry Streets, caused much excitement among the fifty guests, many of whom were in bed.

Night Clerk Burgesser saw smoke coming from the basement. He rushed through the hotel giving the alarm. Some of the guests fled in scanty atire.

Albert E. Cook, a book canvasser, asleep on the second floor, was overcome by smoke. He was taken out unconscious, but was revived. The fire started in the cellar from an unknown cause. The damage was slight.

MOTOR CARS FOR RAILWAY.

Lake Shore Orders Seventy-five for Competition with Trolleys.

CLEVELAND, March 10.—The Lake Shore Railroad has ordered seventy-five gasoline motors at the Collinwood shops, and they will soon be installed for suburban traffic.

It is the purpose of the railway company to enter into competition with the electric roads on suburban traffic.

MONTREAL EXPRESS CRASH.

Flier from Boston Dashes Into a Freight Train—Two Men Hurt.

MANCHESTER, N. H., March 10.—The Canadian express on the Southern Division of the Boston & Maine Railroad, bound from Boston for Montreal, ran on to an open switch and crashed into the rear of a freight train standing on the siding about a mile south of this city today.

The locomotive and cars of the express remained on the rails, but several of the freight cars were demolished. Engineer Amos Messer and Conductor Ambrose Brown of the express were slightly injured. None of the passengers was hurt.

TREATY ABOVE STATE LAW.

Foreign Consul Has Right to Administer Estate of Subject Here.

BOSTON, March 10.—Declaring that a treaty between the United States and a foreign country is paramount to the constitution or laws of a State which conflicts with it, the full bench of the Supreme Court to-day decided that by a treaty between this country and Russia of 1832, containing the most-favored-nation clause, the Russian Vice-Consul was entitled to be appointed administrator of the estate to a Russian subject dying here.

The subject had property but no relatives except his widow and children who live in Russia. The right of the Vice-Consul under the treaty is held to be supreme over the right of a public administrator who would be appointed ordinarily under the laws of the State.

FAST TRAINS TO PACIFIC.

Hill and Harriman Lines Competing for Mail Contract.

Special to The New York Times.

OMAHA, March 10.—Another race against time between transcontinental railways will be inaugurated April 1, when the Harriman and Hill systems will begin a contest for the contract to carry the mails to the Pacific Northwest.

The Government is so well pleased with the fast mail train to San Francisco recently put on that it has asked for a train to Portland and Seattle. Mr. Harriman has arranged a schedule which will clip a full day from the present time.

It will run over the Northwestern from Chicago to Omaha, the Union Pacific, and the Oregon Short Line. Mr. Hill will use the Burlington from Chicago to Billings, Mon., and Northern Pacific to the coast.

1,200 FRENCH MINERS BURIED; HOPE LOST

Attempts at Rescue Given Up, Galleries Having Fallen In.

600 MEN TAKEN OUT ALIVE.

Disaster Appalls France—Ministers Hurry to the Scene from Paris —Elysee Ball Abandoned.

PARIS, March 10.—A mining catastrophe of incalculable horror and magnitude has stricken the great coal centre of Northern France. An explosion of firedamp at 7 o'clock this morning carried death and destruction throughout the network of coal mines centred at Courrières, and fire followed the explosion, making rescues difficult and almost impossible.

The intense excitement and confusion in the vicinity prevented early estimates of the loss of life, but a dispatch received here at 4:35 P. M. said 1,404 miners were still entombed and probably lost.

At 8:45 o'clock this evening a brief dispatch from Lille announced the awful total of 1,193 dead. A later telegram says the number of entombed men is estimated at 1,219.

A telegram sent from Courrières at 8 P. M. said that the attempts to rescue the imprisoned miners had been given up, the galleries in the mine having fallen in. Rescue parties that came to the surface late in the afternoon said that further attempts to save the lives of the miners were useless.

Another telegram received in Paris was to the effect that rescuers were still at work when it was sent, but that they were making slight progress, their work being most difficult and dangerous. Up to the present time 150 bodies have been taken from Pits 10 and 11, all the men having been asphyxiated.

One of the engineers of the mine told The Journal's correspondent that the cage was unable to descend more than 150 meters, while the gallery where the miners were entombed was fifty meters further down. Rescuers who descended in this cage reported as having heard distinctly imprisoned men tapping on the water pipes, but the hope that was kindled by this statement was extinguished by Engineer Leon, who estimated that it would take eight days to dislodge the débris in the shafts, and that meanwhile the miners would die either from starvation or asphyxiation.

All France has been profoundly shocked by the disaster, which is said to be the greatest in the history of Continental mining.

President Fallières sent his secretary, accompanied by Minister of Public Works Gautier and Minister of the Interior Dublef on a special train to the scene of the disaster. Invitations to a ball which was to be given at the Elysée to-night were canceled.

The Ministerial crisis was temporarily forgotten, Senators and Deputies joining in the universal public manifestations of sorrow.

The scene of the catastrophe is the mountainous mining region near Lens, in the department of Pas-de-Calais. Here are huddled small hamlets of the mine workers who operate the most productive coal mines in France. The subterranean chambers form a series of tunnels. Six of the outlets are near Lens, and others are at Courrières, Verdun, and many other points. The output of these mines is particularly combustible, and is largely used in the manufacture of gas and in smelting. About 2,000 miners work the group of mines and, with their families, make a population of from 6,000 to 8,000.

The catastrophe occurred shortly after 1,795 men had descended into the mine this morning. There was a deafening explosion, and then the cages and mining apparatus were hurled from the mouth of the Courrières mine. Men and horses near by outside the mine were either stunned or killed. The roof of the mine office was blown off.

Immediately following the explosion flames burst from the mouth of the pit, driving back those without who sought to enter and dooming those within.

The work of attempting to rescue the miners was hastily begun by officials, engineers, and miners from the surrounding mines, who formed parties and made heroic efforts to penetrate the smoke and foul gases and bring out the imprisoned men.

The families of the entombed miners crowded about the shaft seeking husbands or fathers and threatening, in their efforts to obtain details, to force back the gendarmes, who kept them from the mouth of the pit.

Those persons who were rescued were terribly burned. The latest estimates place the number taken out at 591.

Throughout the afternoon the heroic efforts at rescue were continued, but nightfall brought the conviction that the entombed men had been suffocated, and the dispatch from Lille at 8:45 P. M. announcing the number of dead at 1,193 appears to remove the last hope that others may be brought to the surface alive.

Reports in regard to the immediate cause of the disaster are still meagre and conflicting. A dispatch from Lille states that a smoldering fire started last night in the Cecil pit of the Courrières Mine, at a depth of 270 meters, where masonry works were proceeding.

The Chief Engineer of the department of Pas-de-Calais says the fire started in the pit at 3 o'clock last Monday afternoon, and that the engineers coped with it as best they were able, but that yesterday, being unable to master it, they closed all the outlets. Fissures, he thinks, must have formed which permitted the gases to escape, and these, becoming ignited, resulted in an explosion.

One report says that the explosion occurred in Pits 4 and 11, and that the flames spread to all the communicating pits. A few miners escaped after the first explosion, and at 10 A. M. the first cages came up with about a dozen half-suffocated men, who were taken to the nearest hospital. Among them was M. Voisin, an engineer, who had attempted or organize succor.

Toward noon a few more injured miners were brought up, and two bodies, the first recovered, were taken to the surface. By that time assistance was reaching Courrières from all parts of the Department of Pas-de-Calais, and a large force of volunteers were soon taking part in the efforts to rescue the miners who were still alive, and to recover the bodies of the dead.

The last rescues were effected at 8 o'clock to-night, when a rescue party at Courrières brought out eesvral engineers, two of whom were unconscious but who were revived under medical attention.

Foreman Lecomte came up from the mine this afternoon and reported a terrifying scene below.

One of the rescued miners, Pierre Dasson, said:

"I was 280 meters from the shaft, when I heard a deafening explosion. The air immediately became rarefied and filled with poisonous vapors. Instinctively I groped my way toward the bottom of the shaft of Pit 2, near which I found a number of suffocating comrades, who had fallen helpless in the galleries and were crying for assistance. I assisted them to mount the trolley, and thus they were enabled to reach the shaft."

The most agonizing scenes are witnessed at the pit mouths. Late this afternoon the crowd was reported to be showing signs of impatience at what it considered the slow progress being made by the rescuers.

The populace of the district is thrown into a state of stupor by the disaster, which affects every household.

Twenty-five thousand people are around the pit mouths to-night.

THEY CELEBRATED OSWEGO.

Virtues of the Up-State City Emphasized at a Dinner.

One hundred and fifty past and present citizens of Oswego gathered last night at the Hotel Astor for their annual dinner. Like other societies, celebrating the home of their birth, they were given to oratory, telling what a splendid city Oswego is and has been.

Ex-Mayor John D. Higgins of Oswego acted as toastmaster. The chief speaker was Luther Wright Mott, President of the Oswego Chamber of Commerce. He said that if you should ask any policeman in his city what the population might be, he would say it was not less than 1,000,000 persons. Questioned further, the same official would acknowledge that there were only 22,000 people really living in Oswego. Mr. Mott, however, called attention to the comparative values of quantity and quality, to the distinct advantage of the latter and Oswego.

A. S. Gleason, George Neal Wheeler, Charles S. Brackett, Francis E. Hamilton, James G. Tyler, Samuel H. Wandell, Frederick B. Shepherd, and Judson D. Remington were among the Oswegans present.

One of the diners said that he had it on excellent authority that the former residents of Hohokus, who had fled to New York, were planning a reunion and bankwet.

MR. FYNES OUT FOR HIMSELF.

Gets Two Theatre Sites and Will Have His Own Vaudeville Circuit.

J. Austin Fynes, formerly general manager for F. F. Proctor, contemplates building up a vaudeville circuit of his own. This news comes in the form of the recorded transfers of two valuable pieces of theatrical property, which, it is understood, are merely forerunners of many more such pacels of property of this nature to be acquired by Mr. Fynes.

They represent an investment of nearly $700,000, and include the double purchase outright of the Bijou Theatre in Jersey City and of a very valuable plot of Harlem property—the northwest corner of Fifth Avenue and 125th Street.

The facts of the purchases became known yesterday through the recording in the County Clerk's office of the deed to the 125th Street corner, the title to which is vested in the International Amusement and Realty Company of this city. A dispatch from Albany last night stated that this company had obtained a certificate of incorporation early this week. The capital stock is put at $100,000, fully paid in. Mr. Fynes is President of the company.

The Harlem plot was bought from Messrs. Lynch & McCoy at a reported price of about $350,000.

These two properties are the first links in the chain which Mr. Fynes is forming. He will take possession of the Bijou Theatre at once, and will boog high class vaudeville for immediate presentation. Daily mainées will be given at popular prices.

Brooklyn will be the fourth objective point, and Mr. Fynes expects to place a theatre there.

Mr. Fynes is a native of Boston, about 46 years old, and came to this city twenty years ago to become managing editor of The New York Clipper. Afterward he was made editor of The Evening Sun. He identified himself with B. F. Keith in 1893.

"TINY TIM" COT ASSURED.

Dickens Fellowship Gives a Successful Recital to Aid Little Cripples.

There will be a "Tiny Tim" cot hereafter in the Home for Crippled Children at Bath Beach that is to be run by the Children's Aid Society. The Manhattan Dickens Fellowship gave a reception recital last night in the east room of the Waldorf-Astoria, which was so financially successful as to make the endowment of the "Tiny Tim" cot a certainty.

In his introductory address George Cary Eggleston, honorary President of the Manhattan Dickens Fellowship, told some stories about crippled children who, he said, start in life without any hope for themselves at all. If they are to live, maybe to irradiate light into the lives of all those around them, as did the "Tiny Tim" of Dickens, they must be helped a little toward some fresh air and light such as they could get in the home established by the Children's Aid Society.

Marian Leland recited several selections that reflected the spirit of the occasion. Bernard Landino, a tenor, sang Tosti's "Non t'amo piu" and two other sings. Florence Pratt gave Wagner's "The Ride of the Valkyries" on the piano and three other numbers.

RECLUSE DEAD; NECK BROKEN.

Thurston Probably Fell Against Stove —Body Found After Two Days.

OYSTER BAY, L. I., March 10.—Frank Thurston was found dead in his home at Locust Valley this morning. His neck was broken. Dr. Seaman said he had been dead at least two days. Thurston had lived alone since the death of his mother some months ago.

The body was found on the kitchen floor, the head close to the stove. The hands were thrust into the trousers pockets. It is believed that Thurston was walking about the room, when he tripped and pitched forward, his head striking the stove, so that his neck was broken. There is no suspicion of foul play.

DIED ON WAY TO FUNERAL.

Miss Foshour, Stricken in a Street Car, Expires in a Drug Store.

Miss Mary A. Foshour, 50 years old, of 402 West 146th Street, became ill on a Myrtle Avenue car at Raymond Street, Brooklyn, yesterday, while she, with her sister, was on her way to attend a funeral. She was carried, unconscious, into a drug store and an ambulance was called from Brooklyn Hospital. Miss Foshour died, however, before Dr. Moore arrived. Death was due to heart disease.

Miss Foshour was the daughter of a wealthy real estate dealer, now dead. Her mother was a relative of the late Cardinal McCloskey, in whose church work Miss Foshour took an active part. The body was removed to Manhattan. The funeral arrangements have not yet been made public.

NO; NOT A BLIZZARD, SUNSHINE IN A MINUTE

And the Weather Man's Telephone Prediction Comes True.

ALMOST A HURRICANE HERE

Sixty-five-Mile Gale Makes Walking Hazardous—Queer Little Snow Flurries Keep Folks Guessing.

Half a dozen little snow flurries that, it was said, were parts of the rear guard of the big snowstorm that skipped New York on Friday and landed in Boston, stopped in New York long enough yesterday afternoon to let the population of this town know that there was snow on tap after all, this Winter, even if New York had got less than 5 per cent. of what should have come its way.

The biggest of the flurries happened along at exactly 4:25 o'clock in the afternoon. It was thickest in the lower part of the city, especially in Battery Park, while up in the middle section of the city, in the Sixties and Seventies, the sun was shining brightly all the time. Persons up town were congratulating themselves on the outlook for more Summer weather at the same moment that the Battery Park brigade of bench warmers and seawall rail hangers was hustling for the Aquarium to get out of the way of a promising blizzard. It looked just like the beginning of the one that struck this city eighteen years ago to-morrow.

While the flurry was thickest in Battery Park—and it was so thick that a man could not see ten feet ahead—somebody ran into a near-by drugstore and called up 3000 Cortlandt, the official telephone of the local Weather Bureau. Forecaster Emery answered the 'phone.

"It's another blizzard, isn't it, Mr. Emery?" asked the man who rang up.

"It certainly is not," answered Mr. Emery, laughing. "It is only a puff, and the sun will be shining by the time you get out of the booth."

The forecaster was right, this time.

Ten minutes passed and the Battery Park boarders were all back in their old places when, all of a sudden, another fluryy that was hustling to catch up with the one that had just started up the East River on the way to Boston came along. This one lasted less than a minute.

There were other stray puffs reported from the four corners of the city during the day, too, but while those puffs were getting in their work the sun was shining in other portions of the city that were to get flurries a few minutes later. So it was all over the city between 4:30 and 5 o'clock. Snowing here, sun shining there, and wind blowing everywhere.

As for the wind it blew a gale all over the city for several hours, beginning before noon. At 2:30 P. M. it was almost a hurricane, and the Weather Bureau records show a velocity of sixty-five miles an hour. When the big flurry struck the city at 4:30 o'clock the wind had reduced speed, but was still making a respectable fifty miles an hour.

When the wind was at its height walking was mighty hard work in the exposed parts of the city. Women's dresses acted as sails, while bareheaded men were to be seen every two or three blocks chasing headgear that had been caught by the winds and whisked, whither no one knows.

One policeman said that he was beating his way north on Broadway, and was near Duane Street when the wind reached its maximum velocity. So fierce were the gusts, he said, that he saw a cab almost blown across the street. How the horse managed to steady himself and withstand such a terrific onslaught was a mystery.

As for the temperature, it commenced to fall early in the afternoon, and the Weather Bureau predicted that it would continue to do so throughout the night. Whether there would be any more snow flurries to-day such as made yesterday afternoon memorable, was not stated.

SNOW SQUALLS MET ON BAY.

Blotted Out Sky Line and Harbor Craft, Then Vanished.

Two snow squalls, coming from almost opposite directions, met off the Battery yesterday afternoon, had a ten-minute tussle, and then passed on, leaving the white-crested waves and snow-coated, bobbing tugs behind.

The first flurry swept up from the southwest diagonally across the bay from the direction of Constable Hook. Seen from the decks of ferryboats on the Jersey side, it presented a solid front of dull gray. The sunlight fled before it, and the Brooklyn sky line slowly melted away. The storm seemed to halt over Governors Island, waiting in challenge to its antagonist from the northwest. The second blow was an almost exact duplicate of the first, and as it swept across the North River and lower Manhattan it blotted them out almost instantly. The air was filled with heavy snow flakes that flew across the river in an almost straight line.

When the two storms met there was a swirl like a small tornado. The gray clouds turned almost black, a little cockleshell of a tug that had but a moment before bobbed about on the choppy waves, disappeared, and the flags over Castle Williams faded away. The smoke from passing harbor craft was caught up in the eddying currents of air and went straight skyward. Then nothing was to be seen but the gray-black cloud.

All this lasted but a few minutes and then the two squalls parted. The sun broke through, the little tug reappeared, and shining with the wet from the melted snow and flying spray from the waves, bobbed and courtesied to the retreating blackness. The flag over Castle Williams once more snapped to the breeze and the storm was over.

BARK ADAM SPIES ASHORE.

Strikes on Long Beach in Heavy Blow —Crew Safe.

Special to The New York Times.

LONG BEACH, L. I., March 10.—The bark Adam W. I. Spies, 1,117 tons, from Buenos Ayres for New York, was driven ashore by the high wind early this morning near the Long Beach Life-Saving Station. She was still stuck in the sand a quarter of a mile off shore this evening. Owing to the heavy sea the crew of the Long Beach Life-Saving Station did not venture aboard the bark, from which, by signal, they had assurances that no help was needed.

The bark is 185 feet long and 34 feet team. She was built in Newburyport, Mass., twenty-two years ago for the Hutchings Brothers of 31 South Street, Manhattan. Capt. Hines and twelve seamen are aboard. The Spies is heavily laden with a cargo of bones. It has not been learned whether the lookout misunderstood the lights along the coast or not. A wrecking tug hurried from New York in response to a telephonic summons and has stood off all day awaiting an opportunity to release the bark. The life-savers believe the bark can be floated when the wind subsides. This evening the wind was decreasing.

WIND BLOWS DOWN A HOUSE.

Telegraph Poles Stop Wreckage from Crushing Carful of Passengers.

A frame house in course of construction at Fulton Street and Vanderbilt Avenue, Jamaica, was blown down by yesterday's high winds. It was being built by the Court Square Realty Company of 180 Montague Street, Brooklyn, for Michael Pette of Jamaica. The wind had a whirling motion, and tore the building to pieces.

At the moment the house was blown down, at 1:30 o'clock, a trolley car well filled with passengers, mostly women, was passing on Fulton Street. Two telegraph poles stood between the building and the car. The northerly and easterly sides of the building toppled over against the telegraph poles just as the car passed and hung there. The remainder of the house was blown to splinters by the whirling force of the wind.

Supt. Bergen of the Building Department will make an investigation to determine if the building was faultily constructed.

KRACKE FOR NAVAL OFFICER.

President Makes Up Slate for New York Port Officials.

WASHINGTON, March 10.—It was announced at the White House to-day that Frederick J. H. Kracke had been appointed by the President to be Naval Officer at the Port of New York, in succession to Robert H. Sharkey.

The appointment of Mr. Kracke ends a spirited contest of several months. Mr. Sharkey has been in office for eight years, and was strongly backed for reappointment. An investigation of his office was made by the Civil Service Commission, and the President decided not to reappoint him. Mr. Kracke was indorsed by the combined Congressional delegation from Brooklyn and by Senator Platt.

President Roosevelt also announced today that he would reappoint Nevada N. Stranahan as Collector of the Port of New York, J. S. Clarkson as Surveyor of the Port of New York, and Gen. James P. Kerwin as Pension Agent.

The nominations of Edward B. Jordan to succeed himself as Collector of Internal Revenue for Brooklyn and J. H. Haubert as United States Marshal for the Eastern District of New York will also be made. The last two appointments were decided upon some time ago.

The appointments announced to-day practically conclude the nominations to Federal offices to be made for New York.

F. J. H. Kracke, named as Naval Officer at the Port of New York, is the Republican leader of the Eighteenth Assembly District of Brooklyn. He is looked upon as a Woodruff man, and his appointment appears to be agreeable to most of the party leaders in the county. Mr. Kracke has for some time held the office of Assistant State Commissioner of Agriculture.

A HAT-CHASING GRAFT.

How Giuseppe Converted a Parental Whipping Into a Feast.

Giuseppe Angelico stood with a stick in his hand yesterday afternoon in the Cave of the Winds in the financial district. Giuseppe seemed to be dreaming of the blue skies of Naples, when he was spied by his father, Michael, who shovels dirt and has been doing the same thing since he brought the "baba" to this country at the beginning of the Subway excavation.

To see the boy so trifling filled the heart of his father with anger. But Giuseppe, who seemed to be loafing with the meditative eyes of a cow, was alert to every danger and every opportunity. As his enraged parent rushed for him the boy ducked and slid his stick between his father's legs with the result that Michael fell heavily.

The dreamy Giuseppe spied a hat sailing down the street and dodged among trolley cars and trucks until he had captured somebody's headgear. Then he began to wipe off the dirt from the hat, which he handed over to a bald-headed man very much out of breath. He received 50 cents in payment for his services.

Meantime the practical Michael had gone home to tell his patient wife that their son was a criminal, who stood on street corners to whistle and loaf when he ought to be selling newspapers. And when Maria, the wife, had fed him with spaghetti cooked in garlic, Michael sat down to smoke his pipe and caress a cane ready for the homecoming of his boy. He fell asleep.

There was a whistling on the stairs of the strange air "Yankee Doodle." The mother leaned over the banister to whisper a caution, but Giuseppe would not listen. He stormed into the room, emptied his pockets of half dollars, quarters, and dimes, enough to make a sum almost equal to what his father could make in a week. Then he tickled his father in the ribs with his stick. Jumping back, he pointed with the stick to the silver.

"A t'ief," said the old man.

"No, no," said Giuseppe. "Better graft."

Then he explained that though there was profit in selling newspapers after school hours, yet on a windy day there was more money in rescuing hats. A botttle of red wine was bought, and when the boy had eaten to his heart's content three candles were lighted before the lithograph of the Madonna and the Child, hanging in the family bedroom.

SHE GRABBED THE TRANSFERS

New Rule Fractured by a Woman—Altercation Ties Up Line.

The Metropolitan Street Railway's new rule that transfers must be obtained on payment of fare or not at all was the cause of the liveliest kind of a row on a northbound Ninth Avenue car yesterday morning. Thomas Howland, the conductor, and Mary Russell of 320 West Forty-first Street, the passenger, blocked traffic on the Ninth Avenue branch for nearly fifteen minutes; a call was sent to Roosevelt Hospital for an ambulance, and both persons finally were arrested on counter-charges of assault. Magistrate Whitman, in the West Side Court, made some side remarks about the new transfer order that were not appreciated by the railway company's representative.

Miss Russell is about three times the size of the conductor. She says she got on at Forty-second Street and Ninth Avenue and asked Howland for a transfer as soon as she had paid her fare, and he told her to wait. When she insisted that Howland give her a transfer, he punched her in the face, she says, knocked two teeth down her throat, and cut her about the mouth. She showed the bruises.

Howland denied that he struck the woman, and declared that she never asked for a transfer until she was about to leave the car at Fifty-ninth Street. He refused and she grabbed some transfers from his hand, bit him in both hands, and fought like mad.

"It took six conductors and motormen and a policeman to get her off the car," he said.

"My opinion about this case, said the Magistrate, "is that this woman was entitled to a transfer. She paid her fare, and there is no getting around it."

He paroled both prisoners until to-day, instructing them to bring witnesses.

OVATION TO THE GREENS.

Acquitted ex-Senator and Wife Enter Binghamton in Triumph.

BINGHAMTON, March 10.—A remarkable demonstration of welcome was accorded to-night to ex-State Senator George E. Green and Mrs. Green on their return from Washington, where Mr. Green on Thursday was acquitted on the charge of conspiracy to defraud the Government in connection with the postal cases.

A delegation of citizens went to New Milford to meet the train, and at most of the stations between Scranton and Binghamton crowds were assembled. They burned green fire and greeted the couple with cheers.

More than 5,000 people were at the station in this city, and most of them afterward formed in line, with three bands, and acted as an escort to Mr. Green's home. Houses and stores were decorated and illuminated, and the entire way was a blaze of red and green fire. The couple were cheered as they passed through the streets.

Some of the friends of the Greens had taken possession of the house and had decorated it with flowers. From the porch Mr. Green made a brief speech, expressing his appreciation for the welcome, in which he said:

"I have had a fair trial by an honest jury of my peers, before a fearless, just, and upright Judge, and am satisfied with the result."

DROPPED FROM POLICE FORCE

McGuire, Named in the Claiche Case, Has Been Missing a Week.

Policeman William McGuire of the East Eighty-eighth Street Station, who was recently transferred from the Tenderloin as a result of disclosures in the Berthe Claiche case, was dropped from the police force at midnight last night for being absent from duty for five days without leave. McGuire disappeared from his home at 465 Seventy-second Street, Bay Ridge, about a week ago.

CHINA NOT BOYCOTTING US, SAYS PRINCE TSAI

Declares We've Simply Excluded Chinese Buyers.

SPEAKS AT UNIVERSITY CLUB

Prince and Chinese Minister Have Official Denials of Troubles in China —Goes to Washington To-day.

Sitting between J. Pierpont Morgan and Morris K. Jesup, the Chinese Prince, Tsai Tse, expressed himself as being out of place last night at the dinner tendered to him at the University Club. Earlier in the day the Prince had been the guest of Gen. Frederick D. Grant at Governors Island. He got back to the Fifth Avenue Hotel just in time to prepare for the dinner in the evening.

Sir Chentung Liang Cheng, the Chinese Minister to this country, was also at the dinner, with his Excellency, Li Cheng To, Chinese Minister to Belgium, and his Excellency Chi Heng, Governor of the Shangtung Province.

Po Jou, who acts as special secretary and interpreter for the Prince, and the managing secretary of the commission, Kee Owyoung, were also there. The other thirty-four Chinamen, including Hi, Lo, Jack, and the Game, who are attachés of the commission, remained in their rooms at the Fifth Avenue Hotel until the Prince and his party got back. Reporters were barred from the dinner tendered the Prince by Mr. Morgan.

It was learned, however, that Prince Tsai made a speech in Chinese, which was translated by Secretary Po. In it the Prince expressed himself as highly pleased with the reception he got on his way from Seattle to New York.

He said he had seen much to convince him that the United States was a great commercial country, and, while it was his mission to study European conditions and not ours, he had learned much here which would prove of much value upon his return to his native land.

He thought that the people of this country were laboring under a misapprehension in believing that the Chinese were boycotting American goods. The trouble was that Americans excluded Chinese buyers from coming here to purchase goods manufactured in the United States. While a merchant ordinarily might come here, his buyer was not permitted to enter the country unless he could prove that he was a member of the firm for which he sought to purchase goods.

The Prince said that, in his opinion, if New York merchants found their buyers shut out from China they certainly would feel offended, and might decide to find a market elsewhere. That was the situation with Chinese merchants. The Chinese wanted the friendship of the Americans, and he hoped we would not believe the stories cabled here about boycotting and rioting in China. The Prince added that he had just been informed officially from China that there was no truth in the stories of trouble there.

Sir Chentung, the Chinese Minister, said that yesterday he had received, through the legation at Washington, many dispatches from the Peking Government confirming the press dispatches of Friday to the effect that absolute quiet prevailed throughout China. China was not on the verge of a revolution, he said, and the Chinese Government wanted these alarming reports contradicted right now.

Conditions in China had been exaggerated, he said. The stories circulated abroad had reached the people of China and the Government has issued a proclamation calling upon the people to preserve peace at any cost in order that China might be assured of her position in the capitals of the world. It was a difficult matter, Sir Chentung said, for the Chinese Government to find out just where these misleading reports originated. It was rather discouraging to have to deny them so often.

In an interview given out earlier in the day Sir Chentung said:

"I must say with all the emphasis at my command that there will be no general outbreak nor anti-foreign uprising in China. The scenes of the Boxer days will never be repeated. China recognizes her obligations to humanity. To the United States China owes a lasting debt of gratitude for the friendly acts of the late Secretary Hay.

"As an illustration of how false impressions have grown as to conditions in China, I may cite a cablegram from Hongkong last night, which stated that the Viceroy of Canton had entertained Admiral Train of the United States Navy, and added that this was the first intercourse the Viceroy had had with foreigners in many months. The dispatch went no further, and naturally the inference was drawn that the Viceroy was intensely anti-foreign, and that the relations between him and the foreign representatives had been strained for months.

"It is true the Viceroy has had no intercourse with foreigners. But the dispatch should have gone back a little further, and stated that the Viceroy has had intercourse with no one, for the reason that he has been a very sick man, and is not now even expected to live any great length of time. He was ill when Mr. Taft was in China, and was unable at that time to attend any functions in the Secretary's honor.

"In such a vast empire as China we are bound to have murders and rioting, just as any large country has them. But it is idle to say that there are not reasonable causes behind these disorders. Take the murders of missionaries at Lienchau and again at Nanchang. There were incontrovertible causes which led to violence. They were sporadic incidents, they occurred without warning, and there is no form of human protection which could have avoided them.

"No nation in the world has been able to wipe the crime of murder from its records. Nothing the Government could have done could have stopped these murders. The Government left nothing undone afterward to restore order and to further protect the lives of foreign residents."

To-day the Prince's party will go to Washington and to-morrow night the Prince will be the guest of honor at a dinner given by Sir Chentung. Wednesday the Prince and the other members of his party will sail for Europe on the Baltic.

MAINE CITIES ISOLATED.

Wires All Down for Twenty-four Hours After Storm.

PORTLAND, Me., March 10.—The efforts of hundreds of linemen to-day to restore wire communication, which was almost completely cut off throughout the State by the storm last night, were partially successful in western Maine.

The telegraph and telephone companies this afternoon got into connection with Boston for the first time in twenty-four hours. Several wires are working as far east as Waterville.

The storm was particularly severe along the coast. The cities of Bangor, Lewiston, Auburn, Bath, and Rockland report their complete isolation.

RECTOR, A NEW CENTRAL.

It Includes 3,500 Downtown Telephones and Opened Last Night.

At 8 o'clock last night the telephone "Central" for 3,500 downtown business men changed from "Cortlandt," "Broad," or "John" to "Rector." When business begins to-morrow morning in the territory bounded by Broadway, Nassau, Battery Place, the North River, and Thames Street all telephoning New York will have new telephone books, and in them will be "Rector," the newest maid of the switchboard.

After almost half a year of groping among the tightly packed wires in their leaden jackets under the busiest streets in New York the 3,500 telephones making the new "Central" were all cut off from their old terminals yesterday, and the last test had found every number responsive to the call of "Rector." The work necessary to install the new switchboard and bring the wires to it required the greatest patience and care.

Everything was done on paper save the direct cutting away of the wires from their old terminals and connecting them with the new. The switchboard was built in sections and fitted snugly in the building running from Dey to Cortlandt Street, just west of Broadway. The great masses of wires in their cases, connecting with the board in front of the 150 or more Misses "Rector" on their high stools, had all been hunted up in charts of underground New York. Manholes had been picked out and down into them the workmen had scrambeld to saw away at the cables, open them, and then with delicate apparatus to try each of the little bits of copper electrically until the right connections were made. Some of the cables contained 200 wires and others held as many as 600.

The "Cortlandt" Central was getting too "busy" for the good of the service; 2,000 telephones were cut from its board. The "Broad" central had 1,000 more telephones to answer than Miss "Broad" could tackle with speed sufficient to satisfy the busy Wall Street brokers, and "John" also had to be relieved of 500 numbers.

With two wires for each telephone that meant the splicing of 7,000 wires in the cut-off from the three old centrals to make the new "Rector." It was a big task, but time and events skid along so speedily in downtown New York that even the quick-speaking "central" girl was being overtaxed. And now men are at work making two more new centrals, which will become new acquaintances of New Yorkers next November. These centrals will relieve the Franklin and John Street sections.

The young women who climbed on their high stools last night to become thereafter "Rector," did not find the switchboard new, for they have been in training for over a month.

CHERRY HILL AWAITS HIM.

Col. Padden Arranges Fitting Welcome for a Rouss's Point Exile.

Into the private office of Col. M. Clarence Padden, who became Water Register recently after having served many years as Secretary of War in the Sullivan Cabinet, there strolled yesterday a young Inspector from the Brooklyn Water Register's office, who had been assigned to Manhattan to aid in the investigation of the water-meter scandals. Solomon in all his glory was never arrayed like that young man. He wore a waistcoat of more and larger patterns than "Tim" Woodruff ever sported. He also wore diamond rings, diamond studs, an active hued shirt and tie, a light paddock coat, spats, and a few other cacophonous things.

"I really wish you would send me back to Brooklyn, where the work is more congenial," observed the Inspector to Col. Padden.

"Why?" asked the latter. "Where are you assigned now?"

"To the very slums—Cherry Hill," said the young man in a heart-broken voice.

Now the Water Register was born in the Cherry Hill district, and has lived along the Bowery all his life. He controlled his indignation with difficulty.

"Where do you come from?" he asked.

"Rouss's Point, N. Y.," said the Inspector.

"Well, if you want to go back to Brooklyn you'll have to make an application for a transfer. The Commissioner has to pass on such matters," said the Water Register.

The Inspector filled out an application. Col. Padden himself took it to the Commissioner. Said he:

"Here's a stiff that thinks he's too good for his job," said Padden. "I wish you'd just soak it to him and see if we can't take some of his gall out of him."

The Commissioner wrote "Application disapproved" on the paper and Padden took it back to his Inspector.

"I guess you'll have to stay at Cherry Hill for awhile," he said, "but I'll speak to some of my friends over there, and you'll find the district interesting, I think."

There is little doubt that this prophecy will come true.

COOKING CLASS A-SHOPPING.

Young Women Invade a Butcher's Shop to Learn Choicest Cuts.

Special to The New York Times.

MORRISTOWN, N. J., March 10.—Mrs. Willis V. Powell, who conducts a cooking class for young women at the First Presbyterian Church, led a number of her pupils into a Washington Street butcher's shop this afternoon to teach them how to market profitably. The embarrassed butchers dropped knives and cleavers and blocked the front entrance to see what was going on.

The proprietor and his assistants, when they learned what was wanted, showed the young women how the different cuts are made and how meat is prepared for the work of the cook. The butchers also pointed out the choicest pieces of meat.

Before the class left steaks and chops were bought by the members and were taken to the church kitchen, where they were cooked. A feast followed. Some of the young men outside are said to have made note of the more apt members of the class with a view to asking them to put their accomplishments to practical use in the future.

TO LET PHYSICIANS SPEED.

One of Them Has a Plan to Help Them on Hurry Calls.

Dr. G. G. Fischlowitz of 1,298 Madison Avenue wrote to Magistrate Wahle, in the Harlem Court, yesterday, suggesting that the Police Department issue a card bearing a red cross, to be displayed by physicians or their chauffeurs in automobiles, which shall be accepted by the police as a license to exceed the speed limit in visiting extremely urgent cases of illness.

The suggestion was made in expressing satisfaction that Magistrate Wahle had discharged a chauffeur employed by Dr. Gregory Costigan of 63 West Sixty-eighth Street. The chauffeur had been arrested for exceeding the speed limit in driving Dr. Costigan on a hurry call.

WHITEHOUSE'S CLAIM ON EGYPT WAS REGULAR

Consul General Sending Papers to State Department.

SENATE IS NOW INTERESTED

If American's Irrigation Project Goes Through He May Become One of the Richest Men in the World.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, March 10.—Things are looking brighter for F. Cope Whitehouse's claim against the Egyptian Government—a claim which, it is said, various officials of the State Department have hitherto been inclined to regard as visionary.

Mr. Whitehouse came to the conclusion years ago that the prosperity of ancient Egypt must have been the result of some means of artificial irrigation. Working with this idea in view, after many false theories had been exploded, he one day discovered an ancient map which showed a certain "Lake Moeris" in a place where no modern geographer had any idea that a lake existed.

Mr. Whitehouse went to the place indicated by the map and found the basin of the lake in question. He declares that this lake was not natural, but that it was the work of man; that the Government of Egypt, at an early period in its history, "animated by the noblest motives, seeking to utilize to the utmost the annual flow of the Nile, converted a vast extent of low desert into an impounding reservoir, which was regarded during the entire thousand years of Greco-Roman history as the most stupendous of the engineering works of the world."

Mr. Whitehouse asserts that at a comparatively small cost the lake basin could again be connected with the Nile, and that it would be of incalculable benefit to Egypt, restoring an immense tract of desert land to a condition of prosperous cultivation. Convinced of the value of his discovery, he endeavored some years ago to obtain title to a large amount of land in the region of the lake, and it is this claim which, he asserts, has been arbitrarily and illegally held up by the Egyptian Government.

It is said that if Mr. Whitehouse's claim were granted and his project regarding Lake Moeris were put into successful operation, he would become one of the richest men in the world. He declares that the Assouan Dam is an almost entire failure, and that the only proper means of irrigating Egypt is his lake plan.

Recently the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations became interested in the Whitehouse claim and caused inquiries to be made in regard to it through the State Department. The department to-day received a cablegram from Consul General Iddings at Cairo, stating that he had obtained from the Egyptian Minister of Foreign Affairs papers from the official files showing that Mr. Whitehouse had duly filed application for title to the Raiyan and Mueilah Deserts under Egyptian laws. When these papers arrive they will be turned over to the Senate Committee.

REPORTED ROCKEFELLER GIFT

$1,000,000 to Nationalize the Denver Juvenile Association.

Special to The New York Times.

DENVER, Col., March 10.—Several months ago it was announced that the Denver Juvenile Court idea was to be developed nationally by a wealthy New Yorker who had called Judge Benjamin B. Lindsley to the East for consultation. An evening paper says:

"John D. Rockefeller is going to put a million dollars into the Denver Juvenile Improvement Association on condition that the association becomes a National affair and that Judge Lindsley of Denver remain at the head of it. The Denver Juvenile Improvement Association has only been in existence about two years, but it has been doing work that has made it heard of all over the country.

"When Mr. Rockefeller's million dollars arrives, the association will branch out and keep open all the time, with rooms to be rented to boys, a restaurant for them, and a trade school where a boy can learn a trade. If that plan goes through there will be a juvenile improvement association in every large city in America."

LIVINGSTON WILL DECISION.

Husband's Estate Gets Property in Peculiar Poughkeepsie Suit.

Special to The New York Times.

POUGHKEEPSIE, March 10.—The litigation over the estate of Mrs. Alice Maud Livingston, late of Tivoli, has been decided by Surrogate Hoysradt in favor of the executors of the estate of her husband, Louis Livingston.

Mrs. Livingston died in June, 1904, and her husband in the November following. By the terms of Mrs. Livingston's will she left her large estate to her husband, but in a codicil provided that if they should die at about the same time without her husband having taken possession of the property, then it should go to members of her family.

Surrogate Hoysradt decided that Mr. Livingston had taken possession of his wife's effects before his death and paid her obligations. He made a will under which a large portion of the property will go to his wife's relatives.

SUED MAN AIDS SUIT.

J. B. Marie Would Upset Trust That Prevents His Paying Bills.

John B. Marie of Scarborough, N. Y., appears as defendant in a suit begun yesterday before Chancellor Stevenson in Jersey City to set aside a trust executed by himself. The plaintiff is J. Carlton Ward of Hackensack, N. J., who holds judgments against Marie for $1,743, which the trust bars him from collecting.

The defendant, Mr. Marie, appears in perfect sympathy with the plaintiff, while the real defendant in the case seems to be Congressman Richard Wayne Parker of Essex, Mr. Marie's trustee.

Mrs. Florence S. W. Marie and Congressman Parker were the principal witnesses. Mrs. Marie said that although Congressman Parker had been her husband's counsel for many years and though her relations were "wifely and friendly," she had sought the advice of another lawyer.

There appeared in court with Mrs. Marie a young lawyer from this city, who said his name was Hepburn. Mrs. Marie said he had told her that under the trust her husband could make a will giving all his property to somebody else. She said her husband was assisting her in this suit.

Congressman Parker testified that the trust had been created at the request of Mr. Marie, who had married very young. While he had a solid business training and was regular in his habits, he spent $33,000 out of a small fortune in three years to give his wife and himself a good time. The lawyers agreed to submit briefs and dispense with oral argument. Mr. Hepburn assured the reporters he had no thought of imputing fraud against Congressman Parker.

HAROLD BAUER

and the Mason & Hamlin PIANO

Harold Bauer, who has played with every orchestra of importance in the United States, and whose recital in Mendelssohn Hall yesterday was one of the most successful ever given in New York, writes thus to MASON & HAMLIN CO., Boston.

GENTLEMEN: It gives me great pleasure to express to you my absolute and unqualified satisfaction with the magnificent pianos you have kindly furnished for my use. As you know, I have used these instruments under many different conditions, in recital, with orchestra, in small and in large halls, and their adaptability to all requirements has equally astonished and delighted me. The tone is, as always, one of never-failing beauty, the action is wonderful in its delicacy and responsiveness, and I consider that as an instrument for bringing into prominence the individual qualities of tone and touch of the player, the Mason & Hamlin piano stands absolutely pre-eminent.

The vertical grand (style O) is the only instrument of its kind, as far as I am aware, capable of giving complete satisfaction to any one accustomed to play upon a grand, and I have no hesitation in saying that it is, without exception, the finest upright piano I have ever met with.

Permit me to add, in conclusion, that it has been a source of personal gratification to me to hear the favorable comments that have been passed in every instance upon your instruments, and to find that my opinion, as expressed last year, has been echoed and confirmed by musicians and the musical public throughout the country.

I remain, gentlemen, Yours very truly, HAROLD BAUER.

The value of a testimonial lies as much in WHO SAYS IT as in WHAT IT SAYS. The public is invited to HEAR these pianos at our warerooms.

FOUR ALARMS TO FIGHT ANOTHER CAR BARN FIRE

Many Cars and Autos Saved from Eighth Avenue Blaze.

THE LOSS PUT AT $75,000

Firemen Complain of Delay in Sending In the First Alarm—Deputy Waldo Held Up.

Fire almost destroyed the car barns of the Metropolitan Street Railway Company at Eighth Avenue and Fiftieth Street yesterday. The adjoining premises of the New York Transportation Company were also badly damaged, and automobiles to the value of $25,000 were destroyed or damaged. The total damage done was estimated by the Fire Chiefs and officials of both companies at $75,000. The cause of the blaze is unknown.

The building occupied by the car company and the transportation concern covers three-quarters of the block bounded by Eighth and Ninth Avenues and Forty-ninth and Fiftieth Streets. It is a three-story brick structure, comparatively old. The ground floor was occupied by small offices and car and vehicle barns. The front part of the second story was occupied on each side of the central dividing line by the executive offices of the companies. The rear of the second floor was almost unoccupied, as was the third floor, except in one part, where the transportation company had an automobile repair shop.

The fire started in a pile of rubbish on the Fiftieth Street side of the car company's section on the third floor. The blaze spread rapidly owing to the age of the woodwork. The firemen declared that there was considerable delay in the turning in of the first alarm. It was said that an official of the company stood by the firebox and assured others who tried to turn in an alarm that the fire was quite under control of the employes of the car company, and that there would be no need to summon the fire engines.

By the time Deputy Fire Chief Devanny arrived the fire had got a firm hold on the third floor and was spreading rapidly down to the second and through to the offices of the transportation company. A second alarm was immediately turned in.

So great was the menace to adjoining property at this time that third and fourth alarms were turned in soon afterward. There were nearly a thousand automobiles on the floors occupied by the transportation company and about fifty cars in the car company's barns.

The army of chauffeurs employed by the auto company were immediately put to work getting out the vehicles. All of the automobiles used by the transportation company are run by electricity. When they are stored in the barns the batteries are taken out. Only about an eighth of the entire number were run out on their own power. About 700 were pushed to the streets through an exit on the Forty-ninth Street side. For over four hours the entire block was surrounded by a triple line of autos in which the children enjoyed themselves "playing millionaire," clanging the bells and sounding the "honk horns."

The moment it was seen that the fire was gaining headway, all of the fifty cars were driven out to Eighth Avenue. Traffic was blocked on Eighth Avenue and in Fifty-third Street for four hours, the cars driven from the barn being lined up on the east and west tracks for over a dozen blocks.

All of the cars were got out, but the dense and peculiarly malodorous smoke stopped the work of getting out the automobiles, while there were still a dozen or more in the building. It was hoped that, as the fire was on the car company's side, the flames would be checked before they reached the autos. This was not accomplished, however. The vehicles left in the building were either completely destroyed or seriously damaged before the fire was said to be under control.

A heavy cloud of smoke, driven by the high wind, traveled in a black, dense column eastward over the city. Even as far east as Fifth Avenue pedestrians were compelled to seek shelter from the stifling fumes which were driven right over to Long Island.

So dense was the smoke that its presence was noticed more or less in the Subway, especially around the stations just above the Tenderloin. At Fiftieth Street the station was filled with a dense, suffocating pall until about 3 o'clock, when the wind veered toward the southwest and drew it away.

In the basement of the auto company's side of the burning building the Electric Storage Battery Company had its plant. This was considerably damaged by water from the upper floors. The third floor of the car company's premises was completely gutted, while the two lower floors suffered extensively from fire and water. The water pressure was at fault, while the fire hose burst frequently.

Reserves from a number of precincts were ordered out under Capt. Daly and Inspector Walsh. Inspector Flood and a few mounted men were also there. Fire Commissioner O'Brien and Deputy Commissioner Bonner were on hand, as was also Deputy Police Commissioner Rhinelander Waldo.

When Capt. Waldo attempted to enter the fire lines in company with the Police Commissioner's secretary, Daniel Slattery, a policeman of the West Forty-seventh Street Station, who had never seen his superior, told the Deputy Commissioner to "get back to where he came from." Deputy Commissioner Waldo was forced to show his badge, which he put back in his pocket once he was inside the lines. A few minutes later he met a mounted policeman, who told him to get out of the way. Again the badge was produced, and this time it stayed out. All of the property damaged was heavily insured.

SAYS WIFE HAS DIPSOMANIA.

She's Senator Knox's Niece, Patterson Declares—Takes Her to Bellevue.

Mrs. Virginia K. Patterson, a handsome woman of about thirty-five, who, according to her husband, is a niece of United States Senator Knox of Pennsylvania, was removed yesterday from her home, 11 East Ninth Street, to Bellevue Hospital, where she was placed in the psychopathic ward for observation.

Mrs. Patterson was taken to the hospital by her husband, assisted by two policemen. She was coaxed away from home with great difficulty, and became hysterical and violent when she realized that she was about to be deprived of her liberty.

Mr. Patterson said his wife, whose maiden name was Virginia Knox, formerly was the Countess Carussi, having married into one of the oldest families of Italy's aristocracy at an early age. Her first marriage, he said, was very unhappy, Count Carussi having ill-treated his wife almost up to the time he died insane from alcoholism.

Mr. Patterson said he had seen years ago that his wife was about to become mentally unbalanced, and at that time had had her examined by two allenists in this city, who had diagnosed her case as dipsomania. Of late, the husband said, his wife had become altogether unmanageable.

Nikola Tesla is a friend of Mr. Patterson, and, according to the latter, a frequent visitor at his house. Mr. Patterson said wireless telegraphy was one of the topics they often discussed, and that as a result his wife began to believe that she was receiving wireless messages from dead friends and heard mysterious voices calling her.

Dr. Gregory advised Mr. Patterson to leave his wife at the hospital for observation overnight and have her taken to court to-day.

NEW GARAGE REGULATIONS.

Authorities Wonder If the Oil Trust Will Report Gasoline Sales.

The new garage regulations for this city went into effect on Jan. 1. One of the sections reads:

> Every licensed vendor of volatile inflammable by-products of petroleum shall render to the Fire Commissioner each week a statement, verified as to its correctness by an affidavit, covering deliveries for the week to points within the city. The report shall include all deliveries of such liquid in quantities of five gallons or more and shall be in detail as follows: Date of delivery, name of buyer, point of delivery, number of gallons, and name and gravity of liquid. This report shall be delivered not later than the second business day of each week.

Inspector of Combustibles George E. Murray has sent out the first 5,000 of the forms to meet this section, and intends to see that the requirements are carried out to the letter.

The first returns are due on March 20, and there is curiosity at Fire Headquarters whether the Standard Oil Company will fill the form or not. A violatiion of this ordnance constitutes a misdemeanor.

The effect of the form will be to make the large oil companies disclose the name of every one of their customers and the amount of by-products of petroleum they buy.

TO BE DRY IN JERSEY CITY.

Saloon Keepers Hear Rumors and Will Take No Chances To-day.

Although Chief of Police Murphy of Jersey City yesterday said that no special orders had been issued in regard to Sunday liquor traffic, it was generally believed that the day would be "dry," regardless of the weather.

The saloon keepers had heard that either plainclothes men for the police or private detectives for the clergymen might be sent out, and said they were not going to take any chances. When asked if they would close or merely take the precaution of not selling to strangers, they declined to answer.

The Excise Inspectors were busy yesterday looking up evidence against persons suspected of selling liquor to minors.

Typographical Union Elections.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., March 10.—President James M. Lynch, First Vice President John W. Hayes, and Secretary-Treasurer J. W. Bramwood of the International Typographical Union, have practically been re-elected, as the nominations have been finished, and there will be no opposition to them on the ticket, which will be voted on throughout the country the third Wednesday in May.

CRANE GRILLS GATES ON AUTO SPEED CHARGE

And Denounces All Rich Men Who Break the Law.

GLAD TO GET FINANCIER'S SON

Holds Him for Trial, and Says the Richer They Are the Harder He'll Punish 'Em.

Charles G. Gates, son of the Western financier, was before Magistrate Crane in the Morrisania Police Court yesterday charged with violating the speed ordinance in his automobile.

Law-breaking automobilists are one of Magistrate Crane's chief abominations. He believes that most of them arraigned before him for illegal speeding disregard the law intentionally, and many times he has censured such offenders in his court before holding them for trial. The presence of young Mr. Gates was an opportunity which he promptly seized.

Mr. Gates was arrested on Friday evening at Jerome Avenue and 160th Street by Patrolman Vanderpool of High Bridge. Vanderpool testified yesterday that Mr. Gates was driving his touring car at the rate of twenty-five miles an hour. With him were his chauffeur, Fred Walsh; his partner, Arthur J. Singer, and Mr. and Mrs. A. Partridge of Chicago. The party was in a hurry to get to New Rochelle to dinner. Mr. Gates gave bail in the station and was allowed to go on.

Yesterday morning he was in a hurry to get downtown for the opening of the stock market, so he persuaded the court officers to put his case first. He wore a blue serge suit and light-colored spats. It was not his first experience in that court and all of the attaches were his friends. Mr. Gates himself was cheerful. He had dealt with Magistrate Breen on the previous occasion and had never encountered Magistrate Crane before, and did not appreciate the situation. The attaches did.

Mr. Gates said he was 29 years old, was born in Illinois, was a broker by occupation, and lived at 667 Madison Avenue.

"What have you to say to the charge?" asked the Magistrate.

"Your Honor," said Mr. Gates, "I don't think I violated the law. I had been at the Memorial Hospital most of the afternoon, visiting a friend who is there in a precarious condition, and it was late when we left. We were due at dinner in New Rochelle. We may have been going twelve or fifteen miles an hour, but not any twenty-five, as the officer says."

Admitted the Charge.

The legal limit at the point where Gates was arrested is eight miles an hour, so Mr. Gates's statement amounted to an admission of the charge. He seemed to suppose that fifteen miles was the limit at that point.

"I think I was the victim of circumstances," he went on. "An automobilist killed a woman near where I was arrested last night, and I think the policeman was a little overzealous in his duty on that account. He said I was going twenty-five miles an hour, and when I asked him how he knew he said his speedometer recorded it. But he admitted that in the dark he couldn't see the speedometer figures very well. I think the evidence is very poor, your Honor."

Mr. Gates said all this with a smile. While he was talking Magistrate Crane continually took off and put on his glasses, tapped them on the desk, and clasped and unclasped his hands. When Mr. Gates had finished, the Magistrate, replacing his glasses, asked dryly:

"Is that all you have to say?"

"Yes," replied the broker.

"Have you any defense?" pursued the Magistrate.

"That is my defense," said Mr. Gates, "that the evidence is insufficient."

"Mr. Gates," said the Magistrate, "I have heard of you before. You are a Wall Street man with millions and you think that you can do what you please. When you men have money you think you can do anything. Instead, men of your class should be an example to the community."

"I beg your pardon," put in Mr. Gates, with another smile.

"This is a great occasion for you to laugh," said the Magistrate. "Laugh if you want to—now. Such men as you think you can do as you like. You can't do it here, Mr. Gates.

"I have heard of your automobile exploits before, Mr. Gates. You laugh at the law. You fellows in Wall Street are brought up to take chances, but if you violate the law you will have to suffer the consequences when you come before me."

Mr. Gates got in a word here.

"Your Honor," he said, "I obey the law. I drive my own machine and am very careful. I have driven an automobile for eight years, and this is but the second time I have appeared in a police court."

Magistrate Crane ignored this plea and went on:

"I read in the newspaper of young Mr. Gates, here and there and everywhere. Now you are here before me, and I am glad of it. The more money you have when you come here the harder I shall punish you. A rich man should be an example to the community. In the minds of men like you money creates the idea that you can do what you please."

Autoists Insane for Speed.

"I obey the law," replied Mr. Gates, "and there is no good evidence of the charge on which I am arraigned."

"I am passing on the evidence here," said the Magistrate. "I can't afford an automobile, but, Mr. Gates, my poverty is as good as your wealth. My children are in danger from your automobile. You go along the street and toot at the crossings, and if my children don't get out of the way, you run them down. Any man who steps into an automobile to drive it becomes insane for speed. I will hold you in $300 bail for trial."

Mr. Gates tried to say something more, but the Magistrate waved him away scornfully. Mr. Gates did not have a bondsman ready, and he asked the clerk to ask the Magistrate to parole him till he could get the security. When this request was transmitted to the Magistrate he said:

"You are no better than a poor man. If a poor man were held in bail here he would be afraid to ask for parole. You, because you are rich, think you ought to have special privileges."

"But I haven't any bondsman here," said Mr. Gates.

The Magistrate Sarcastic.

"Perhaps I'd better go out and get one for you," retorted the Magistrate. Then he relented a little and said he would take any good security Mr. Gates offered.

"I want to get to the market," said the broker. "It is lively to-day and I ought to be there."

Then Arthur J. Singer, Mr. Gates's partner, appeared and gave security. He offered his home at 28 East Seventy-fourth Street to secure the bond, and Magistrate Crane accepted it. Then Mr. Gates and Mr. Singer, in their automobiles, started downtown to their office.

While Mr. Gates was awaiting arraignment a reporter questioned him about his arrest.

"Oh, for God's sake," he said, "don't put anything about this in the papers. When I was arraigned here last Christmas, the story was printed all over the country. I received hundreds of letters from Anarchists and all kinds of cranks, expressing delight at my arrest. All of them said they were glad I'd got it in the neck. They'll do it again, only worse, if you print this."

FIX BLAME FOR AUTO DEATH.

Police Say They'll Arrest Chauffeur To-day—Auto Club Offers Reward.

Detective Sergeant Price of the Bronx Detective Bureau announced last night that the identity of the owner of the automobile that was responsible for the accident at 172d Street and Jerome Avenue on Friday afternoon, resulting in the death of the wife of Police Sergeant Robert Craig of the West 100th Street Station, had been discovered. Price said that the number of the machine was known and that an arrest would be made before noon to-day.

Charles Cummings, the chauffeur of the machine Craig had hired, was remanded to the Coroner yesterday. He insists that he was not racing and that the other auto struck him and caused him to run into the trolley pole.

The Automobile Club of America, in the following letter to THE TIMES, offers a reward of $500 for the punishment of the chauffeur who caused the accident:

> The Automobile Club of America, deploring, with all good citizens, and denouncing the reckless use of the highways by automobiles, reading in the morning paper an account of the frightful accident on Jerome Avenue Friday afternoon, wherein an automobile from the garage of Theodore E. Schultz, driven by a chauffeur named Cummings, and containing as passengers Police Sergt. Robert Craig of the West One Hundredth Street Station, and his wife and children, was run into and overturned by another unknown and unidentified automobile, causing the death of Mrs. Craig and severe injury to Sergt. Craig and his children, hereby offers a reward of $500 for the arrest and conviction of the driver of the automobile which caused said accident and the death of Mrs. Craig.
>
> The Automobile Club of America stands only for the decent use of the highways by automobiles, and believes in prosecuting to the utmost limit the careless users of same, and above all the heartless desertion of a chauffeur, as in this case, in running away after causing an accident.
>
> This reward is offered by order of the Board of Governors of the Automobile Club of America. S. M. BUTLER, Secretary.

SPEECHES WEREN'T WANTED.

Officers of the 71st Had a Jolly Dinner Without Them.

The officers of the Seventy-first Regiment had their annual dinner last night at the Hotel Astor. Col. Bate was in command. He had ordered that efforts at speechmaking should be assailed in front, on both flanks, and in the rear.

The result was that after two or three of the officers had stood up to propose toasts calling for responses they were greeted with such songs as

In the Days of Old Rameses,
That Story Caused Paresis.

This gave an abundance of time for regimental songs and a good time. In addition to Col. Bates the officers present were:

Lieut. Col. Wells, Major Bleeker, Major Marsh, Capts. Corwin, Wells, Bruch, Byars, Delamater, Henn, Peet, Prentice, Greene, Hutchinson, Flack, Fearn, True, and Lieuts. Ranney, Jenkins, Eben, Ogelsby, Westerman, Vieufliet, Kyle, Mackey, and Kehlbeck.

QUIGG BEATS PARSONS FOR DIRECT NOMINATIONS

Chairman's Pet Plan Defeated by a Vote of 25 to 10.

QUIGG SUBSTITUTE WINS

It Provides for Direct Selection of District Leaders Only—Gruber Says It's a Bogus Scheme.

President Herbert Parsons of the Republican County Committee pressed his pet scheme of direct nominations at a special meeting of the Executive Committee yesterday afternoon and was completely routed by Lemuel Ely Quigg. By a vote of 25 to 10 the Executive Committee rejected the direct nominations plan as proposed, and then, by a vote of 38 to 2, agreed to Mr. Quigg's proposal that district leaders alone should be named through the direct nominations plan.

Quigg, who came into the meeting again on a proxy for the sole purpose of fighting Parsons on his pet plan, had the district leaders with him from the beginning. The direct nominations plan came up on a report from Congressman Bennet, as Chairman of the committee named to pass on the subject. The report favored the adoption of the plan, and provided for submitting a bill to the Legislature to make the scheme applicable to the entire city for both parties.

William Halpin, ex-President of the County Committee, promptly offered an amendment providing that the bill should empower the County Committee to offer the direct nominations plan to each Assembly district on its request, and not to force it on the entire city, whether the people of the various districts wanted it or not. Quigg went further, and proposed that the committee declare it inexpedient at this time to seek any legislation whatever, and to confine the direct nominations plan to the election of district leaders, which could be put into effect without legislation, and under the present primary laws. For nearly three hours, behind closed doors, Quigg argued his case, and finally the committee, by a vote of 25 to 10, adopted his proposal.

Congressman Parsons led the fight for the plan and he was backed up by Senator Alfred R. Page, Col. Abe Gruber, Congressman Bennet, George Wanmaker, and William Halpin. After the committee had voted adversely, Quigg offered a resolution to have the County Committee declare in favor of naming district leaders by direct vote under the existing law. Col. Gruber fought the proposition on the ground that this was a subterfuge offered by Quigg to appease the people and was not the real direct nomination plan they wanted. He was about alone in his stand, however, and the Quigg plan was approved by a vote of 33 to 2.

Another rumpus was started when it was announced by President Parsons that eight of the twenty-six exempt places in the County Clerk's office had been placed under the protection of the State Civil Service Commission. One of the eight places is held by a brother of William Halpin, ex-President of the committee. Last December, when County Clerk Hamilton, a Republican, was about to retire in favor of Peter J. Dooling, the present Democratic incumbent, an attempt was made to have the State Civil Service Commission place all twenty-six exempt office holders under civil service protection. The State Board declined to act then, but last week an order was issued putting eight of the twenty-six under such protection, one being Halpin's brother, as stated. The district leaders now want to know why all twenty-six were not protected and also why County Clerk Dooling kept the eight in office since Jan. 1 until they could get the desired protection from the State Board.

Samuel Koenig, leader of the Sixteenth District, gave notice that at the regular meeting next Wednesday he would offer a resolution for the appointment of a committee to investigate the comparative merits of the Elsberg and the Page rapid transit bills now pending at Albany, so that the County Committee could take some action. The Page bill is the City Club bill.

Herman Joveshof was seated as leader from the Thirteenth District and Michael H. Blake's contest was dismissed. President Parsons received the report of the Committee on Contested Seats. It was signed by all of the members except Mr. Halpin, who dissented. Joveshof supported Parsons in his fight for the Chairmanship against Odell and Halpin, who were in control at that time.

Girl Wife Shoots Negro Pastor.

HARRISBURG, Penn., March 10.—The Rev. J. W. Pollett, pastor of St. Luke's African Methodist Episcopal Church, this city, was shot by his sixteen-year-old wife to-day at their residence. The bullet lodged in Pollett's right arm and caused a compound fracture. They were married less than a year ago. Pollett says he knows of no reason for his wife's attempt on his life. The woman is in jail.

ENOCH ARDEN PROSECUTES.

Has His Wife Arrested for Bigamy When He Comes Back.

Special to The New York Times.

PATERSON, March 10.—Mrs. Lillian Sandmeyer, 21 years old, was arrested yesterday afternoon by Detective Sergeant Keppler of the Police Department on a charge of bigamy, preferred by Louis Sandmeyer of the United States Army.

She was 17 years old when she was married to Sandmeyer. For a month they were happy. He had borrowed a few dollars to pay the marriage fee and two weeks' board in another city. When the money gave out he managed to stay two more weeks. Then he returned to this city with his young bride, where she almost starved.

Three years ago Sandmeyer enlisted in the United States Army, and a short time ago re-enlisted for four years more. He came to this city last week on a twelve days' furlough, and learned that his wife had married again.

One night he called at her present home. He mentioned that he could have her arrested for bigamy. She begged him not to, and it is said he promised her immunity. That same night he went to his mother's home, and she urged her son to prosecute Mrs. Sandmeyer. The soldier went to Police Headquarters and swore out a warrant.

Detective Keppler went to the home of the young woman yesterday afternoon and took her to Police Headquarters. Her second husband, Frank Whitaker, was with her. When questioned by Chief Bimson she told a strightforward story and gave security for $500 bail before Justice of the Peace John Keys.

O'BEIRNE SAYS HE TOOK IT.

Force of Life Helped Dyspepsia—Girl Clerk Testifies.

Gen. James R. O'Beirne, former President of the Force of Life Company, was the chief witness before United States Commissioner Ridgeway yesterday when the defense was begun in the case of alleged conspiracy charged against Dr. W. W. Hadley and three other officers of the company. Gen. O'Beirne said he had taken some of the Force of Life medicine and thought it effective.

"When I became President," he said, "I gave orders that everything should be conducted in an honest and straightforward business way." Gen. O'Beirne added that he became President in December, 1904. The concern has gone out of existence.

"Do you know the effect of the Force of Life remedies?" asked Assistant United States District Attorney Houghton.

"Yes," replied Gen. O'Beirne. "I used the remedies for dyspepsia and rheumatism with good result. All the seventeen remedies are as good as can be found in the pharmacoepia."

The witness told ex-Senator Lexow, attorney for Treasurer Williams, that he had offered the Post Office Inspectors the fullest opportunity for examination of the affairs of the company.

Miss Kittie Malter of 113 Amsterdam Avenue, employed in the shipping department of the company testified.

"Did you ever use water in filling the bottles?" was inquired.

"When I'd get an order," she answered, "I'd put one-tenth of a drug solution in a bottle and fill the rest with distilled water."

"How would you measure the tenth?" was asked.

"Just guess at it," she answered.

Mrs. Jennie R. Chase, in charge of the correspondence department, and Miss Carrie Hanson, another employe, also testified. The hearing will be continued Monday morning.

NEW TAX ROUSES MERCHANTS

They Will Urge Gov. Higgins to Veto the Saxe-Stanley Bill.

The Merchants' Protective Association and the Merchants' Association have joined in an effort to induce Gov. Higgins to veto the Saxe-Stanley bill which imposes a tax on personal property of non-residents, wherever it is found in this State.

The associations are acting on advice of counsel, James, Schell & Elkus, that if the measure becomes law an effort undoubtedly will be made to tax goods consigned to agents in this State for sale on commission. The associations say that merchandise in storage worth in the aggregate $500,000,000 will be affected, and that, even if the tax cannot be imposed on warehoused goods, a large amount of litigation is probable, which will keep business from the State until it is finally settled.

In a circular letter to members of the protective association Edward D. Page, its President, advises all members to urge Gov. Higgins by letter to veto the bill. The Governor will give consideration to the bill next Tuesday, but has announced that he will not grant public hearings.

PLAN TO WIN FARMERS FOR ANTI-BETTING BILL

Appropriation to Replace Percentage from Racing Societies.

CAMPAIGN UP THE STATE

Agriculturists Willing to Drop Opposition to the Lansing Measure If Country Fairs Do Not Suffer.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, March 10.—The efforts put forth for the passage of the Cassidy-Lansing bill to make bookmaking and poolselling at race tracks a felony have taken a new turn, and instead of indulging in talk as to the evils of gambling the proponents of the measure, prominent among them the Rev. A. S. Gregg, have begun a campaign of education among the farmers, who, through their agricultural societies and the backing they have given them, would be big losers if the 5 per cent. rake-off which they get from the race track gross receipts were cut off.

While those who are making the campaign for the bill do not desire to cast any aspersions on the morality of the farmer, they have come to recognize that any proposition that would hit the up-State agriculturist in his pocketbook would have little chance of success. The State gets something over $200,000 from the race tracks, which it turns over to the country fairs and out of which the latter pay the premiums for prize porkers, sleek cattle, and record-breaking squashes. To cut off this revenue at a blow would mean stopping the agricultural fairs. The causes operating against the bill at present are even greater than this.

It has been discovered that in many localities farmers have raised money for the use of the fairs in erecting buildings, and otherwise have promoted them by giving their notes for considerable amounts, and many of the farmers are also stockholders in the fair associations. Some would become bankrupts if the fairs were suddenly cut off. These considerations have been taken into account by the movers of the new bill, and their actions recently have been based on such a state of affairs.

The pressure that could be brought to bear on up-State legislators by the farmers must be nullified, those favoring the bill now see, if they expect the measure to go through, and during the past few weeks, Dr. Gregg, Assemblyman Lansing, and others interested in the passage of the act have been working with the farmers.

The introduction of the Moreland bill in the Assembly last week, making an appropriation of $50,000 of State funds for the use of the agricultural societies, has given the anti-pool selling contingent their best argument. An effort will be made to have this appropriation increased to $200,000, which will safeguard the country fair people and give them the independence of the race track element which they have asserted to be their desire if such independence could be obtained without loss to them.

Dr. Gregg, Assemblyman Lansing, and their supporters have been going through the State for several weeks putting this plan up to the farmers, and they say that in every instance they have received assurances of co-operation. On Friday last a delegation of Mr. Lansing's supporters from Rensselaer called on him, and they had a heart-to-heart talk on the situation.

"I want to hit this racetrack gambling a blow," he said, "but I don't want the same blow to hit my friends, and I will do everything in my power to protect your interests while abating none of my efforts for the bill. I know that every effort is being made to dig my political grave, but if they succeed in burying me on account of this bill it won't mean by any means that the campaign against the racetracks will be at an end."

"Brad's made a hit with us for sure," said one of the conferrees after the talk. "We'll stick by him because he won't do anything that will hurt us."

According to Dr. Gregg, about the same thing has been said in a dozen localities throughout the State, and with the bill assured of little opposition from the country contingent, the State will be forced to pass a law to conserve the agricultural societies.

Another of the elements in favor of the legislation is the attitude of Gov. Higgins. When he was Senator he was one of the few who voted against the Percy-Gray law, and declared on the floor of the Senate that no one could make him believe that that which was a felony on one side of a fence could be legal on the other side. When a delegation favoring the bill called on him several days ago he said that he had in no wise changed his views on the present racing law and gave assurances of co-operation.

Those who will seek to have the agricultural fair appropriation raised rely on this attitude of the Governor for support, as he could not well fail to favor a bill that would dissolve the partnership of the fairs with the race tracks.

Nothing in the way of reform legislation by the present Assembly and Senate would surprise the people on the ground here. The rush with which the 80-cent gas bill went through both houses, the passagee of the Eleventh Avenue track bill, and the passage through the Senate of the employers' liability act are a fair indication of the legislative feeling. The Eleventh Avenue bill was the first piece of legislation adverse to the railroads which has passed the Legislature in twenty-eight years, and the employers' liability measure was up in one form or another for twenty years before it even got a decent hearing.

NEW WAY OF STAINING OAK.

How Germans Get Beautiful Shades for Furniture.

WASHINGTON, March 10.—Consul Ozmun, in a report from Stuttgart, Germany, recounts a new method used by German manufacturers for staining oak furniture by which beautiful shades are produced. The method consists of placing the frames, after they have been thoroughly prepared and polished, in an air-tight room or large air-tight box, in which are placed two large bowls containing from five to six quarts of ammonia and close the room or box for the night.

The desired shade can be obtained by placing small pieces of prepared oak in the room or box and withdrawing the same at intervals. Deeper shades, of course, require longer exposure. Oak stained in this way retains its color much longer than by the process of rubbing in coloring extracts, which latter in the course of time rub off.

SEATS FOR SHOP GIRLS.

Jersey House Passes Bill—May Go Through Senate This Week.

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, March 10.—The Senate may act favorably next week on the measure to provide seats for shop girls.

The bill went through the House by a unanimous vote Wednesday, and has been sent to the Senate. It provides a penalty of $25 for each offense of an employer who does not provide chairs or seats for his female help which they may occupy when not engaged in work that keeps them on their feet.

2-Cent Fare in Ohio.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, March 10.—This was the first day under Ohio's new two-cent fare law, but it apparently made little difference in the volume of railway travel. The only noticeable effect was at the ticket offices, where less money was taken in for travel to State points.

NEW TANBARK STARS AT SADDLE CLUB CIRCUS

But "Mlle. Onanag's" Headline Act Is Postponed by the Nag.

STAMPEDE IN NOVELTY RACE

Exciting Moments at Annual Exhibition in the Central Park Academy—Casey, Cowboy Hero.

The Saddle and Bridle Club turned its annual exhibition into an amateur circus at the Central Park Riding Academy last night, and many were the feats of skill and daring performed by "the kings and queens of the tanbark ring," as the programme called them.

"Mlle. Onanag" was to have been the shining star of the occasion, but the nag interfered. R. T. Lockwood was "Ona," and when he entered the ring the "fiery, untamed steed" took fright at his strawberry wig and orange tights, kicked over the ring boards, and bolted for the stable. The gallery applauded loudly when Lockwood kissed his hand after the flying horse.

Then there were the "Twirlers," whose "acrobatic feats defied the laws of gravitation." These were the McClintock family, and the one dressed as a policeman carried off the honors. As usual, their stunts were interrupted by the clowns, whose chief stock in trade seemed to be to swat each other with property sticks.

The most amusing act of all was the novelty race. The contestants were all mounted and, starting at one end of the arena, raced to a row of suit cases in which were night-gowns. These had to be put on with one hand, while the other held the horse. Then there was a cigar to be lighted and an umbrella opened and held over the rider's head as he returned to the starting point.

Everybody got along all right except for the umbrellas. When the horses saw these, a stampede for the gate began. Heels flew around at a lively rate, and many had close calls before they were able to remount. No one knew who won, but Buchanan admitted that he came in last.

"Display No. 10," "The Roman Riders," made one of the hits of the evening. They were billed as "fearless exponents of the most perilous feats of horsemanship, who, habited in the togas of ancient Rome, careen madly around the ring." R. T. Lockwood, the dethroned Queen of the tanbark, wore one of the togas, and the horse seemed to like it better than the more immodest tights.

The two most exciting events were reserved for the second part of the programme. First came the "Rough Riders," in their "stupendous exhibition of equestrian gymnastics, fearless mounting and vaulting of the galloping steeds at full speed." "Jack" Casey was the hero of this act. He snatched handkerchiefs off the floor while hanging on by his shoestrings, in the most approved cowboy fashion, and generally showed himself quite at home on the back of his "galloping steed."

Casey had many friends in the gallery, and their cries of encouragement must have ruffled the dignity of Ringmaster Dinklemann, for he left the ring and tried to quiet the applause a little. He was not very successful.

When the Rough Riders had tired themselves out, the two tug-of-war teams appeared. Their contest was called a thrilling exhibition of clashing muscles; mighty men in desperate combat." There were five men on each team, and the Captains were C. Warren Lang, Jr., and D. C. Wainwright. After about fifteen minutes of "muscle clashing" the "mighty men" shook hands all around, called the "desperate combat" a draw, and joined the spectators in a rush for the refreshments.

ADMITS HE ROBBED STUDENTS

Thief Captured in Cambridge Despite His Clever Ruse.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, March 10.—The youth who has been "doing" the Eastern colleges and universities by means of bogus checks and also as a sneak thief turns out to be Lucius Rapp of Chicago, said to be the son of a lawyer, although he said he was Albert L. Lambert of Long Island City. He was caught in Cambridge to-day, and, the police say, made a full confession. He acknowledged that he had got about $4,000 out of Harvard University men, and that he is is the man wanted for thefts totaling between $5,000 and $7,000 from Yale University and Trinity College.

At 10 o'clock this morning Capt. Hurley and Inspector Neilan, who with Inspectors Deehan and Cox have been daily watching the dormitories for the past eight weeks in the hope of catching the thief, saw Rapp coming from Randolph Hall. A telephone boy employed in one of the dormitories told the officers that he believed Rapp was the man for whom they had been watching.

At the moment Rapp, who was somewhat in advance of the officers, turned, and, suspecting that something was up, adopted one of his clever ruses. He immediately stepped to the curbstone and forming a megaphone with his hands called up toward the third story of Ridgley Hall, "Harry," the trick being used to throw the police off the track. Then as the officers approached him he darted into Ridgley, the door of which was closed when Capt. Harley and Inspector Nielen reached it.

When they gained admittance they found Rapp alone in a room on the ground floor. Hurley asked Rapp what he was doing there, and he replied that he was looking for a fellow-student, Harry Brown. The fact that there is such a man in the dormitory complicated matters for a few moments, although his room was not that in which Rapp was found.

When taken to Headquarters ten worthless checks, some of them bearing the names under which an unknown thief was indicted at the December term of the Grand Jury, were found in his possession.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., March 10.—In the arrest of Albert L. Lambert in Boston Capt. Cowles of the local Detective Bureau believes that the third and last man of a trio of alleged students who have been robbing various colleges throughout the East has been captured.

The other two men who are believed to have worked with Lambert are James P. Rodney and Louis Fellman, held in New York on the charge of robbery.

WARDS FOR CONSUMPTIVES.

Number of Tuberculosis Patients Compels Special Arrangements in Bellevue.

Tuberculosis patients have become so numerous in Bellevue Hospital that it has become necessary to take two whole wards in the main hospital building for their treatment. Other patients have been moved to make room for them.

The overcrowded condition of the tuberculosis pavilions at the Metropolitan Hospital on Blackwell's Island, is a primary cause in bringing about the present condition at Bellevue. The new order of things was decided upon yesterday by Dr. Brannan, President of the Board of Trustees of Bellevue. He said last night:

"It is simply a readjustment of patients. Treatment of tuberculosis cases requires fresh air and open windows. This decided me to bring together all the tuberculosis patients in two wards, sending to the places thus vacated patients from these two wards suffering from other diseases."

TO MANUFACTURE MUSIC BY ELECTRICAL DEVICE

Inventor Promises to Distribute It from Power Plant.

TO SOUND FROM TELEPHONES

Vibrations to be Made by Alternators—Thousands to Hear Tones If Dr. Cahill Succeeds.

Electric music is the latest promise of this age of electricity. In three months a central power plant will be established in New York, and from this it is declared music made by electricity will be transmitted through telephones to the homes of subscribers. The first plant will be designed to accommodate 1,000 instruments, each of which will send forth the notes made in the power house and transmitted by telephone.

The plan is set forth in yesterday's issue of The Electrical W[illegible]d, which tells of the completion by Dr. Thaddeus Cahill of Holyoke, Mass., of plans on which he has worked for many years. Dr. Cahill has an elaborate electrical plant at Holyoke, in which tests have been made.

The inventor dispenses with all strings, reeds, and other devices with which man has been accustomed to sound his notes. He installs a battery of alternators, which will transmit musical electrical waves, and these are adjusted to as many different vibrations as the strings of a piano would be. To play the instrument a piano keyboard is used. The pressing of a key will operate a switch which will close the circuit leading to the alternators adjusted to produce just the note that the piano string would produce.

But the note will not be sounded in the ear of the operator from the battery itself. The vibrations will be communicated to the main wires, which will transmit them through branch wires to the other end of telephones. There the note will be sounded. One of these receiving telephones will be connected with the operator, and thus he will know how his playing sounds to all others connected with the main wires. The receiving telephones will be fitted with a megaphone-like device warranted to carry the notes thoughout a room as well as an organ would. In case of a large hall it is said that several of these could be used.

Speaking of the quality of the tones produced, the correspondent of The Electrical Review, who visited the plant of Dr. Cahill, says:

"The intonation strikes the listener as remarkably good, and a glance at the steel inductors on the shafts and the steel gears connecting them shows that the tuning must be as permanent as it is perfect.

"In the next place, the system of building up the quality of tone desired, by mixing with the ground tone one or many harmonics, with any strength desired, opens up a new field of timbre control. The wood-wind, brass, and string tones of the orchestra are easily produced, by mixing the required harmonics in the required proportions. In addition to reproducing the leading orchestral tones, a skillful performer can mix the harmonics so as to produce musical timbres unknown before.

"Equally striking with this novel timbre control is the delicacy of the expression, dynamically considered. By the touch of the hand the performer controls the attack and sostenuto and varies the note at every instant. The musicians at the Cahill laboratory produced very good vibrato effects, and crescendos and diminuendos not inferior to those produced by a good violin.

"When imitating the violin and 'cello the performer controlled, by his touch, the quality and power of the tone so perfectly that the auditor felt sure he heard the bow gliding across the string. The singularly pure quality of the tones and the remarkable control over them which the performer possesses take the listener by surprise."

It is the plan of the promoters of this invention to try at first to distribute the music in hotels and restaurants, where, it is said that any number of guests could enjoy harmonies at their leisure. Churches, too, could have music without organist or choir.

Ultimately, perhaps, it will be possible to have music with breakfast and dinner, light music for the children, music for afternoon teas or for evening poker parties, and slumber songs at bedtime. And in the novel of the next century may be found this dialogue:

"What shall we hear this evening, dear?" asked Mrs. Gotham, as they were about to dine.

"I'm tired of that mournful stuff they're turning out at St. Petersburg," returned her husband. "They take themselves too seriously. Turn on Paris, and see if they haven't something that'll wake things up."

TWO JUDGES SAY COX TRIED TO SWAY THEM

Asked Favorable Decision in Suit Involving $200,000 Bond.

JUDGMENT WAS ADVERSE

Another Judge Tells Drake Committee the ex-Leader Merely Asked a Fair Hearing.

CINCINNATI, March 10.—Two Judges of the Circuit Court, in testimony before the Drake Investigating Committee of the State Senate this afternoon, charged that George B. Cox, formerly Republican leader in Hamilton County, had tried to influence the judgment of that court in a suit involving a $200,000 bond, while a third Judge testified that Cox had simply asked him that a fair and impartial hearing be given to the case when it came up on an appeal. The Judges had been subpoenaed as witnesses.

Judge Ferdinand Jelke, Jr., of the Circuit Court, was the first witness. Attorney Roettinger called attention to the suit brought in 1890 by the city against the Lane & Bodley Company and the American Bonding Company for $500,000 for an alleged default as contractor in building the city water works, in which the lower court had given judgment for $238,712, and said:

"I want to ask you if an effort was made to influence the judgment of your court in the final disposition of this case?"

Judge Jelke replied:

"I can only speak for myself. I cannot speak for my colleagues. I do not know that I was sent for, but I called on Mr. Cox in his office. Mr. Cox said to me: 'Judge, that Lane & Bodley case is coming up for hearing in your court. I wish you would find some way of reversing it.' I said: 'Mr. Cox, that case will be tried on its record, just like any other case.'"

"What did Mr. Cox say in reply?"

"There was very little said. He said he had seen one of my associates on the bench. My impression was that he was not pleased."

Judge Jelke said that the case had finally been decided; that he voted to affirm the lower court.

Attorney Poettinger asked:

"Was an entry presented to you by Judge Miller Outcault of the bonding company?"

"I believe so. Of course, the matter was pending for some time and I cannot tell the date of our conclusion. One day Judge Outcault said he believed that the case was settled, but that the Water Works Commissioners were so timorous and afraid that they did not want to settle without the court. Judge Outcault afterward presented an entry reversing the case. He said that counsel had agreed on it.

"The next day I saw Judge Robertson, counsel for the water works, and asked him if he knew about it. He said that he did not. I told Outcault of this, and that no entry of reversal would be made with my consent, and that I would make an entry myself."

Judge Giffen of the Circuit Court next testified:

"Mr. Cox sent for me, Mr. Hynacka delivering the message. Mr. Cox said: 'I wish you could see your way clear to reversing this case, because the Lane & Bodley Company is a large concern, and unless a compromise is effected they may be compelled to go into bankruptcy.' I told Mr. Cox the case would go on trial.

"Cox did not tell me to find some way to reverse it. He wanted to know if I could find my way clear. That is all I recall now. He did not say he had consulted any of my associates. He had never consulted with me before on that or any other case. I remember the case was settled about the day I returned from the South, but I took no part in it, and don't know now what the amount was."

Judge Peter F. Swing of the Circuit Court testified that he remembered the case against the Lane & Bodley Company and the American Bonding Company. He said:

"Pending the case, I don't remember of George B. Cox sending for me. I don't recall having gone to his office. I don't remember where it occurred, but I had a conversation with Mr. Cox. At any rate, Mr. Cox said to me there was some talk of a compromise and he wanted our court to give it a full and fair consideration. He said nothing to me about having a desire that the case be reversed. I told him that I would give it full consideration; that that followed without my telling him. I had no idea what interest he had in it. He did not say he had talked to my associates. I did not report to Judges Jelke and Giffen that Mr. Cox had spoken to me, and they did not report to me.

"Mr. Cox never spoke to me about any other case. After the case was submitted I expressed my idea that I thought there was error in the case. Some time after that Judge Jelke said there was something about the case that he did not like. I told him that if there was anything wrong we ought not to decide the case.

"I never made any investigation of the matter. The case terminated in our court by Judge Jelke saying that he was unalterably opposed to reversing it and that I was unalterably opposed to affirming. After that I had nothing at all to do with the case. Mr. Cox did not intimate in any way that he had any interest in the Lane & Bodley Company."

ABOUT TO QUIT MANCHURIA.

Japanese Will All Be Out of the Country in a Few Days.

WASHINGTON, March 10.—The State Department has received a cable report from one of its agents in Manchuria saying that commerce and trade there are approaching the normal condition; that the Chinese Governor is anxious to take over the civil administration as soon as possible, and that the Japanese troops will be entirely out of Manchuria in the course of a few days, when the country will be opened up to the world.

FOOD.

THE EDITOR

Explains How to Keep Up Mental and Physical Vigor.

A New Jersey editor writes:

"A long indulgence in improper food brought on a condition of nervous dyspepsia, nearly three years ago, so severe that I had to quit work entirely. I put myself on a strict regimen of Grape-Nuts food, with plenty of outdoor exercise and in a few months found my stomach so far restored that the process of digestion gave me pleasure instead of distress.

"It also built up my strength so that I was able to resume my business, which is onerous, as I not only edit my own paper but also do a great deal of 'outside' writing.

"I find that the Grape-Nuts diet enables me to write with greater vigor than ever before, and without the feeling of brain-fag with which I used to be troubled. As to bodily vigor—I can and do walk miles every day without fatigue—a few squares used to weary me before I began to live on Grape-Nuts." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

SARRIEN TO FORM MINISTRY.

MM. Bourgeois and Poincare Agree to Take Portfolios in It.

PARIS, March 10.—Jean Marie Ferdinand Sarrien definitely decided to-day to form a Ministry, and notified President Fallières of his acceptance of the task. Previously M. Sarrien had conferred with MM. Bourgeois and Poincaré, the former agreeing to take the portfolio of Foreign Affairs and the latter that of Finance or of Justice. M. Sarrien preferred to take the post of Minister of Justice, but owing to the importance of the approaching elections he decided to take the Ministry of the Interior, which he will administer until the elections.

Later M. Sarrien obtained the co-operation of Aristide Briand, the Socialist Deputy from St. Etienne, who was Chairman of the committee reporting on the law for the separation of Church and State, and of MM. Ruau and Thomson, respectively Ministers of Agriculture and of Marine in the Cabinet of M. Rouvier. He also consulted Senator Clemenceau, who may take a portfolio.

Although no definite apportionment of portfolios has yet been made, the following is an approximate arrangement:

Premier and Minister of the Interior—M. SARRIEN.

Minister of Foreign Affairs—M. BOURGEOIS.

Minister of Finance—M. POINCARE or M. CAILLAUX.

Minister of War—ADOLPHE MAUJAN or possibly M. POINCARE.

Minister of Marine—M. THOMSON.

Minister of Justice—JEAN CRUPPI or M. POINCARE.

Minister of Instruction—M. BRIAND.

Minister of Commerce—JEAN LOUIS BARTHOU or M. TROUILLOT.

Minister of Works—PIERRE PAUL GUIEYSSE or M. DESSAIGNE.

Minister of the Colonies—M. DUMERGUE.

Minister of Agriculture—M. RUAU.

The foregoing is subject to changes to-morrow, when the final make-up of the Ministry will be announced.

M. Sarrien was one of the candidates for the Presidency of France who were defeated in January by M. Fallières. He was born in 1840 at Bourbon-Lancy, in the Department of Saone-et-Loire, of which town he became Mayor when he was a young man. He served as a Captain of militia during the war with Germany, and in 1876 was elected to the Chamber of Deputies. Nineteen years later he was appointed Minister of Posts and Telegraphs, and since then he has held various Ministerial portfolios, besides having been three times Vice President of the Chamber.

M. Bourgeois, the new Foreign Minister, held a similar position for about a month in 1896. He was born in 1851 and has held many Ministerial posts. From November, 1895, to March, 1896, he was Premier. He also was a Presidential candidate last January.

CONCILIATION AT ALGECIRAS.

Short Session of Conference—German Trade Campaign in Morocco.

ALGECIRAS, March 10.—The spirit of conciliation was most marked at to-day's session of the conference on Moroccan reforms and produced a general impression that a settlement of the issues is only a matter of time and the adjustment of details. Germany has materially modified the conditions on which she conceded a Franco-Spanish police force, but France still hesitates to accept these conditions. The indications are, however, that an acceptable middle ground will be found.

To-day's debate lasted only half an hour, but it covered both the questions of police and the bank. Concerning the bank, Germany declared her willingness to concede three shares to France, whereas France claimed four, but this difference promises to be readily adjusted. Concerning the police, the German, French, and Austrian delegates made speeches. Herr von Radowitz, head of the German delegation, said that he accepted the Austrian proposition. Count Welshersheimb, the Austrian delegate, explained his project as offering a fair middle ground. The statements of Herr von Radowitz and Count Welshersheimb produced a most favorable impression, the delegates saying that a great step had been made toward an accord.

M. Revoil, the French delegate, maintained that the ports ought to have same administration, and that theref it was inadvisable to divide them according to the Austrian plan. M. Revoil's remarks indicated that he expected a speedy adjustment of the police question, which was submitted to a committee with a view to reconciling the few remaining differences. The conference adjourned until Tuesday, when, it is hoped, the work of the committee will be concluded.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, March 10.—Although Germany has made considerable concessions at Algeciras, it is believed that the conference will have been by no means profitless to her. Everything German is now popular in Morocco, and it is expected that the Sultan will grant valuable mining concessions to German subjects.

All over Germany manufacturers and merchants are now turning their attention to the Moroccan market, and before long commercial expeditions will flood Morocco with German goods. The manufacturers are carefully studying the Moroccan market in order to produce goods suitable for that country.

PRESIDENT WORKING TO BEAT THE SENATE

Talks of Statehood Bill with Leaders of Both Houses.

CANNON NOT DISCOURAGED

Administration Leaders Believe House Will Not Consent to Elimination of Two Territories.

WASHINGTON, March 10.—"There is no change in the temper of the House so far as I can see."

This was the statement made by Speaker Cannon at the White House to-day regarding Statehood legislation. This matter was discussed by the President with several of his callers, besides Speaker Cannon, Representative Hamilton of Michigan, Chairman of the House Committee on Territories, declared the House would not accept the Senate amendments. Senator Beveridge, Chairman of the Senate Committee on Territories, talked to the President about the Statehood legislation, but made no comment on it.

It is learned that a vigorous effort will be made to induce the House to concur in the Senate amendments. The movement will be supported by the Oklahoma and Indian Territory advocates of Statehood.

The question will not be taken up by the House until the return on March 19 of the members of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, who are making a trip of inspection through the South.

House leaders who represent the Administration view of the problem are positive that the House will not concur in the amendment of the Senate eliminating Arizona and New Mexico. The positive assertion is made by the "stalwarts" that the "insurgents" have not gained a single vote since the bill left the House.

When the bill comes over the programme contemplates a motion to disagree and ask for a conference. This motion will be made by Mr. Hamilton. It is thought that Mr. Babcock will interpose a motion to concur in the Senate amendments. The vote will come on this motion first, and the result of the vote will reveal the strength of the respective sides.

Those opposing Statehood for Arizona and New Mexico in the House have maintained all along that if opportunity were given for a direct vote on the specific question, and not, as was the case, on the necessity of defeating a rule direct from the Speaker's room, they had plenty of votes to defeat joint Statehood.

CAN'T AGREE ON LIBRARY.

Jamaica Unable to Decide on Site for Carnegie Building.

Unable to agree on a site for a Carnegie Library building, for which $30,000 was apportioned years ago by the Library Committee, residents of Jamaica have accepted a proposal from the Borough Library Board that a few shelves be erected in an old building in Jamaica and some books be placed on them for public use. Several free sites were offered and were refused by city officers.

Dr. Archibald C. McLachlan, head of the Jamaica City Training School, who has been active in the effort to get a public library, says it is better to take a little than nothing. The belief is current that the city can be shamed into giving a good building after the books are in circulation.

NOT TO GO TO PANAMA.

Taft Holds Commission in Washington—New York Engineer Heard.

WASHINGTON, March 10.—The Isthmian Canal Commission will not hold its next quarterly meeting on the Isthmus. Secretary Taft has sent this letter to Chairman Shonts of the commission:

> Sir: Awaiting action of Congress in respect to the type of canal and upon other matters being investigated by it, the President directs me to say that the members of the commission should remain in Washington and not take their proposed trip to the isthmus on the 20th of this month in order to hold their regular monthly meeting there on the 1st of April.
>
> Until Congress has acted it will be impossible to say what will be needed for expenditure during the next fiscal year, and the presence of the members of the commission will then be needed in Washington to decide upon the proper estimates.

Lindon W. Bates, a New York engineer, to-day addressed the Senate Committee on Interoceanic Canals in support of a plan of his own for a sea-level canal across the Isthmus of Panama. After he had spent some time in criticising the reports of the experts who investigated the matter the committees decided to ask him to submit his ideas in writing, saying that he might be recalled afterward.

To Stop Work on Battleship.

WASHINGTON, March 10.—Unless Congress authorizes a special appropriation for the purpose, the Navy Department will be unable to complete or even undertake the repairs recommended for the battleship Massachusetts now at the navy yard, New York. The work will cost $800,000, and will require two years' time.

NEW LONDON TUBE OPEN.

Baker Street-Waterloo Line One of the Yerkes Group of Railroads.

LONDON, March 10.—The Baker Street-Waterloo "Tube," one of the late Charles T. Yerkes's group of railroads, was opened to public traffic to-day.

This is the latest addition to the London underground electric railroads and a most important link in the solution of the city's traffic problem. The new artery, the length of which is 5¼ miles, runs north and south, traversing all the older lines, with which it is connected by subways.

The construction of the road was commenced in 1898 under the auspices of the late Whitaker Wright's group of roads, and it was subsequently purchased by the Yerkes-Speyer interests.

Speaking at a luncheon in celebration of the opening of the road, Edgar Speyer, the successor of Mr. Yerkes in the Chairmanship of the system, said he hoped that by the Spring of 1907 the entire underground system would be working satisfactorily. These lines, he believed, would supply a great want, do much to solve the great traffic problem, and fully justify their existence.

In some places the new "Tube" is 155 feet below the surface of the ground, and 35 feet beneath the bed of the Thames.

CENSORSHIP ON RUSSIAN ART.

Paintings Barred from Exhibition—Actors Also Affected.

ST. PETERSBURG, March 10.—Actors have been prohibited from representing royal personages or Ministers on the stage, and a censorship has been imposed upon pictures, and even statuary, exposed in public.

A number of paintings dealing with political subjects have been excluded from the annual art exhibition here. M. Amphitriatroff, formerly of the Rossya, who gained fame in January, 1902, through the publication of a pamphlet reflecting upon the imperial family, and who was exiled to Siberia and subsequently amnestied, has undertaken to publish copies of the prohibited pictures in Paris.

DEATH IF HE LENDS TO RUSSIA.

Herr Mendelssohn Receives a Number of Threatening Letters.

ST. PETERSBURG, March 10.—Herr Mendelssohn, head of the banking firm of Mendelssohn & Co. of Berlin, has received a number of letters since his arrival here, threatening him with death if he negotiates a loan with Russia.

Six detectives have been assigned to guard him.

NATAL REBELS' PUNISHMENT.

Tribe Heavily Fined and Loses a Portion of Its Territory.

MAPUMULO, Natal, March 10.—An impressive spectacle was witnessed here today, when the chiefs of the district and scores of tribesmen came in to hear the decision of the Military Commander with regard to the rising of natives last month.

The Commander fined Chief Gobizembe and his tribe 1,200 cattle and 3,500 sheep and goats, and dispossessed the tribe from a portion of its territory.

The chiefs admitted that the punishment was just, but requested a reduction of their taxes.

EARTHQUAKE IN INDIA.

Eight Persons Killed—Capital of a Punjab State Damaged.

LAHORE, March 10.—An alarming eatrhquake has occurred in Bashahr, one of the tributary hill States of the Punjab. Considerable damage has been caused at Rampur, the capital of Bashahr, and at Kakoola. Eight persons are known to have been killed and twenty-six injured.

$1,200,000 for Calabrian Sufferers.

ROME, March 10.—Premier Sonnino today introduced a bill in the Chamber of Deputies for an appropriation of $1,200,000 for the sufferers from the earthquakes in Calabria, thus completing measures looking to regeneration in the south, which are without precedent since the kingdom of the Two Sicilies joined United Italy.

Killed by Fall of a Five-Ton Tank.

John Christianson, a laborer, 29 years old, of 40 Whittlesey Avenue, West Orange, was crushed to death under a five-ton tank that fell from the second story of the Hensler Brewing Company's building in Hamburg Place, Newark, yesterday afternoon. Christianson was engaged with a number of other men in raising the tank to the second floor, when the ropes broke and it fell on him. He leaves a wife and family.

FAVOR A BERING TUNNEL.

Russian Statesmen Inclined to Support Alaska-Siberia Scheme.

ST. PETERSBURG, March 10.—A more favorable attitude is being taken here toward the scheme for a tunnel under Bering Strait and an all-rail route from the United States to Europe. Baron Loicq de Lobel, representing the American-Trans-Alaska-Siberian Company, is again pressing the project vigorously, and has made considerable progress toward securing the desired concession from Russia.

A distinct party of the Government, which has the sympathy of Premier Witte, earnestly favors closer commercial relations between the United States and Russia, and this project appeals to it, not only as a method for accomplishing this end, but also for developing the resources of Siberia.

The company, which believes that the Siberian side is as rich in gold as the Alaskan side, offers to construct the tunnel and build a road 3,000 miles in length from East Cape to Kansk, in the Government of Yeniseisk, where it will join the Siberian Railway, on condition that alternate sections of eight miles on either side of the line, together with mining concessions covered, be granted to the company.

Reports concerning the engineering difficulties, the financial responsibility of the promoters, &c., have been submitted, and have been generally favorably received by the Ministers. Emperor Nicholas has created a mixed commission, before which Baron de Lobel will make a final argument on March 15. He will ask for eighteen months in which to complete arrangements, and ten years to finish the road.

The scheme of Wendell Jackson, an American, to connect the Black and the Baltic Seas, which is an old project, originally proposed for purely strategic reasons, is now a purely commercial scheme. The depth of the canal is to be sixteen feet.

STEAMER NELSON SUNK.

Capsizes Near Brest After Grounding—Fishing Boats Save Crew.

BREST, March 10.—The British steamer Nelson, Capt. Wilkinson, hailing from London, having a crew of twenty-one men and bound from Port Talbot, Wales, with 3,000 tons of coal, for St. Nazaire, France, grounded on the Pierres Vertes, near the Island of Molene, this morning.

After refloating herself by means of her own power, the Nelson drifted away and sank shortly afterward in the Fromveur Passage, between Molene Island and Ushant, twenty-seven miles west by north of this port.

The crew of the Nelson was saved by fishing boats, and will arrive this evening or to-morrow morning at the village of Le Conquet, and from there will be brought to Brest.

The Nelson was of 1,173 tons, was built at Sunderland, England, in 1898, and was owned by the Nelson Steamship Company of London.

NEW GOVERNOR OF ALASKA.

W. B. Hoggatt, a Former Naval Officer, Is Appointed.

WASHINGTON, March 10.—President Roosevelt announced to-day that he had decided to appoint Wilfred B. Hoggatt to be Governor of Alaska. Mr. Hoggatt is a resident of Juneau. He was a navy officer for eighteen years.

The appointment was originally offered to Capt. David H. Jarvis, but he declined it. He was a supporter of Mr. Hoggatt, and strongly recommended the appointment to the President. Mr. Hoggatt also was supported by Senator Hemingway of Indiana.

COAL AND OIL INQUIRY.

Inter-State Commerce Commission Resolves to Take It Up.

WASHINGTON, March 10.—In compliance with the joint resolution of Congress, approved March 7, in the matter of the relation of common carriers to the coal and oil industries, the Inter-State Commerce Commission has directed that an investigation be instituted at once.

This proceeding will be set for hearing soon and persons be required to appear and testify and to produce books, documents, and papers, as the commission may see fit.

MARCH 1906

HONESTY IN BUSINESS THE PLEA OF DR. ELIOT

Harvard President on Ethics of Corporation Control.

BIG REWARDS ARE NECESSARY

But Dishonest Promotion, Huge Salaries, Dummy Directors, and Other Evils Are Condemned.

CHICAGO, March 10.—President Charles W. Eliot of Harvard University was the guest of honor to-night at the banquet of the Merchants' Club. He delivered an extended address on "The Ethics of Managing Large Corporations." The speaker found much to commend in the manner in which some institutions are conducted, but condemned strongly the practice of using "dummy" Directors, of paying huge salaries to officers of corporations, and other evils.

Of the importance of ethics in the conduct of everyday affairs the speaker said:

"You and I, and all the people in this country whom we may be said to represent or typify, are fully persuaded that the most effective teachers of ethics today are the righteous men who are active in all the secular affairs of the world—that is, in farming, manufacturing, trade, the professions, and politics.

"These are the men who, being righteous, can best influence the people to piety, justice, and righteousness. These are the men who, being themselves unrighteous, may drag the people down toward depravity and sin.

"The recluse and the religionist who separates his religion from conduct are losing their hold on civilized men, and the only ethics that command respect are the ethics that guide and control men in the intensest labors and struggles of the actual world.

"It is no wonder that the ethics of corporation management are in some respects indeterminate, and are, therefore, an urgent subject of public discussion, for the invention of the business corporation itself is hardly more than fifty years old, and this new creation deals with forms of property which are highly novel.

"It is hard for this generation to keep in mind how very new are most of the actual forms of property and all the present modes of doing business. Two generations of men will carry us back to the time when in all our broad country there were no telegraphs or telephones, no railroads, no canals of any value, no wagon roads to speak of, no business corporations, no insurance companies in the modern sense, no safe deposits vaults, no trust companies, no steam engines, no agricultural machinery, no elevators, no stock yards, no electric distribution of power, and no mines except surface iron mines.

"Is it any wonder that the ethics of modern business are not yet firmly settled? The ethical conventions gradually agreed upon during centuries concerning transactions in the ancient forms of property have had to be extended and adapted to immense new forms of property and new processes of production and distribution.

"In making these extensions and adaptations Legislatures and courts are in arrears; they have not been able to keep up with the onward rush of eager and adventurous business, particularly in this country, where industrial and commercial enterprise is stimulated by a political and social freedom heretofore unknown.

"It is also true that Directors and managers of corporations need to be convinced that corporations have souls, which may be lost by just such conduct as would cause the loss of one man's soul, and that the question, 'What does it profit a man to gain the whole world and lose his own soul?' applies to corporations."

Evils of Overcapitalization.

Dealing with the question of capital, Mr. Eliot said:

"At any stage of any corporate business the questions of capitalization and overcapitalization may come up, and if new capital is sought at a period when industries are active and the public is sanguine, Directors or managers will be tempted to overcapitalization. Secrecy as regards earning power may give opportunities for deception and subsequent disaster.

"There are two aspects of overcapitalization which demand the attention of the public. In the first place, the several States of the Union have power to prevent the issue of stock not fully paid for, if they see fit to exercise that power.

"As a fact, legislation on this subject is not uniform, and the States really compete with each other for the taxes which may be derived from corporations established within their respective borders. The looser States compete with the stricter by making their laws as little restrictive for the corporations as possible, and leaving the investing public to take care of itself.

"This demoralizing competition is, to say the least, an abandonment by some States of their true position as moral teachers.

"Secondly, overcapitalization is an evil because of its effect on the state of mind of wage earners. Reasonable wage earners are content to have ingenuity, skill, and knowledge in discovering resources and organizing industries reap a considerable immediate reward in the case of new undertakings, because they realize that the laboring classes, in common with the entire community, reap advantages from all successful industrial undertakings.

"But they are never willing that established industries should issue either bonds or stock which are not fully paid for, because they believe that the wage earners can in that way be compelled for all time to earn, not only their own wages, but dividends on a stock, part of which represents neither money invested nor any contribution of human skill and labor.

"The alleged overcapitalization of a large proportion of American industries managed by corporations is one of the main causes of the existing industrial unrest."

Duties of the Promoter.

He then took up the criticism of promotion as practiced at present. Speaking of the reward a promoter reserves for himself in undertaking to float a scheme, he said:

"If the advantages of the plan are obvious and the risks are consequently light, an ordinary commission on the transactions may be an adequate reward for the promotion; but if the adventure is obviously a risky one, it is just that a large reward should tempt promoters to take the risk.

"It is for the interest of all classes in the community—the capitalist and the laborer, the large investor and the small investor, the Government and the taxpayer—that competent men should be tempted by large rewards to venture in industrial enterprises whose success, immediate or ultimate, is far from certain.

"Indeed, one of the reasons that American efficiency in business has been so extraordinarily promoted by incorporation with limited liability is that corporations, by massing the means of many men, can venture into enterprises from which the single individual or the partnership would shrink. The corporation thus becomes a promoter of freedom and boldness in business ventures.

"The reward for skill and success in promotion may reasonably and rightly be proportionate to the amount of skill required to develop the new enterprise and to the gravity of the risks to be run, as well as to the amount of money which must be invested in it. It is human ability which makes such undertakings successful, and the human ability is entitled to its reward, just as the money put into the venture is entitled to its interest.

"Two ethical principles ought, however, to govern all promoting schemes. In the first place, all representations concerning the immediate or future value of the bonds and stocks issued should be absolutely true as regards the facts stated, and moderate and reasonable as regards the prospects of future profit. Secondly, if years are going to be needed to develop the new enterprise, the promoters have no right to abandon the undertaking so soon as they have sold enough bonds and stock to give them an immediate return in commissions or rakeoffs.

"It is proper to add that in regard to promotion a distinction may easily be made between public service corporations and all others. There is much to be said on behalf of the proposition that there should be no water in the stock of public service corporations; yet if this principle had been applied to all street railway and lighting companies during the past twenty-five years, the public would have waited long for facilities which they have greatly enjoyed and profited by. In such enterprises there are often heavy risks, and success can come only through the address, energy, and steady good judgment of the promoters and managers. Hence men will not undertake them for the ordinary return on safe investments."

What Directors Should Do.

Of the duties of Directors Mr. Eliot said:

"All the Directors of a corporation are under obligations to give their personal attention and vigilant care to the business of the corporation. They are responsible not only for wrongdoing of their own, but also for inattention to the wrongdoing of others, and for failure to act when action was needed.

"It follows from this principle that the Directors in any business corporation ought to be men who understand the business of that corporation and have time to attend to it. Thus a bank should be a bank and not a promotion office; and its Directors should be banking experts, or men who thoroughly understand the relations of banks to private business and public finance.

"A Director who gives or sells the use of his name to a board of whose work he knows little or nothing misleads the public. Dummy Directors and figurehead Directors, whose names appear in from twenty to seventy boards, are not Directors in any proper sense under the laws as they now stand. They have wrongfully assumed a trust they have no power to execute.

"Every Director ought to have a pecuniary investment in his corporation which might fairly be supposed to give him a considerable individual or personal interest in its success.

"His motive in becoming a Director [illegible] uld be a desire and purpose to make [illegible] business of that particular corporat[illegible] n successful and beneficial. It should not be to gratify his vanity, or to acquire information which he can use for the benefit of some other corporation or of his own business interests, or to lend his name as an easy way of paying for other favors; least of all should it be to secure control of large resources for ulterior ends."

On the use of power as a Director to depreciate stock in order to gain control of a corporation he quoted this "saying of Mohammed":

"That which is lawful is clear, and that which is unlawful likewise; but there are certain doubtful things between the two from which it is well to abstain."

Publicity as a Remedy.

Turning to publicity as one remedy for corporation evils, Mr. Eliot said:

"All laws which promote publicity as to the management of corporations, by enforcing the publication of clear accounts and intelligible statements of the condition of the corporation, help toward the improvement of the ethics of corporation management.

"Three kinds of corporation, at least, should be forced to publish at brief intervals intelligible accounts which reveal the true state of the plant, the bulk of the business, the proportion of expenses to receipts, the salaries, and the gain or loss, though not all of them for quite the same reasons, investment and fiduciary cerns like banks, trust companies, savings banks, and insurance companies; public franchise companies in general, and all great corporations which appeal frequently to the investing public.

"In general, secret management and secret acts in important corporations have a pernicious tendency, and particularly they tempt Directors to malfeasance, and excite in the public mind suspicions, sometimes just and sometimes unjust, but always injurious.

"The foundation of the belief that publicity will promote justice and honor in corporation management is the conviction in the minds of Directors, public officials, the business community, and the press that, on the whole, the mass of the people will come out on the side of righteousness. Publicity cannot prove a remedy for abuses, old or new, unless the public before which the facts are to be brought is a moral public. The public opinion which will reform abuses and suppress evils must itself be an honest and strenuous public opinion."

Abuse in Huge Salaries.

Mr. Eliot called "the exaggeration of salaries and perquisites" in corporations "a great abuse." He continued:

"The huge single salaries of recent times overpay their recipients. The excuse for them has been that in conducting a large business the right man is cheap at any price and the wrong man dear at any price. The fallacy of this argument is that the exaggerated salary will not really get or keep the best man—indeed, is not needed in order to get or keep him.

"The best man for any large service is the man who has such a natural taste and faculty for that kind of work that he would take it and keep it without any very keen attention to the amount of salary, provided the amount be sufficient to provide for him a suitable mode of comfortable life and a suitable provision for old age or disability. His reward comes chiefly from gratified ambition, possession of power, and sense of achievement.

"For all men who manage large affairs with zeal and efficiency a simple mode of life is greatly to be desired, and indeed is almost indispensable to their continued efficiency. They, of course, need opportunities for recreation and refreshment; but even in their pleasures they should be simple, not elaborate.

"Expensive establishments are a mere hindrance to them, and luxuries impair their working power, or cut short their period of serviceableness. Huge salaries, therefore, in corporation service are worse than needless; they are positively harmful.

"To the service itself exaggerated salaries do harm of quite another sort; they increase the chronic irritation between capital and labor. The workingman who earns $2 or $3 a day cannot see the justice in paying the President of a railroad, of a bank, or of an insurance company $300 a day; and he never will see it.

"He will never believe that any man can fairly earn such a salary. He will never admit that the salary of a manager should be proportionte to the agglomerated bulk of the business he manages, while the workman's wages remain proportionate only to his own individual daily productiveness; and herein the workingman is right.

"The exaggerated salaries are in themselves unjust, inexpedient, and demoralizing to all concerned. Indeed, the professions of law and medicine have already suffered a considerable spiritual damage in consequence of the bad example which exaggerated business salaries have set for professional charges."

Care of the Employes.

Mr. Eliot devoted part of his address to the care of corporations over their employes, saying:

"The first duty of a corporation toward its employes is to provide those external conditions which will promote health, cheerfulness, and vigor in the working people. The efficiency of any large body of workmen is greatly promoted by healthy and cheerful surroundings. What is nowadays called welfare work is not a benevolence or a charity; it is simple economy, common sense, and common humanity. It requires some small expenditure on the part of a corporation, but primarily it requires considerateness and an intelligent comprehension of human nature. This consideration it is the clear duty of every corporation to give.

"Again, every corporation should study the means of prolonging the earning of wages beyond the period of greatest efficiency. Provision for men who have passed their prime, but are still capable of the less active forms of service, all corporations will make, that have quick consciences in regard to their duties to employes, or intelligent comprehension of their own interests. Early superannuation is a very depressing condition in any calling.

"The responsibility of corporations for the ethical training of their employes grows heavier and heavier in this country, as corporations become larger, and an increasing proportion of the working people of the country is found in the service of corporations. In a nation which puts every young man into its army or navy for two or three years, the army and navy can be used as schools of obedience, neatness, politeness, fidelity, and loyalty. They are so used in some measure by European nations, though not adequately. In the United States the industrial army must perform this function, instead of a standing army and a navy, and the armies of industry are, on the whole, much better fitted for this function than the public forces trained for the savagery of war.

"Well-managed corporations can provide admirable discipline in courtesy, neatness, punctual co-operation, and loyalty, if only they systematically use judicious means for giving this ethical training.

"To organize these means and use them habitually requires forethought, wisdom, firmness, and good temper in corporate management, and these qualities in the managers should be sought for and paid for. No corporate expenditure could possibly be more productive, from the business point of view, or more profitable toward the improvement of the National character."

FOX BOUNTY LAW STANDS.

Attempt to Repeal It to Aid George Gould's Bred Foxes Fails.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWTON, N. J., March 10.—About the only favor Sussex County has sought of the Legislature now in session is the repeal of the act requiring the County collectors to pay $3 bounty for each fox hide brought in. An attempt to repeal the act was defeated in the Assembly this week.

"On one side of Sussex County are New York woods, and Pennsylvania forests are on another side. Sussex has been paying for the foxes killed in both, as well as for those killed in her own borders. It is said that the New York and Pennsylvania woodsmen have been getting rich sending fox hides to Sussex farmers, till they have collected the bounty. The hides are returned to the gunners minus the ears, but still good for the market.

Sussex has been feeling the drain of the bounty money. George Gould's estate at Lakewood is in Ocean County. Mr. Gould is preparing to breed foxes for his fox hunts. The bounty law stood in the way and Senator Shinn introduced a repeal bill. He put it through the Senate easily enough, and the Sussex County delegation welcomed it in the Assembly. But Speaker Robbins and the other South Jersey members said Mr. Gould's foxes would not stay in Lakewood or even in Ocean County, but would overrun into other counties, and they joined forces for the defeat of the bill. When it came up for final passage the vote was 10 for repeal and 45 against.

MARINE INSURANCE DECISION.

If Repairs Cost More Than Half Value, Ship May Be Abandoned.

CHICAGO, March 10.—Judge K. M. Landis, in the Federal court, to-day handed down a decision of importance to marine interests, it being, in effect, that when a boat is placed in such a position that it will cost more than one-half of the original price of the boat to pull it out of danger and make repairs the owners of the boat are justified in abandoning it and calling upon the insurance companies for the full amount of the insurance.

The decision was made in the case of the steamer Argo, owned by the Graham & Morton Company of this city. It was driven ashore near Holland, Mich., last Fall. The passengers were rescued, but it was found impossible to pull the boat off, and the owners finally decided that it would cost more than one-half of the original value of the boat—$60,000—to pull it from the sand and make necessary repairs. They therefore decided to abandon it; and called upon the insurance companies for the full amount of insurance upon the boat and its contents, which in this instance amounted to $90,000.

The companies refused to pay, and the resulting suit was decided by Judge Landis in favor of the boat owners.

INSPECT WATER PLANT.

National Civic Federation Members at Indianapolis.

INDIANAPOLIS, March 10.—Several members of the Committee on Investigation of the Public Ownership Commission of the National Civic Federation to-day visited the plant of the Indianapolis Water Company.

Those of the committee here are Prof. Frank Goodnow, Columbia University; Prof. J. H. Gray, Northwestern University; Edward Bemis, Superintendent of the Cleveland Water Works; Walton Clark, Third Vice President of the United Gas Improvement Company of Philadelphia; Timothy Healy, President of the International Union of Stationary Firemen; Frank McNulty, President of the Electrical Workers' International Brotherhood, and Edward A. Moffatt, Secretary of the commission.

WILL ASK MR. CRAVATH ABOUT EQUITABLE PLAN

Armstrong Committee Seeks Light on Mutualization.

HEARING PLEASED MEMBERS

While Some Concessions Are Likely They Consider That Their General Plan Stood the Test.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, March 10.—When Paul D. Cravath appears next Thursday at the adjourned hearing on the bills proposed for the reorganization of the insurance business in this State, members of the Armstrong Investigating Committee will try to obtain from him an authoritative declaration of Thomas F. Ryan's intentions on the question of mutualizing the Equitable Life Assurance Society through the retirement of the stock. The programme for next Thursday is virtually part of the plan on which the committee has dealt with the Equitable situation from the beginning.

The committee considered two courses—either to avail itself of the decision of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court in the Lord case and introduce a bill providing for the compulsory mutualization of the society through conferring an unrestricted right to vote on the policy holders, or to submit some permissive measures which would make the way plain for complete mutualization through the retirement of the stock, if the Equitable controlling interest was so disposed.

The first course was dismissed by the committee, it appears, on the ground that the degree of mutualization that could be conferred under it was at best partial in character, and that if it were attempted it would invite litigation and a possible attack upon the entire scheme of insurance reform that the committee advocated. So two sections were proposed for the new insurance law, one providing that the Directors of a stock insurance company, with the consent of the majority stock, could confer the right to vote on policy holders, and the other that the Directors could, with the consent of the majority stock and of the majority of the policy holders, obtained through a canvass similar to that for an election of Trustees, retire the stock altogether upon an agreement between its conrolling interest and the policy holders as to the value.

To Include All Stock Insurance.

The Armstrong Committee realized that these bills were altogether permissive in character, but, in its desire to avoid special legislation of any kind, it intended that they should apply not only to the Equitable case, but to all stock insurance companies. The committee had, however, in mind particularly the situation in the Equitable, as developed since Mr. Ryan bought the majority stock from James H. Hyde and turned it over to the Trustees.

In that situation there are three facts which the committee considers important: First, the declaration of Mr. Ryan on the stand that it was his purpose to have the stock retired, taking for it the $2,500,000 he paid with 4 per cent. on the money; second, the declaration made to the Trustees last Summer of a similar intention, and, third, the report of the existing administration to the Board of Directors a few weeks ago that counsel were to proceed to work out a mutualization plan just as soon as it appeared what legislation was going to be adopted.

The Armstrong Committee now considers that it has thrown all the light possible on the situation, and in the absence of objection from other sources to the two mutualization bills it reported, assumes that they represent the legislation that will be passed on that point. In asking Mr. Cravath what he thinks on the matter, as Mr. Ryan's counsel, the committee expects to elicit a declaration of Mr. Ryan's intentions. Hence the developments of next Thursday are awaited with interest.

Concessions Are Probable.

The members of the Armstrong Committee left town after the close of yesterday's sessions pretty well satisfied with the way in which their general scheme of insurance reorganization had withstood most of the objections made. While there was a disposition to concede that there would have to be some liberalization of the proposed section of the insurance law restricting the expenses of getting new business, and that some slight modifications in other particulars might have to be made to avoid complications with companies outside this State, it seemed to the committee that the rest of its recommendations stood practically untouched by the criticism of the companies.

In the matter of limiting the expenses of new business, the point made by Actuary McClintock of the Mutual Life was deemed to be well founded. Mr. McClintock declared that the Northwestern Mutual and the Massachusetts Mutual, two of the three companies that the committee had cited as being able to keep their expenses of new business within the loading of the first premiums, had reported to the committee as such expenses little else than the commissions and cost of medical inspection, while the New York companies included in the cost of new business part of the home office expenses, advertising, and general salary accounts.

Mr. McClintock figured out that if the Northwestern Mutual and the Massachusetts Mutual had reported on the same basis as the other companies they would have to reduce the cost of their new business one-third to keep within the limitation that the Armstrong Committee proposed. Accordingly, the suggestion has been made that some such expenses as advertising connected with new business and the allotments of office expenses and salaries be excepted from the expenses which must be kept within the loadings, plus the estimated mortality gains of the first five years.

It is believed that some objection will be made next Thursday to the repeal of Section 56 of the insurance law, which now makes it necessary for a policy holder to apply to the Attorney General in order to sue for an accounting. Mutterings have already been heard from some of the "Old Guard" in the Legislature in both parties, and these are believed to reflect sentiment which has its origin in certain insurance offices in New York.

It was learned here yesterday that the agency department of the Mutual Life Insurance Company has been for some time aware of the fact that Andrew C. Fields was in Texas, not far from the offices of the firm of Chamberlain & Gillette, in San Antonio, General Agents of the Mutual for that territory. The Mr. Gillette of this firm is a brother of Dr. Gillette, the Second Vice President of the Mutual, and the firm has been one of those which had a special overwriting commission on business in its territory. It did not appear yesterday whether the Truesdale Investigating Committee had made any effort to bring Fields back.

ACCOUNTANTS FOR REFORM.

They Think Outside Experts Should Report on Insurance Accounts.

At a meeting of the Joint Committee on Insurance of the American Association of Public Accountants and the New York State Society of Certified Public Accountants at the office of the Secretary of the National Association, A. Lowes Dickinson, yesterday, it was decided that the associations should seek legislation at Albany which would reform the present reports required by the State Insurance Department by requiring certified statements from public accountants as to the conditions of the insurance companies and also to bring about a reorganization of the State Insurance Department.

The representatives of the National body are Messrs. L. H. Conant, R. H. Montgomery, A. L. Dickinson, L. O. Fisher, and F. H. Low, and of the State Society the following certified public accountants: F. J. McRae, Alfred Rose, C. S. Ludlam, H. R. Cook, and Duncan MacInnes.

It was the failure of the Armstrong Committee to make recommendations relative to changes in insurance reports and accounting that caused the associations to take action. At present the accounting is done by the companies through their auditors, and by the Insurance Department through its authorized representatives. The accountants ask that accountants, not connected with either companies or Insurance Department, be employed to certify to the accounts of the companies. Members of the joint committee have recently examined the books of the companies and are qualified to suggest amendments to the proposed bills.

MORTON LETTER LEAVES WALL STREET GUESSING

Seems to Hint at Plot Against Insurance Holdings.

SOME SHOW DECLINE NOW

Equitable's President Declines to Name the "Small Number of Men" of Whom He Spoke.

Wall Street took an interest yesterday in the position assumed by President Morton of the Equitable Life in reference to the proposed change in the insurance law requiring all life insurance companies to dispose of their bank and trust company stocks. In his statement presented at the legislative hearing at Albany on Friday, President Morton said:

"If the Legislature enacts a law compelling the sale of these holdings it would place the life insurance companies at the mercy of a comparatively small number of men, who, within certain limits, could, by acting together, fix the price at which these stocks could be marketed. Indeed, there are indications that movements of this character are already on foot."

The interpretation put upon these words of President Morton in the financial district was that he believed a concerted movement to be under way to undermine the market for some of the bank stocks held by the large life insurance companies. Mr. Morton himself, when requested to amplify his statement made to the Legislature, said that he did not care to discuss the matter further at this time.

Wall Street is therefore left to its own conclusions as to the exact meaning of President Morton's words. The suggestion that the prices of certain bank and trust company stocks were being purposely depressed in order to force the sale of the insurance companies' holdings of these stocks at low prices recalls the explanation offered last Fall for the declines in some of the bank stocks in which the Equitable and other life insurance companies were largely interested.

The weakness of National Bank of Commerce stock, for instance, is said to be due to a belief that the life insurance companies would be obliged to dispose of their holdings of this stock. Much liquidation was said to have been induced by this belief.

The Equitable's largest holdings of bank and trust company stocks are those in the Equitable and Mercantile Trust Companies and in the National Bank of Commerce. A comparison of the prices of these stocks with the prices quoted early in October last year is given below:

	October, 1905.	March, 1906.
Equitable Trust	*575	490
Fifth Avenue Trust	540	*590
Lawyers' Mortgage	188	185
Lawyers' Title	330	300
Mercantile Trust	*1,000	*900
National Bank of Commerce	200	188

*Offered at; no bid.

It will be seen that in most cases present prices for these stocks are below the quotations in October last. The figures given are the bid prices, where any bid price was quoted, the figure at which stocks were offered being given in other cases. The decline in the stock of the National Bank of Commerce, the market for which is freer than any for the other stocks mentioned, is the one which seems to most strongly support the supposition that prices have been depressed for a purpose.

There is nothing in President Morton's statement to indicate the individuals included in "the comparatively small number of men" who, President Morton said, would have the life insurance companies at their mercy, so far as these stocks went, if the Legislature should force the insurance companies to dispose of their bank and trust company stocks. The opinion was expressed in Wall Street yesterday that a more specific statement by President Morton on this point would be highly interesting.

POLE HUNTER'S AIRSHIP TO BE READY IN MAY

Wellman Tells Plans for 600-Mile Flight from Spitzbergen.

WILL CHAT BY WIRELESS

Explorer Will Keep in Touch with Civilization All the Way—Tests Begin in June.

Walter Wellman, the explorer who hopes to discover the north pole by airship, returned from Paris yesterday on the French liner La Lorraine. Mr. Wellman went abroad some months ago to let contracts for the airship which he will use in the arctic. He met many of the most prominent aeronauts in Europe, and they gave him much valuable advice regarding construction and navigation of the machine.

The ship in which he is to make the trip is being built in Paris and will be completed in May. It is to be 164 feet long and 53½ feet at its greatest diameter. The surface will be 21,000 square feet, and the volume of gas will be 225,000 cubic feet, giving a lifting power of 16,000 pounds. The weight of the car is 7,500 pounds. The power will be furnished by three motors of 55, 25, and 5 horse power respectively, which will give a speed of from ten to twenty miles an hour.

"Our headquarters will be at Spitzbergen," said Mr. Wellman. "The distance from there to the pole is about 600 miles. We will carry enough gasoline to go 1,800 to 2,100 miles. In order to inflate the airship it will be necessary to send to Spitzbergen 100 tons of sulphuric acid and 60 tons of iron filings. Then again I will have to build a hall to hold the ship, and this will cost $10,000. The need will be seen when I state that the envelope weighs 21,000 pounds and the valves and fittings bring it up to 30,000.

"The envelope is of three thicknesses, two of cotton and one of silk. Over this are three coatings of rubber. It has a resistance of 5,000 pounds to the square yard.

"I have chartered the arctic ship Frithjof for two years, and in this we will go to Spitzbergen in June. The reason I have chartered her for two years is that, if anything happens or if we are prevented from making an ascent, we will effect repairs and try again the following year.

"The first step will be to have a series of trials. The party, which will include two French aeronauts, a scientist, a physician, and myself, will make these trials. I think that things will be in shape so that we can make the real start for the unexplored regions of the North in August.

"The question of procedure was one on which the aeronauts disagreed. Some said we ought to build a dirigible which could sail fast and make the trip as quickly as possible without keeping in touch with the earth. The other faction advised that one should be built with regard to safety and sanity and that I should keep constantly in touch with a guide rope. I decided on the latter plan. The trip will be made at a distance of from 160 to 300 feet above the earth. It may take twenty-five hours to make the journey or it may take many more.

"I will probably stop on earth to take the depth of water and make other scientific observations. In case it is necessary we will have for use four motors sleds which weigh 210 pounds each., Something may go wrong and we may land in open water. For this reason I am taking a light metallic boat. I call this my return ticket.

"This talk about the temperature is rather foolish. In the ascent from Orleans we went up one mile and there was only a slight change in the temperature. The prevailing idea of an airship is wrong. The airship of popular fancy is but a toy compared with ours, which is ten times larger than the largest of Santos Dumont's. Ours is bigger than the Le Baudy ship which has just been ordered by the French Government.

"In Summer in the arctic regions the temperature is not much above freezing. The region is most favorable for aeronautics, all things considered. There are no night and day there as here and in Europe, where the sun and warmth contract the gases.

"Another innovation is that I will be in touch with the rest of the world by wireless. I will return to Europe in a short time and continue my experiments."

A BIG ST. PATRICK'S PARADE.

Indications Are 'Twill Be the Largest in Years—The Dinners.

The annual parade in honor of St. Patrick promises this year to exceed any ever held in New York. Martin J. Kane, the Grand Marshal, and his aides, Patrick J. Gilroy and Peter J. Molloy, have received reports from the various organizations to be represented in the parade. They indicate unusual enthusiasm.

The line of march will be through Forty-third Street from Fifth Avenue, north on Madison Avenue to Fifty-second Street, west to Fifth Avenue, north on Fifth Avenue to 120th Street, east to Madison Avenue, north to 126th Street, to Sulzer's Harlem River Park and Casino, where the parade will be reviewed by Archbishop Farley, the Grand Marshal, and his staff. After the parade has disbanded there will be a celebration at the park.

The day will be celebrated with more public dinners than ever before. The dinner of the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick at Delmonico's will be the most largely attended, but the Friends of Ireland, who are an enthusiastic lot, will be just as merry in the Roman Court at Shanley's. Way uptown in the Bronx the Irish will gather to tell one another and their friends of other races who St. Patrick was and why he should be revered. In Harlem some "Friendly Sons of Harlem" will do the same thing, and then they will explain why they are "Friendly Sons of Harlem," without regard to St. Patrick. Brooklyn, also, will have several dinners to commemorate the day.

The Friendly Sons of St. Patrick will be addressed by W. Bourke Cockran, Judge Thomas C. O'Sullivan, Mayor McClellan, Rear Admiral Coghlan, Congressman McCall of Massachusetts, and Thomas A. Daly of Philadelphia.

$5,000 Job for Anti-McCarren Leader.

Borough President Coler of Brooklyn announced yesterday that he had appointed Frank J. Ulrich Superintendent of Highways at $5,000 a year. Mr. Ulrich is the anti-McCarren leader of the Sixth Assembly District, and is active in the Brooklyn League of Democratic Clubs. Some of the Municipal Ownership leaders are not pleased.

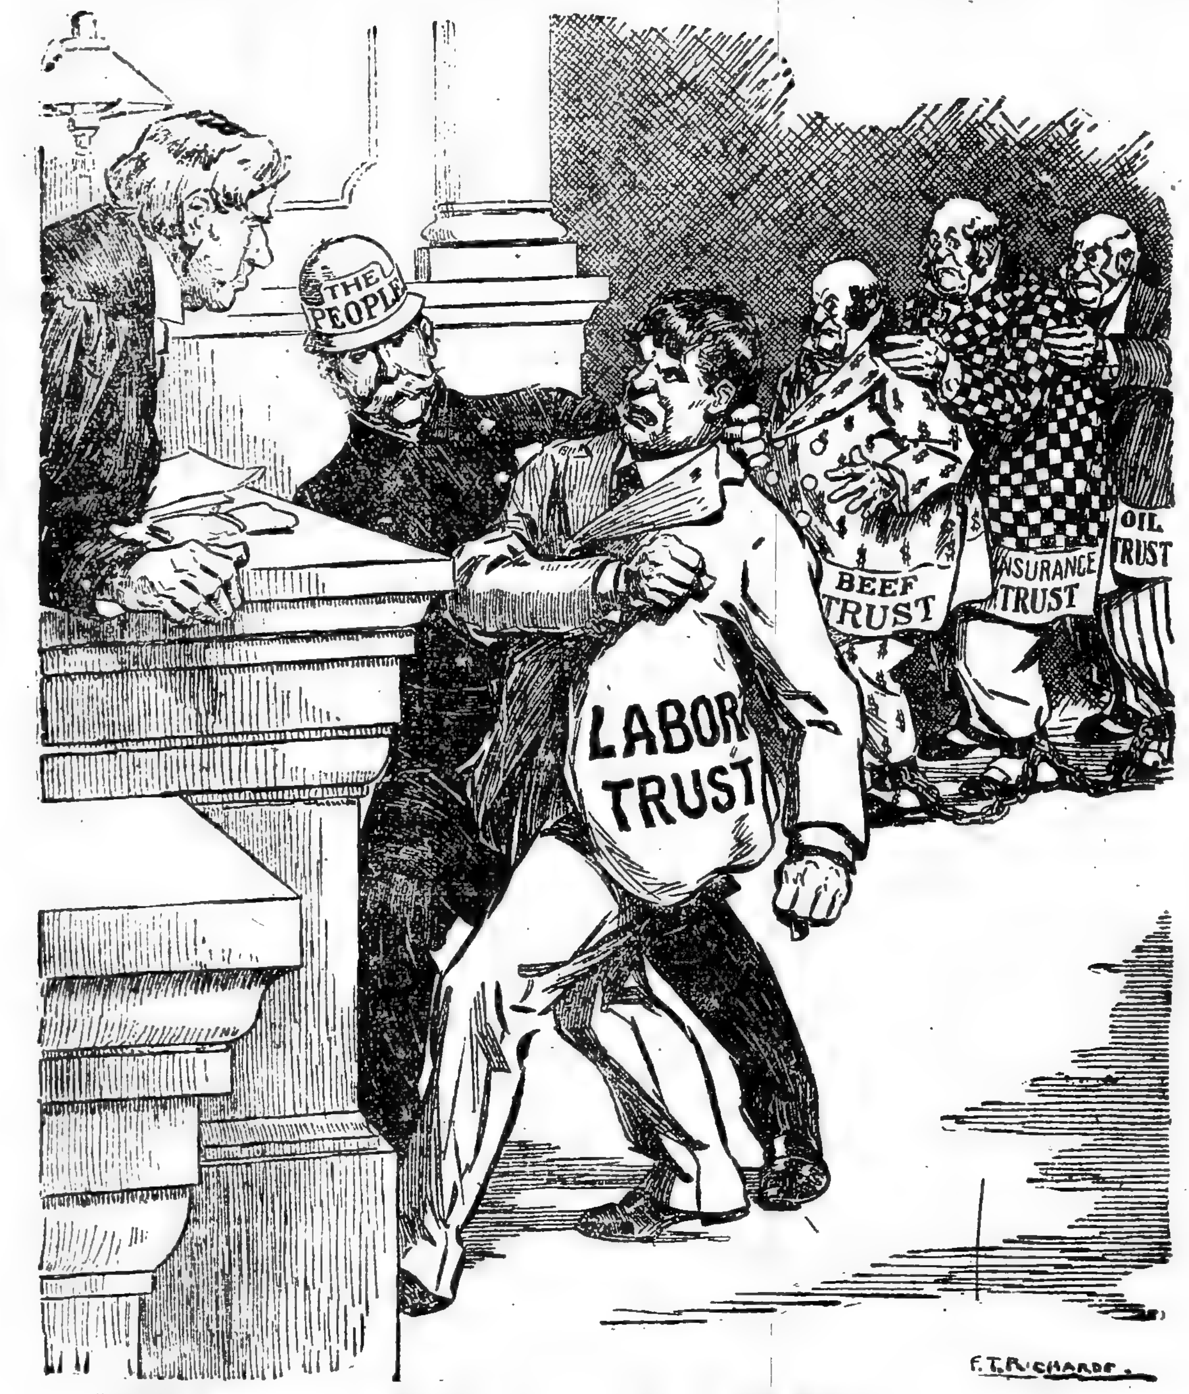
VOL. 1. No. 8. NEW YORK, MARCH, 1906. Price, 10 Cents.



The Chief Offender

The American Federation of Labor is numerically the largest trust in existence.

The labor union trust and every capital trust was organized to gather extra gain or money from the common people.

It makes no gain for the beef trust if one member charges another member an extra price.

It makes no gain for the labor union trust if a bricklayer member gains an extra price for working for a member of the carpenter's union. All that is but "swapping nickels."

The feed to fatten the trust must come from the common people who are not members and who therefore cannot be counted in on the division of the spoils.

It is plainly the common people who must be legally and genteelly "held up" and made to contribute funds to fatten the trust members. The common man who buys a pair of shoes or suit of clothes must pay something extra to cover whatever the labor trust has been able to "boost" the price of labor above the natural price governed by supply and demand. So the man who buys beef must pay the extra price forced by the beef trust. Therefore it seems plain that all trust both of capital and labor are contrary to the interests of the common people and are oppressors just in proportion as they have the power to force money from, and tyrannous conditions upon the people.

There would be no limit to the tyranny if the people did not protect themselves.

This condition has demanded the organization of Citizens' Associations in the cities and villages, massing the power of the people for self-protection, and the plan works.

There are now nearly 500 local ass'ns affiliated and working with the Nat'l Citizens' Industrial Ass'n.

It has only lately occurred to the people that when any labor union trust calls a strike, ties up an industry, pickets, boycotts and interferes in various ways with the affairs of citizens, they come under the Nat'l laws governing trusts which prohibits acts in restraint of trade.

It is the right and duty of every employer to demand of the Prosecuting or District Att'y that he proceed against the members of the labor trust whenever they break the law by the illegal acts of boycott, picketing or any sort of interference with business and commerce. We are all free American born with the right to work when and where we please, to employ or not employ whom we please, and to conduct our affairs without interference by any impudent member of any trust on the face of the earth and the man who will not resent such interference and attempted tyranny is a coward and a traitor to his fellow-man.

Let the members of the labor trust be brought to the bar of judgment whenever they break the law "in the restraint of trade" or become violent lawbreakers in other ways.

The laws are for the protection of the common people and it must be made very unsafe for any labor union trust member or any other trust member to break them.

If you are oppressed and tyrannized over, compel the public officers to do their duty.

Let this country be conducted in the interest of the common man and not solely for any combination, either of capital or labor.

The Square Deal Magazine publishes facts about the labor trust in an educational campaign to place these facts before the people clearly, stripped of sentiment and fancy. It is on sale at newsstands at 10c. or sent a year for $1.00. It is boycotted by some news-dealers with labor union proclivities.

If the news-dealer says he don't sell it, suppose you transfer your trade to another who believes in supplying papers and magazines that people call for without regard to the dictates of any labor union trust.

ADMIT THE BIG FOUR PAID REBATES IN CASH

General Freight Agent Testifies Before Commerce Commission.

OTHER DISCLOSURES MADE

Witnesses, Under Promise of Immunity from Prosecution, Tell of a Favored Weighing List.

CINCINNATI, March 10.—That the Big Four Railroad had paid cash rebates for a shipment of steel from Pittsburg to Kansas City and had otherwise favored shippers was testified to by General Freight Agent George H. Ingalls in the hearing to-day before the Inter-State Commerce Commission.

Commissioners Prouty and Clements were on hand at the Federal Building for the inquiry, and a number of railroad officials, chiefly from the Big Four Railroad, had responded to summonses to appear before the commission. T. E. Conner, General Agent of the road in this city, after receiving a promise of immunity from prosecution for anything he might disclose, said that a large number of shippers were permitted to ship over his road at their own statement of the weight shipped.

"The Cincinnati Freight Committee determines who shall go on this favored weighing list," he said, but Mr. Conner declared that he had no knowledge who constituted this Freight Committee. The Cincinnati Gas, Coke and Coal Mining Company was one shipper whose bills were presented as showing a favored rate, and the committee requested that the witness produce a copy of every ticket and every shipping bill on every shipment by the Cincinnati Gas, Coke and Coal Mining Company.

Mr. Ingalls then was called and claimed the same immunity granted to Mr. Conner. Ingalls said that he understood that coal had been shipped at weights less than actual weight, so that the difference caused a reduction of earnings of from $3 to $9 per car. Being pressed for a specific instance where any traffic on his system had been carried at less than published rates, Mr. Ingalls said:

"We carried a shipment of steel from Pittsburg to Kansas City last year at less than tariff."

"Did you pay a rebate?"

"Yes, Sir," replied Mr. Ingalls.

"How did you pay this rebate, by cash, check, underbilling, damage claim, commission, or how?"

"We gave them the money," replied Mr. Ingalls.

Mr. Ingalls was unable to give further instances from memory, but expressed a willingness to give any facts he could obtain if so ordered. The commission then issued a sweeping order directing Mr. Ingalls to give all facts in a sworn statement showing all rebates paid within the last two years. He was then excused.

ART IN CHINA AND JAPAN.

Collection of Japanese and Chinese Curios Made by Suzuki of Tokyo.

Some of the upper galleries of the American Art Association, 6 East Twenty-third Street, are occupied by a large selection of modern and old pieces in porcelain, pottery, jade, and bronze, brought together by Mr. Kichigoro Suzuki of Tokio, whom Mr. Kojiro Suzuki mentions in the preface to the catalogue as a connoisseur of artistic taste and good judgment. He has had an excellent opportunity, we are told, "to obtain from members of noble families a number of unique specimens, which were parted with in order to contribute to the proceeds to the Japanese war fund."

The collection has good examples of blue and white porcelain, old and modern, antique Chinese porcelains in solid colors, and decorated, old Korean pottery, as well as old objects in pottery of Japan—figures of warriors and ascetics, elephants and composite animals partaking of deer, elephant, and hare—also bronze koros and hibashis, ancient sacrificial jars, water urns, and basins of singular shapes in different alloys of copper.

There is a grand statue of Kwannon, the goddess of mercy, standing on a lotus throne, donated to a temple at Nara in 1723 by the Daimio Matsudaira of Yamato. Figure, throne, and stand are of Seido bronze. A statue of Confucius in gilded bronze is of A. D. 1628, and bears the inscription: "This statue was cast by special order of the Imperial Bureau of Precious Metals on the 20th day of the tenth month, the first year of the Ch-ung-Chên, Emperor." It is Chinese. There are some fine old Chinese cloisonné enamels.

A peculiar variety of pottery is found in vases, jardinières, censers, and jars from Cochin China.

The collection will be disposed of on the afternoons of Thursday, Friday, and Saturday. It includes ivories, lacquers, furniture, screens, and pictures in needlework, snuff bottles and inros, tea bowls, and little jars of fine workmanship, and many of the those illiputian objects we call "cabinet specimens." The illustrated catalogue has 780 entries.

SCHOOL FOR POOR IN SOUTH.

Alabamans Start Fund to Educate Impoverished White Children.

Dr. and Mrs. William M. Polk opened their home, 7 East Thirty-sixth Street, last week for a gathering of Alabamans to organize an auxiliary to the Southern Industrial Educational Association, to promote the practical and industrial education of the poor, illiterate white children of the South.

Mrs. Martha Gielow of Alabama, President General of the association, explained the importance of the work. The Southern people present gave assurance of their cooperation. The following officers were elected: Mrs. William M. Polk, President; Mrs. Alfred W. Cochran, First Vice President; Mrs. A. F. Besson, Second Vice President; Mrs. Menthom Woolsey, Recording Secretary; Miss Janet Connolly, Corresponding Secretary, and Dr. William M. Polk, Treasurer. The special object is to raise $10,000 for an industrial school at St. Clair Springs, Ala. A goodly sum to start the fund was raised at the meeting.

LIMITATION OF INSURANCE.

Illustration of the Plan Proposed by the Armstrong Committee.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The proposed restriction in writing new life insurance being one of the recommendations of the Armstrong Committee that has been discussed as too radical, an illustration of the working of the plan for limitation may be interesting and instructive for policy holders.

To put a stop to wasteful measures in getting new business, it was the opinion of the committee that the new business "should bear a suitable relation to the amount of insurance already in force." The committee recommended that "no life insurance corporation doing business in this State (except a corporation more than two-thirds of whose outstanding insurance on Dec. 31, 1905, consisted of industrial insurance,) shall in any year, beginning with 1907, issue policies in excess of the following prescribed limits:"

The limit of new business in any year shall be determined by taking certain percentages of the total insurance in force on the 31st day of December of the preceding year, including only policies upon which the first premiums have been actually received by the company, as follows:

Total insurance less than $50,000,000, no limit.
Total insurance between $50,000,000 and $100,000,000, 30 per cent. thereof.
Total insurance between $100,000,000 and $300,000,000, 25 per cent. thereof.
Total insurance between $300,000,000 and $600,000,000, 20 per cent. thereof.
Total insurance between $600,000,000 and $1,000,000,000, 15 per cent. thereof.

In no event, according to the plan, is the new paid-for insurance of any company to exceed $150,000,000 in a year.

Concerning the writing of "ordinary" insurance, as distinguished from "industrial," by several companies, the committee expressed the opinion that any industrial company excepted from the limitation mentioned should not be permitted to issue in any year "ordinary" policies in excess of 50 per cent. of the insurance other than industrial in force at the close of the preceding year.

The official report of the business of the companies in 1905 not having been issued yet, the accompanying table for illustrating the application of the plan for limiting the amount of new business has been prepared from the New York State report for 1904, indicating the companies that reported the net amounts of paid-for insurance and those that reported the gross amounts, with amounts of policies not taken:

The contrast of the amounts of new paid-for insurance with those of the new insurance that would have been allowed, if the percentages of limitation had been applied, shows excess amounts of business written for only four companies—Equitable, Mutual, and New York of New York, and Colonial, an industrial company, of New Jersey. The Fidelity Mutual and the Penn Mutual of Pennsylvania, and the Provident Savings of New York might be referred to as close to the limit for each, the gross amounts issued by the Penn and the Provident Savings having been reduced by the large amounts of insurance not taken.

It is apparent that the plan for the limitation of new business must be applied in connection with the plan, or some plan, for the limitation of the expense of getting the business. Under the expense rates that have prevailed many of the companies have been obliged to limit the amounts of insurance issued, the margins of surplus not warranting large drafts for expense in excess of the loadings on the net premiums. They could not to-day write paid-for business up to the limitations indicated in the table.

For the limitation of the expense of getting new business the committee proposed the following, "as a proper standard for reasonable and profitable expenditure for new business, that the expense of new business should not exceed the loading on first-year's premiums plus the present value of the mortality savings on a conservative basis for five years after admission." To make the mortality savings available in the case of a new company, or of a company that distributes its gains annually, the committee proposed a change of the laws that regulate the reserves, so that the reserve in the first year shall take into consideration the expected mortality gains for the ensuing five years. The proposed system for reserves bears the title of "Select and Ultimate," its intent being to provide for select mortality for the first five years, and the ultimate mortality afterward. It has been considered the fad of one actuary.

The committee presented the following table as a conservative assumption of the ratio of actual mortality to the expected mortality, the latter being based on the American Experience Table of Mortality, during the first five years:

First insurance year	50 per cent.
Second insurance year	65 per cent.
Third insurance year	75 per cent.
Fourth insurance year	85 per cent.
Fifth insurance year	95 per cent.

In other words, the committee suggested that it would be safe to assume that, taking the persons insured in 1905, for instance, only one-half of those expected to die, according to the American Experience Table, are likely to die, according to the experiences of the companies, and so on, with the changes of percentages, for the following four years.

If the established data of mortality savings during the first five insurance years be sufficient to warrant the committee's assumption and the proposed enactment to allow the amount of the present value of the probable savings to be used in covering the cost of getting new business, why not have the calculation extended for the whole life period, and the cost of insurance based on the new data instead of on the American Experience Table of Mortality, that is the present established basis in most of the States? With the present assumed rates of interest, the scheme would bring about a reduction of premiums—and many failures in the long run. It will not pay to fool with the established tables of mortality. The experiences of the companies in assuming rates of interest ought to give sufficient warning of the danger of too close assumptions.

If it be considered wise for the State to legalize guessing matches on mortality savings during five years, why not provide for the assumption of a lapse ratio, forty companies doing business in this State having had policies to the amount of $413,466,300 terminated by lapse in 1904, a very large proportion of which was first year's insurance? Perhaps persistent premium payers might object to the putting of early mortality gains and forfeitures away from the surplus for so-called dividends for the reduction of their premiums.

Undoubtedly the recommendations of the Armstrong Committee, apart from the encouragement expressed, favor the formation of new mutual life insurance companies. Some of the plans hinging on others, it is difficult to forecast the probability of the formation of new companies. It is reasonable to assume that, in the event of the passage of the revolutionary bills, the affiliations of some of the companies are likely to be broadened. Limitation of insurance for large companies may be met by distribution by them to small companies.

Considering the radical and far-reaching nature of the bills for the reorganization of the life insurance business, it would seem to be fair to have the whole subject referred to a commission for revision, the judgment of experts to be expressed more fully than the recent investigation permitted.

GOVERNMENT BY "GROUPS."

The fall of the Ministry of M. ROUVIER gives rise to reflections of various kinds. The famous question of the inventories seems to have been the necessary corollary of the law enforcing the separation of Church and State in France. Public officials were directed to make the inventories of the goods belonging to the disestablished congregations, for the purpose of handing them over to the "religious societies" which were to succeed the parishes. M. ROUVIER declares that the whole scheme was really in the interest of the "religious," and this view is at least plausible. But it was inevitable that some devout, or, if you please, fanatical, Frenchmen would resent as sacrilege the laying of lay hands on sacred belongings. A distinguished French General has been locked up for resisting the taking of an inventory in his parish church. A village butcher has been killed for objecting to the operation in his. It was this last incident which brought on the debate in the Chamber which resulted in the overthrow of the Ministry.

This overthrow was evidently the result of the spirit of faction, rather than of the spirit either of religion or of patriotism. M. ROUVIER himself declares that he has fallen between two stools, and that, if he had enforced more brutally and unfeelingly the regulation about the inventories, he would have had 350 votes, which would have been a handsome Ministerial majority. As a matter of fact, he was undoubtedly overthrown by a coalition of the Clericals, who did not wish to see the law enforced at all, and the Radical and Revolutionary Socialists, who desired to see it enforced with unnecessary brutality and ferocity—to say nothing of the "moderate Republicans" of the Ribot stripe, who may not uncharitably be presumed to be in the Chamber "strictly on business."

That the opposition is factious rather than patriotic is sufficiently shown by the fact that the Rouvier Ministry, at the moment of its fall, undoubtedly represented all France in an international question not merely important, but positively vital to all France. It was of the highest importance that France should at that moment show, to Germany and to the world, that she was united. It was that moment that the coalition chose to show the world that she was disunited. The spirit of our own old saying that "party differences cease at the water's edge" was far from being the spirit of either of the factions which united to "down" the Rouvier Ministry, and could have been united for nothing else. They agreed in nothing, those factions, except to attack that Ministry on opposite and irreconcilable grounds.

It is quite certain that they are so much more opposed to one another than either of them was to the Rouvier Ministry that they could not compose among themselves a Ministry to replace it which would last for a week. The fact points to a defect in parliamentary government, as it is administered in France, as it is administered in Germany, some may say as it is coming to be administered in England, its birthplace and its home. The essence of that government, one may say, is the willingness and readiness of the opposition to be intrusted with the responsibilities of office, in accordance with a programme which it presents. It is, in a manner, a political immorality, in a parliamentary Government, for an opposition to put out the existing administration, by incoherent coalitions, unless and until it is prepared to replace it. We do not include in this our own system, in which the Executive is elected for a fixed term and is entitled to be judged at a general election, nor that of Germany, in which the Executive is born to his place, but only the form of government in which the executive power devolves according to the vote of the Legislature. In that form of government the main security against faction is the possibility that the opposition, when successful on a casual vote in the Legislature, can be held responsible for its success to the extent of forming a Government capable of carrying on the public business more acceptably than the Government it has managed to displace. In countries in which two parties, and two alone, exist, and in which the citizens have enough of political instinct and political education to sink their minor differences in their agreement on one or the other side of what is generally accepted as the predominant issue, this is comparatively simple. For a hundred years we have had no trouble on that score. For two hundred Great Britain has had none. But when you substitute government by "groups," or, rather, political alignment by groups, for political alignment by parties, you are liable to come upon such a situation as that of France at present, where the opposition, as Lord PALMERSTON said about the opposition to one of the Ministries of which he was a member, is "a fortuitous concourse of atoms," and where it may be potent for destructive operations, but is evidently and avowedly impotent for the work of replacing what it has availed to destroy, as seems to be the case in France at this moment.

FINANCIAL MYOPIA.

Wall Street yesterday was disturbed by a loss of bank reserves and reduction of loans on an unusual scale. If the phenomena stood by themselves, and were inexplicable except by actual or anticipated misfortune outside of Wall Street, the agitation might extend beyond the gentlemen who buy and sell shares upon their own account when their trade otherwise would languish. It is the gentlemen who manipulate prices, not the owners of properties, who are anxious. It is the gentlemen who borrow, not the gentlemen who lend, who worry about the bank statement. The gentlemen who lend too well understand the document they arrange to waste their brain matter over what is obscure only upon the wrong side of the curtain. The owners of the shares Wall Street is playing with are too busy making good money to take the fliers in which they indulge when trade is dull and capital is released from its best occupation.

That this is not theory appears best from the story told by the bank statistics of the United States, rather than of New York, and by the railway earnings. January net earnings increased 43 per cent., according to The Wall Street Journal's tabulation, although the net for seven months increased only 14 per cent. And February's net is known to be upon a similar phenomenal scale, while March promises as well. It is understood that this unusual increase is due to a remarkable Winter, but the explanation does not alter the facts nor the profits. It takes much money to maintain such a volume of distributive business, and that is why our reserves are starved. Our banks are very rightly maintaining their money rates in the endeavor to build up a surplus against a time of greater need, when planting money will be demanded and will be taken away from Wall Street's juggling, if it cannot be got elsewhere. It may make stocks sell lower, but it will make them worth more money, unless conditions alter from to-day's promise. The bank statement to-day reflects a stronger situation than when the surplus was tenfold larger because there was no business. And yet there never was a situation so strong that it did not contain a blemish and that caution was unnecessary.

Taking a longer view, dealing with theories rather than with conditions, the outlook is more obscure. How does it happen that with falling prices and a shrinking stock market there is not bank reserve money enough to sustain credits? In other words, have we a deficiency of credit because we have a redundancy of paper money, which serves well enough as currency, but whose existence obstructs the provision of money in the true sense? It would be interesting to have light thrown upon these topics by those who are interested in them. Negative replies may be confidently expected from the gentlemen who are sure that a bond-secured currency is a National blessing.

HARBOR POLLUTION.

It is a very conservative and reasonable recommendation that is made by the New York Bay Pollution Commission, DANIEL LEWIS, Chairman, appointed in 1903. In substance the Commission report that their investigations show plainly the dangers to which the waters of the bay are exposed, but have not been sufficiently extended to warrant definite propositions for measures of security. The Commission urge that New York should provide for a Commission with greater powers, directed to make a more thorough study of the subject, and that the State of New Jersey be requested to co-operate in the work, with the possibility of final Federal action as well.

The chief sources of pollution for the Bay are the sewers of Greater New York, which so largely empty into its waters, the sewer system partly completed and planned on a large scale for the cities of New Jersey, and, to a minor extent, the sewers emptying into the waters of the Hudson. Up to the present time the injury, though distinctly traceable, is not extreme, but it is certain that with the passage of time, the increase of population, and the introduction of varied industries supplying waste the purity of the waters and the safety of the population surrounding the Bay will very seriously be endangered. This will be hastened by the large trunk sewerage system which is in the course of construction for the valley of the Passaic, and that is only an instance of the kind of works that will surely extend as the need for them becomes more urgent. The problem of final disposition is one of great magnitude and complexity. In a general way it may be said to embrace utilization, so far as that may be practicable, and the carrying out to sea the residuum that cannot be utilized. Either branch of such a task is difficult enough. Certainly the least the State can do is to provide for its careful study by competent persons, and that is what the present Commission recommend.

THE PROBATION SYSTEM IN NEW YORK.

It is not really correct to speak of the Probation System in this State, since there is nothing systematic in such administration as we have of the principle of probation. That fact is made plain in the excellent report of the Commission appointed last year, of which Dr. HOMER FOLKS is Chairman, to study the matter. But there has been a fair beginning made in some places, notably in Brooklyn Borough. With some amendment, the law on the subject would be ample, and the plan for its thorough and efficient application, urged by the Folks Commission, would, if intelligently and seriously carried out, be of incalculable advantage.

As the Commission points out, some confusion has arisen in the public mind by the careless use of the words "probation" and "parole," which stand for very different things. Probation is the correct name for the chance given to an offender, whose sentence is suspended, to escape punishment by good conduct. Parole is the chance given to an offender released after commitment to escape recommitment by good conduct. The one applies, chiefly, to those guilty of a first offense. The purpose of both processes is prevention of misconduct. The earlier they can be brought to bear in the career of an offender, obviously the better. In any case, no plan can be truly successful that does not provide, not merely for the supervision of persons, young or adult, coming under the law, but for giving them the wisest, most practical, most kindly, and constant aid. This, in effect, is what the Commission seeks to secure, and what, in the present inchoate, not to say chaotic, condition of the administration of the law, is secured only rarely and with great uncertainty.

Of course, the Commission plans for the whole State, but with modifications for the larger and smaller cities and for the rural districts. The general supervision of probation work they would place in the hands of the State Board of Charities; and no better disposition of it could be made under our present organization. In the cities they would have an unpaid Probation Commission of five or seven members, one renewed each year, with paid chief probation officers and volunteer assistant officers, to be named by the Commission and under its general charge. The action of the courts is somewhat to be modified, to secure more careful and constant watchfulness. They are to be permitted, but not required, to fix the conditions of release on probation. Offenders so released are to be under the supervision of an officer. The least term of oversight for children is to be three months, unless terminated by misconduct, and the same for adults, save in cases of felony, when it is to be one year. Records are to be kept of the conduct of offenders on probation, and when they are discharged there must be a recorded statement as to their compliance with the terms of their release and their general conduct.

It is not creditable to the State of New York, and it is particularly discreditable to the City of New York, that a system which commends itself so clearly to intelligent judgment, and has been so adequately tested elsewhere, should have received little attention here. Never was there a more striking instance of the value of an ounce of prevention, and prevention in this matter is doubly valuable, since it saves the always great cost of the penal system and replaces the costly offender by an orderly member of the community, contributing his share to the general well-being. Fortunately the State, and especially the city, has an ample supply of energetic, capable, and devoted citizens who are willing and able to carry on this work if the machinery for that purpose be supplied. The history of the Children's Court of Brooklyn, under Judge WILKIN, as given by the Commission, is sufficient proof of that. The plan of the Commission to bring into the service of society the forces that simply await organization is careful and well-considered, and we sincerely trust that the Legislature will not close its session without enacting the measures required to put it in force.

SENIORITY AND SELECTION.

The promotion of Col. BUBB to be Brigadier General is a recognition of long and good service. It is distinctly a success for the principle of seniority as against the principle of selection. We suppose it will be satisfactory to the majority of officers in the army, who would rather take their chance of arriving at a Brigadiership by survival than their chance of obtaining it by having an opportunity of rendering distinguished service and rising to the opportunity.

It does not follow that the promotion of Capt. PERSHING would have been discouraging to the army, as some of our contemporaries seem to insist. For he is an officer who had such an opportunity and rose to it. It was said on the day when the news of Manila reached us that every officer of flag rank in the navy was "damning DEWEY for his luck," and the Admiral himself said that he did no more than any of his colleagues would and could have done. But, after all, it is the doing of things that gets rewarded and deserves to be, and nobody grudges the Admiral his Admiralty. Capt. PERSHING's expedition against the lake Dattos of Mindanao, an expedition of his own devising as well as executing, including the gallant storming of Fort Bacolod, was a feat of arms of the same kind and degree with the battle of Bayang, for which Col. BALDWIN won and without question earned his Brigadier's star. The best account of Capt. PERSHING's expedition is that of a British civilian, Mr. SAVAGE-LANDOR, in his "Gems of the East." Whoever reads that account will not be prepared to deny that the leader of the expedition earned his star on that occasion. The exploit of a volunteer officer in capturing AGUINALDO added a remarkable Brigadier to the army list. Yet the only official recognition of Capt. PERSHING's at least equally distinguished and meritorious service is his appointment to the General Staff.

Be it noted that the proposed promotion of Capt. PERSHING would not have been in the least imputable, as certain other promotions have been, to his making friends of the Secretarial Mammon. The bitter army saying that "it is better to have a Senator for a father-in-law than the best record in the United States Army" has no application to his case. It was not by making friends at Washington but by fighting in far Mindanao that Capt. PERSHING brought himself to the notice of his official superiors. Doubtless Col. BUBB has earned his promotion. But doubtless Capt. PERSHING has also earned his. To say that his promotion for such cause would "demoralize the army" is a libel upon that body which we decline to accept.

PLAYWRIGHT AND CRITIC.

The theatrical gentlemen who have been industriously criticising the dramatic critics have overlooked the mote in their own eye while trying to remove that which, to a greater or lesser extent, affects the vision of those who sit in judgment upon them. Frivolous and flippant criticism is generally condemned, and with some justice, but the fact is apparently ignored that a large number of the entertainments, projected in apparent seriousness, do not justify the maintenance of a judicial and thoughtful attitude on the part of the reviewer. There are times when even the most conscientious and considerate critic finds himself compelled to indulge in derisory exposition rather than studious comment. In the presence of much that is offered as dramatic entertainment on the New York stage he is forced, in justice to the public and to his own sense of fitness, to let loose the shaft of ridicule. Why on earth should a critic take an "artist" more seriously than the artist takes himself?

The case against the critics has been made out to the managers' satisfaction for many years, and the present agitation is chiefly interesting because it involves the novel spectacle of a producer of plays arguing in his own behalf from the stage of a theatre. Disinterested persons might well incline to the opinion that the play itself, not the manager's speeches, would best determine the merits of this particular case. The fact of the matter is, a play's ultimate welfare is determined before the reviewer is called into the consultation. He can at best prolong, or at worst shorten, its life for a brief interval, but the ultimate test of endurance will lie in its own organic structure.

NEWPORT'S EXPERIMENT.

We have already commented upon a scheme of municipal government favored by Admiral CHADWICK, in his capacity of resident and taxpayer in Newport, R. I., for the government, or rather, as the Admiral insisted it should be put, for the "administration" of that community. That project was based upon the notion that a municipal corporation, like a commercial corporation, should be administered by its shareholders, that the owners of the land of the city should say how the city should be managed. The other inhabitants the Admiral likened to the passengers of a railroad, who had nothing to say directly about its management, but who would show their appreciation of wise management by "patronizing" it, in this case by residence, and their resentment of unwise management by leaving it, or, more frequently, by not resorting to it.

This was a very interesting project, with many things doubtless to be said in favor of it, and with many things to be said in opposition to it. One practical experiment would have been more instructive, as to its actual effect and value, than any amount of theorizing. From that point of view we rather regret the complete omission of this feature from the draft which we have received of the "Proposed Act for a New City Charter for the City of Newport." The fundamental notion of this is very different from that we have mentioned and have formerly discussed. There is no limitation of suffrage in this, beyond the limitations already in operation in Rhode Island, no suggestion that the property owners should have the exclusive right of voting upon the employment of their property. The most sensational part of the original proposition is thus discarded. The original propounders may have considered, with reference to this feature of their plan, that, as was said by the American in England about the doctrine of eternal damnation, "Our people wouldn't stand it." At any rate, it has been abandoned in the draft, and nobody is disfranchised in municipal affairs.

The fundamental notion of the actual plan is an amplification of the notion of the New England town meeting. In small communities, the "Explanatory Statement" sets forth, where everybody knows everybody, the town meeting has always worked well. But, as the community grows, and personal acquaintanceship becomes a less trustworthy guide, the town meeting, where all communal affairs are discussed by and in the presence of all, becomes less practicable. The signers of the report, who include Admiral CHADWICK, as well as Admiral LUCE and other Newporters equally known and respected, fix a population of fifteen thousand, and an electorate of three thousand, as the maximum of practicability and usefulness for the town meeting. Of course this limit is fixed more or less arbitrarily, as any limit must be. But it is plain that there is a limit beyond which the town meeting will not work. The substitute for it which commends itself to these Newporters, for the purposes of Newport, is a representative body, chosen by universal suffrage, or by legal suffrage, in the case of Newport, "a body of one hundred and ninety-five members, chosen thirty-nine from each ward, and one-third of its members renewed each year," which shall appoint the municipal officers, arrange the tax levy, appropriate the proceeds of it, and in fact "run the town," though by the medium of a Mayor and a small Board of Aldermen elected by them. The powers and duties of the ordinary citizen, in relation to municipal affairs, are restricted to voting for members of the "representative council," excepting that provision is made for "a limited referendum and a full initiative by the citizens," the latter in cases where a popular interest has been sufficiently manifested.

We have not the space at command to describe the machinery which is provided to carry these dispositions into effect. Nor does it very much matter. The object is evidently enough the elimination of what is stigmatized as "politics" from local affairs. Many readers will recall that the essence of the plan, the giving of a political proxy by a citizen to the delegate of his choice, was that of the late Dr. CLARK of Oswego, with reference to politics in general. His project, carefully and ingeniously worked out and presented with clearness and eloquence, so commended itself to his townsmen that they embodied it in a project for the charter of Oswego which failed, not through local but through legislative opposition. It is to be hoped that the proposed charter of Newport may not undergo a like fate. For, whatever might be the practical working out of the theory upon which that project is founded, it could not fail to be of instruction and value for every municipality in the United States.

"BIRDS OF PASSAGE."

Hard Service Done for Every Cent Our Migratory Immigrants Spend.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

This morning I read your editorial headed "Birds of Passage," and it set me thinking. Apparently you disapprove of this kind of immigration, but you do not clearly state why. I do not think for a moment you entertain the idea that these people should stay and face the possible strike with their savings; but, at the same time, you seem to begrudge the spending of their honestly earned money outside of these United States. If you should apply that to all people it would be a bad day for our well-to-do and rich citizens, because I suspect that the sum spent in foreign countries by the latter classes greatly exceeds that of the laboring "Birds of Passage," and, moreover, in exchange for their greater wealth there is seldom, if ever, fifty to fifty-five hours of hard work per week.

To my mind it is rather creditable and entirely within their rights that these people by thrift and sacrifice have been able to lay by a sum of money for a rainy day. And as to their mode of living, who shall say what the standard for food is? I do not approve of throwing away stale bread, but how many would not scorn such "offal"?

No, let us be broad on this question, in the firm conviction that in a rich country like ours, where everybody works but lobbyists and grafters, the migratory immigration is no evil. Let us on the contrary look twice at the laboring men who go abroad for a holiday rather than be seen "opening wine" in an expensive restaurant.

ERIK STRINDBERG.

Brooklyn, N. Y., March 9, 1906.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

As regards the question of immigrants, do let the alien workers come and go without urging citizenship upon them. Their taking their money home with them is not a menace to American finance, while their citizenship is a positive evil. If their presence creates problems their political influence will certainly not help in the solution of these problems. If the Irish and Welsh have been displaced as mine workers they have evidently found other occupation at least equally remunerative.

The best way to educate the children of foreign parents for future citizenship is to maintain a high standard of citizenship before their eyes in the present, and so make them understand that there is something before them worth growing up to.

QUESTIONS FOR MR. CONRIED.

Where Do the Speculators Get Their Seats?—Many Complaints.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Mr. Conried seems to be making a perfectly safe proposition.

He neither defines 'collusion,' nor does he state by whom the sufficiency of the proof shall be determined. Most significant of all, he fails to make any affirmation that collusion does not exist.

Mr. Conried might clear up the situation by stating—

1. Do the sidewalk speculators obtain their tickets from the box office of the Metropolitan Opera House?

2. If so, do they obtain them before or after the tickets are placed on public sale?

3. What attempts, if any, are made by the management to prevent speculators from obtaining tickets?

4. Is it, or is it not, a fact that the public is practically unable to obtain medium-priced seats at the box office of the Opera House?

E. K. C.

New York, March 9, 1906.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Will you kindly suggest to Mr. Conried that it is rather late in the opera season to offer the reward he so bravely offers this morning, but that it is not too late to think about making this offer very publicly at the beginning of the next opera season.

WRITER OF ONE OF THE LETTERS.

New York, March 9, 1906.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Referring to Mr. Conried's letter in to-day's issue of your paper, I would like to have him answer the following:

It is relative to the matinée performance of "Parsifal" given on Feb. 22, the seats for which were advertised as being on sale Jan. 1, at 9 A. M. Shortly after this announcement, I applied personally for seats, and although a subscriber, my arguments could not induce the man in the box office to sell or even reserve any for me.

I arrived at the Metropolitan Opera House early enough on Jan. 1 to be the eighth person in line, yet the best to be had in the dress circle, first row, were at the side.

Query: What became of those thirty choice centre seats?

INDIGNANT SUBSCRIBER.

New York, March 9, 1906.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

On Tuesday, Feb. 1, I applied at the Metropolitan box office for seats in the upper portion of the house for the matinée of March 3. I was told they had none; would not be on sale until the beginning of the week preceding the performance; this though a gentleman in the line ahead of me bought orchestra chairs for March 6.

Without making any comment on this strange state of affairs, I went to a ticket speculator and could then and there have secured four fine seats for the performance I wished to see if I had been willing to pay a half dollar advance on each, which I would not do. I asked the speculator how it was he came to have them, and yet I could not buy them at the box office. His answer was: "Oh, h—, they haven't got them and won't have 'em; we've got them all."

On two subsequent occasions have I met with the same treatment, and I may add that after waiting in line over half an hour, I was offered four of the worst seats in the house as the only ones they had left. The ticket speculator, as usual, had the cream and I could have had them if I would stand for a dollar advance. That was for the last performance of "Marta."

"His Glassy Essence."

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I think Mr. L. P. Smith's query touches a more interesting subject than the tragedy of Timbuctoo. Let me make a suggestion by way of interpretation.

It has been suggested that "glassy essence" in "Measure for Measure" is a corruption of the text and "grassy" and "ghostly" have been conjectured. But will not the two following passages make it clear without change?

"For now we see through a glass, darkly; but then face to face."—First Corinthians, xiii., 12.

"The reflection also from glasses, so usually resembled to the imagery of the mind, every man knoweth to receive error and variety both in color, magnitude, and shape, according to the quality of the glass." Bacon's Interpretation of Nature: Boston edition of Spedding's Bacon, Vol. VI., Page 61.

The meaning then is that man is most sen-assured of what he is really most ignorant, namely, his own essence which he can only see in a glass darkly. The expression is somewhat elliptical, but ellipsis is not unusual with Shakespeare.

Shakespeare continually uses the word glass in the sense of a mirror. He uses the adjective glassy in only three other places, in each case meaning "like a mirror." They are as follows:

"As plays the sun upon the glassy streams."—I. Henry VI., V. 3, Line 62.

"That shows his hoar leaves in the glassy stream."—Hamlet IV., 7, Line 168.

"Secrecies writ in the glassy margents of such books."—Lucrece, Line 102.

Anxious for an "Essay" Magazine.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I would like to indorse to some extent the suggestion of one of your readers about an "essay magazine." It would make very good reading, but whether it would "pay" is doubtful.

I wish, however, that the editors of present magazines would experiment with the essay, and think they might be agreeably surprised at the result, particularly with the light essay.

The favorite mental pabulum of a large part of the reading public is undoubtedly the short story; indeed, a certain class of new magazines seems to adopt a simple recipe for their filling—the short story and any old thing. To be sure, homeopathic fiction, though sometimes claimed to be the hardest to write, is easiest to read, requiring no intellectual effort to speak of. But another reason doubtless is that stories lend themselves so well to illustrations. We have rather a childish love for "picture books." Rudyard Kipling called our illustrated press (or part of it) "the picture writing of a primitive people," for which he should be punished, of course, but—

Now, why cannot the essay be more commonly illustrated for the relief of the lazy? That it succeeds sometimes witness "The Art of Living," various travel and "nature" sketches, &c.

Hint for Street Cleaning Department.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

While the writer appreciates the efforts made by our Street Cleaning Department to have the streets in a clean condition, he cannot understand why the Street Commissioner could not set a more appropriate hour in the morning than 8 A. M. for cleaning Newspaper Row.

About a dozen street cleaners create such an abominable dust that it is very unpleasant for pedestrians who are compelled to cross this thoroughfare at that hour to be blinded with such a nuisance and have their clothing and polished shoes disnatured before they reach their offices.

From The Boston Transcript.

When you go to that bourne from which no traveler returns, it depends on your color whether you will be buried in the "alien" lot with "bravas" and "Fiji Islanders," or in the white man's cemetery, according to the town meeting vote Tuesday. GERMANY AND MOROCCO.

Why Emperor William Proposed the Algeciras Conference.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your editorial in this morning's issue of THE NEW YORK TIMES, criticising and judging Germany's action during the Algeciras conference is, in my opinion, unjust.

Outside of France and Germany, very little seems to be understood of the Moroccan affair. Yet the whole subject is very simple, and, in a "nutshell," is this:

It was about four years ago, when, after different uprisings in Morocco, there was talk of policing that country. Germany then informed France that she (Germany) desired to be consulted in case of special arrangements in Morocco, because it is Germany's vital interest to keep the as yet unrestricted markets of the world open, on account of her increasing population. Besides, she had a right to be consulted.

But Germany's request was not considered by Delcassé. He went secretly to work and arrived secretly at an understanding with Great Britain, which left France virtually a free hand in Morocco, presumably for some fair exchange to England's advantage. Any power could foresee the consequences of such an agreement. Tunis, Oran, and Eastern Morocco serve as examples. Germany protested, because she had been pushed aside and had been insulted by Delcassé's sneaking proceedings. She had a perfect right to protest or to call for an international conference, although the subject itself was of rather little importance, and for this some people seemed to ridicule her action. But it was the principle for which she contested, not to quarrel, and it seems surprising that so few other powers sustained her. Her isolation for this reason is not understood by me, (although The London Times may be glad of it.)

No one should play with or excite the passions of man. That Delcassé, on such a dangerous path, was not upheld by his Ministry nor by the French nation has been proved, and he has had to pay dearly for his intrigues. The German Government's wish as to his removal was complied with.

If the conference comes now to a peaceful end, it is mostly due to the magnanimity of Emperor William, whose "international conscience" dictates him to recede rather than to go to a contest of arms for such a small matter. Your remark that mankind is disappointed with him as a generous, enthusiastic, and philanthropic ruler is, therefore, unjust.

DRIVING FROM LEFT SIDE.

Approval of Coachman's Suggestion for Change in Custom.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I was interested this morning in reading "A Coachman's Suggestion" published in your paper and would like to indorse his ideas.

I have driven ever since I could walk. My father was a physician, and it was one of my youthful pleasures to drive for him. And very early I learned to sit always upon the near side, as it is far safer, especially in city driving. It has its advantages also upon a narrow country "turnpike," where sometimes the road is very convex, and in meeting and turning out for other teams or automobiles if the horse becomes frightened the driver, being on the up side, can much more easily spring out and to the animal's head in an emergency.

E. L. HOTCHKISS.

Brooklyn, N. Y., March 9, 1906.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Permit me the use of your paper to ask the coachman who recommends sitting on the left to drive whether, all things considered, it would not be simpler and better to change the law of the road and drive to the left instead of to the right?

Income of the S. P. C. A.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In the letter of J. P. Haines's enforced resignation, wherein he attempts to show the expansion of finances for the last seventeen years, which coincide with the years of his misrule, he states: "In 1888 our income (exclusive of bequests) was $26,906.08; in 1905 it was $100,785." He omits to state that in 1888 the society which he controls did not receive any income from the "dog tax"; for ten years it has, and that income, at the lowest computation, has been $75,000, but which no one but J. P. Haines really knows. Therefore, deducting $75,000 from the income of last year would leave a balance of $25,785—over a thousand dollars less income, outside of the dog tax, than the income of the society in 1888. Comment is unnecessary.

The Average Man.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Permit me to say in reply to E. B. L.'s letter in Thursday's paper that the "docility and viciousness of the average man" are the direct result of the present economic system and form of government. Not until we cease to pit each man against his neighbor in a competition which gives to the cruelest and most unscrupulous the greatest material gains shall we be able to improve, to any great degree, the average man.

"Died Unanimous."

From The Ram's Horn.

Representative Adamson of Georgia, while coming to Washington one day not long ago, noticed a crowd around a depot at one of the stations on the Southern down in North Carolina, and poked his head out of the window and asked of a negro:

"Adam, what's the matter here?"

"Jim Johnson's dead, Sah," was the answer.

"Somebody shoot him?"

"No, Sah; nobody done nuthin' to him; he jis died all to once unanimously."

A MARCH VIGNETTE

A dull, gray day—all desolate
The sodden fields; which seem to wait
Some re-creating breath;
The bare-boughed trees make moan and sigh,
But sleeping Nature lists the cry,
"Awake, from Winter's death!"

A sudden, subtle change—a note
Trills sweetly from a bird's brave throat,
Of timid, patient cheer;
And earth, responsive, feels the throes
Of new-born life—awakes and knows
That Spring, at last, is here.

METUCHEN DOESN'T MIND BEING IN LITERATURE

Even If It Isn't, as Mrs. Wilkins Freeman Declares.

NOBODY KNOWS 'THE DEBTOR'

But the Modest Hackman, the Willing Barber, and the Complaisant Merchant Admit They're Tagged.

Even as all Gaul, in the days of Julius Caesar, was divided into three parts, so in these more modern times is trisected the social world of Metuchen, N. J.

To begin with the topmost stratum, there are those who belong either by inheritance or absorption to the Club Set. For purposes of classification they may be known as the First Families. Next on the ladder of knowableness come those who may only shine in sewing circles, debating societies, and at church sociables, but who have hopes of higher things. Tag them the Eminently Respectables.

Finally there are those who depend for the bread they eat and the roofs that shelter them upon the work of their hands. For them there is no social striving. Their place is fixed. They know it. Metuchen knows them as the Working Class, and their eyes have no uplift.

It is necessary to understand the lines that are drawn in the life of the Jersey village to gauge properly the estimates in which "The Debtor," Mrs. Mary E. Wilkins Freeman's latest novel, is held by Metuchenites. The word "estimate" is purposely pluralized. It would no more be possible to strike an average of the spirit with which Metuchen as a whole regards the book than to merge oil and water. There are three estimates—count 'em—three.

Interest in Mrs. Freeman's Works.

The First Families, from the eminence that is theirs, are interested in the product of Mrs. Freeman's pen from a purely literary point of view. Whether or not the types depicted within the covers of the book belong to Metuchen concerns them not. If there are pleasing personages in the story, their counterparts might easily be found in the town. Such characters as displease may be thrown into the discard. This is the estimate impersonal.

The Working Class folks are just as unconcerned, though from a different reason. They have heard of the book, but have not read it. It is not for them to lose time in criticising the ways of those in other walks of life. They have food and clothing to buy and rent to pay. Theirs is the attitude indifferent.

It is to the Eminently Respectables that the seeker must turn to reach the estimate in which self figures. Among them he must look for the personal note and he need not look in vain. It is a matter of no moment that their attention had to be called to the fact before they realized that their ranks had been invaded for local color, and that they had been held up to the reading public in guises good, bad, and indifferent. The suggestion that such was the case found them duly responsive, and among them is to be found a real estimate of the book.

Those who have come out scatheless from the ordeal of introspection point to their less fortunate neighbors with ill-concealed scorn. Those who fondly imagine that they see their photographs in flattering form can scarce hide their pride. Those who fancy they see self resemblances which are neither good nor bad rejoice that they are important enough to get into the book at all.

In no one of the three estimates is there the element of hostility. The impersonal First Families are a unit in declaring that it is perfectly absurd to accuse Mrs. Freeman of making capital of her friends. The indifferent working people declare that the fight is none of theirs, and the Eminently Respectables agree that, flattering or unflattering, the types drawn are true to life, and that, if the cap fits unpleasantly close in any particular instance, Mrs. Freeman is not to blame.

"The Debtor" was first published by the Harpers in serial form. The first chapters of the story appeared in the December number of Harper's Magazine, 1904. Mrs. Freeman had been a resident of Metuchen for a little more than two years when the magazine was placed on sale. A paragraph got a place in a literary periodical, saying that the scene of the novel was laid in Metuchen, but nobody thought anything of that until a newspaper correspondent in a near-by town quite recently saw the possibilities of copy in running down the prototypes of Mrs. Freeman's characters.

This correspondent pictured Metuchen in an uproar and heard countless voices thundering "Thou art the man." His dispatch started the discussion. The novel deals with familiar scenes and introduces familiar faces. Village dwellers of the everyday school the country over may study its pages and recognize men and women who are part of their lives. If the conditions depicted and the characters delineated belonged to Metuchen alone "The Debtor" would to-day be unknown.

The central figure, as the name indicates, is a "deadbeat," albeit a man of many lovable traits. The victim of a false friend when starting out in life, his hand is against every man until his eyes are opened. His wife and two daughters are as charming as they are irresponsible. His sister and little son are less lovable, perhaps, but well worth their share of affection.

There are introduced two gossipy women, a liveryman who is an institution, a lover who has failed at law and shattered precedent by going into the retail grocery business and maintaining his social standing, a leading merchant, a milkman, a dressmaker, a downtrodden young husband, and last, but not least, a village barber.

When the debtor, with his 40 horse power style of living and his 2 horse power income, dawns on the village, which is called Banbridge in the book, the gossipy old ladies hear that he is wealthy, and they determine to call, that they may verify or disprove the reports. The family is not at home and, spurred on by curiosity, they invade the house, which is not locked, and inspect its contents, reveling in their tour of investigation, appraising the value of each article their keen vision uncovers, and delighted when evidences of bad housekeeping are disclosed.

The Eminently Respectables Guess.

It is in trying to establish the identities of these gossips, who go visiting in the "calling coach" of the village liveryman, wearing white gloves redolent of gasoline, that the Eminently Respectables of Metuchen are worrying themselves into a trance. The task is not conducive to neighborliness.

To ascertain the progress made by the residents of Metuchen in fitting the caps of Mrs. Freeman's making, a reporter of THE TIMES spent yesterday in the village, which is sleeping its way through life an hour's run from New York on the Pennsylvania Railroad. He stepped from the train, and the business section of Metuchen, a lazy block in length, was before him. He learned that there were less than 3,000 people in the village, and that 400 of these were commuters, who made the trip every day to Elizabeth, Newark, or New York.

"After the morning trains leave," said the keeper of the village inn, "the women run the town."

The innkeeper had read "The Debtor," and it wasn't hard to guess who Mrs. Freeman meant when she wrote of the liveryman, the barber, the merchant, and the milkman. As for the two gossips, there were twenty times two.

"Go see Frank Smith," he advised. "That's the barber."

That Tonsorial Parlor Discovered.

The Banbridge barber shop is thus described by Mrs. Freeman, who calls it a "tonsorial parlor" and gives the name of Flynn to the proprietor:

> It was quite an ornate establishment. There was a lace lambrequin in the show window, a palm in each corner, between which stood a tank of goldfish, and below the lace lambrequin swung a gilt cage containing an incessantly hopping, though silent, yellow canary.

The Metuchen barber's shop answered these specifications and the proprietor, Frank Smith, was at leisure. Flynn is written into Mrs. Freeman's novel as a man having the "courage of utter conviction as to his own ability to master all undertakings at which he chose to tilt," good natured, addicted to the use of big words and thoroughly likable. Just such a man is Smith.

"Am I Flynn?" he repeated, after the momentous question had been put to him. "How can I tell? Maybe I am and maybe I am not. I'm no prognosticator. Writers is always sourcastic and it's their nature. If Mrs. Freeman meant Flynn for me she's welcome. Circumstantially, I'm glad if it helped her to sell her book."

"The liveryman's John Dempsey," he vouchsafed, "and they say that Kramer, up the street, is the storekeeper. Martin is the milkman. There's been three men in Metuchen in my time (he has been shaving the men of the village for thirty years and trimming their hair when occasion arose) who didn't pay their debts, but that's nothing uncomprehensible. In all likeliness there never was a town without people who were bad pay. There's a whole cayoodle of women who'd pry into anybody's closet if it was open, and there's good men, like the lover in the book, everywhere."

Mr. Kramer, up the street, was not so talkative. He is a brisk little man who has run a peddler's pack into a creditable dry goods store, and only submits to playing the rôle of the leading merchant of storied fame because it helps his trade.

"I don't know Mrs. Freeman," he said, "and I haven't read her book. I've been meaning to borrow a copy, but have been too busy. I've got nothing against her. It it helps her it don't hurt me. I suppose all this talk will make her books sell like anything."

Dempsey Admits He's Rawdy.

After the leading merchant, the liveryman—John Dempsey. Irish to the finger tips, shrewd and honest as he is obliging, he is not only willing but anxious to slip into the coat of Samson Rawdy, "the best liveryman in Banbridge," whose "two fat bays were considered rather sacred to fashionable calls," as was his coach, "quite a resplendent affair, with very few worn places in the cloth lining."

Mr. Dempsey admitted unreservedly that he had not had the opportunity to read Mrs. Freeman's book, apologizing for such a condition of affairs by saying that "the best people in Metuchen, and they're the best in the land," had kept him so busy that he hardly had time to get his meals and sleep.

After getting Mr. Dempsey's views, however, it could not be denied that he was the original hackman when it came to hauling smart people to "fashionable doings," or that he enjoyed their confidence to the fullest degree. There was only one error in the book, from what he had heard of it, and that was that his horses were not bays.

"One of 'em's a chestnut," he said, "and the other's a light sorrel, but it don't make no difference in literachoor."

There were so many dressmakers who might have suggested Mrs. Griggs that there was no use in trying to single any one of them out.

Now Metuchen, be it known, boasts a club which might adorn a city a dozen times its size. There are both men and women on its membership rolls, and about it revolves every social diversion known to the suburbanite. To belong to it is a guarantee of eligibility that opens the most exclusive homes.

It was not hard to find out the names of Metuchen's social arbiters, once its doors were opened, and the investigator met with the kindliest treatment at their hands.

"To begin with," said one matron whose position in Metuchen's social fabric is as unquestioned as is that of the sun in the heavens, "deny that there is the slightest attitude of resentment on the part of our people toward Mrs. Freeman. Everybody knows that there is a grain of truth in all fiction, and when we see in books faces and traits that we recognize it is the highest tribute that we can pay to a writer.

"There are many things in 'The Debtor' that Mrs. Freeman didn't get—couldn't get—in Metuchen. They don't exist here. The gasolined gloves and the 'calling perfume' are her creations, so far as Metuchen is concerned. I never heard of two supposedly nice women who would descend to such depths as to spy upon a neighbor, much less invade a newcomer's house during the absence of the family to pry out their secrets. Mrs. Freeman never heard of such an incident, either. She told me so herself.

"Such things do not exist in Metuchen, which is a town by itself. The people here are the very best people. There is no undesirable foreign element, such as there is in manufacturing towns. Here the attitude toward the stranger is cordial in the extreme and it is intellect, not money, that counts."

The Debtor Elusive.

There was no dissenting voice among the First Families to this exculpation of Mrs. Freeman or to this tribute to Metuchen's desirability as a place of residence. Indeed, the changes were rung upon both topics. Finally but two fields for inquiry had been left untouched—the identification of the Debtor and the discovery of Mrs. Freeman's position with reference to the charge that she had converted her associates into literary material.

There was no lack of information, once on the trail of the Debtor. The character developed into a trinity before it had been followed far. The townspeople, even on this subject, were not vindictive. They conceded that there had been men among them—three of them—who had failed to pay their debts, and that one of them, as Arthur Carroll, Mrs. Freeman's creation, had given a lot of bad checks to his creditors.

But these men, they argued, were perfectly willing to pay if they had had the money. They wanted to pay, and were liberal when in funds. Their misfortunes were not due to bad hearts, but to Untoward Circumstances.

Miss Mary E. Wilkins became Mrs. Freeman four years ago. Dr. Freeman is one of the pillars of Metuchen. His father before him was in the lumber business and a pillar, too, and although Dr. Freeman is a graduate physician he has never practiced. The marriage was a Metuchen romance. Miss Wilkins, then a New Englander, was visiting Mr. Alden, editor of Harper's Magazine. The doctor won her during her stay and installed her in the pretty family home. There, in her own workroom, she spends her mornings in writing, and there she wrote "The Debtor."

"Have you talked to the people about 'The Debtor'?" was her greeting to the investigator. "And did you find any hostility to me or my book?"

"Isn't it distressing," she continued when she had been reassured, "that I should be accused of putting my friends into my work? Why, I think such a thing would be dishonorable. I would never steal the purse or the personality of one I knew. I should regard either action in the same light.

Characters Her Own, Says Author.

"Why, the people here are the dearest people in the world, and they couldn't have taken me closer to their hearts than they have. I am happier in their friendship than I can say. Why, they haven't been in the least formal with me. They know how busy I am, and when I haven't been able to return their calls, they have just come again.

"I wrote 'The Debtor' after my marriage, but I had the idea of the book before I came to Metuchen to live. If there is local color in it it was unconsciously injected. I have never even looked into the barber shop and I don't think I was ever in the store which it is said figures in my novel more than once or twice. I certainly never heard of two women such as I depicted in 'Mrs. Van Horn' and 'Mrs. Lee,' although I am frank enough to say that I fear there are some women who could be led to almost any length by curiosity. As for 'The Debtor' himself he is entirely my own creation. I didn't know there had ever been men in Metuchen who had defrauded their creditors until after the novel had been published.

"Actual incidents and people get in my way when I am writing a story. They don't fit. They don't belong anywhere, and I never use them. I am so disturbed by all this talk that I doubt if I shall be able to finish a novel, which I have contracted to deliver in May, on time."

And, after all is said, if Mrs. Freeman doesn't know whether she took her types in 'The Debtor' from Metuchen, who does, and if Metuchen believes that she did, why didn't it say so a year ago, instead of taking her to its heart, inviting her everywhere, and making just as much of her as it possibly could, just as it is doing to-day? That is how the First Families look at it, anyway.

A PASTE BRUSH BATTLE CAUSES BROADWAY JAM

3,000 Form Ring as Bill Posters Fight for Tabernacle Walls.

VICTOR LABELS VANQUISHED

Sticks "A Howling Farce" on His Back—Reserves Break Up a Bout with Fists.

Paste brushes and fists were used in the liveliest sort of a fight just before noon yesterday at Sixth Avenue and Thirty-fourth Street. The conflict brought around a crowd of 3,000, and the Broadway and Thirty-fourth Street and Sixth Avenue car lines were blocked until the arrival of police reserves from West Thirtieth Street. The police soon spoiled the entertainment of the thousands and made them go about their business.

The old Broadway Tabernacle, which is being torn down by S. R. Rosoff, a contractor, was the scene of conflict. Rival bill posters supplied the fighting men. Contractor Rosoff has been adding to the profits of his wrecking enterprise by renting advertising space. Already the steeple bears a big electric sign telling the way to somebody's cleaning establishment. "Cleanliness is next to godliness," says the contractor. The church walls make convenient sticking places for posters that can be read from both the elevated railroad and the street, setting forth the virtues of dry goods, hair oils, whiskies, &c.

For the protection of the public from falling brick or stone the usual rough scaffolding has been built around the church on the Sixth Avenue and Thirty-fourth Street sides. This frame structure bears the words "Post No Bills," but is well covered with them. For the most part they are theatre playbills. Two theatres are not represented in the general collection.

Bill stickers bearing the announcements of these two theatres, with the usual selected quotations from newspaper criticisms, appeared at the church yesterday morning at 11 o'clock. They began to put their own sheets over other placards. The poster men of the other concerns tore down the freshly pasted advertisements and replaced them with their own.

The game went on good-naturedly until the rivals began to grow careless in slapping their brushes against the wood, splattering one another unnecessarily. Those who love a fight sighted trouble and stopped to see it. Those who didn't took to the street. In a little while there was a crowd.

After the skirmishing, the action really began when intruders carried the outer works and started to put up bills on the church walls. Some one spilled a bucket of paste on them from the steeple. Then the hostilities were lively.

"One-Eyed" O'Flynn slapped "Smiling Mike" Costello across the mouth with his paste brush and the affronted one returned with a saturated brush carefully placed upon O'Flynn's working eye. The others of the paste-pot crew went at it, warding and fencing with their wet brushes. The crowd by this time stretched over to Broadway and lent encouragement to the duelists with shouts and directions to "give it to him."

The smiling one, tripping the one-eyed and rolling him over, proceeded to paste a sign on his back on which in big letters were the words "A Howling Farce." The crowd was exultant. A policeman who tried to force his way through made no impression. He called for assistance, and this brought the reserves, but not in time to stop the greater part of the last act of the street vaudeville.

Charles Miller, thirty-three years old, of 301 West Forty-third Street, removed his bespattered coat and rolled up his sleeves. James Barr, twenty-three years old, of 241 West Fortieth Street, did likewise. It was evident that the two men knew how to spar and very prettily. There was no shaking of hands as the two came together. There were rapid lefts and rights, exchanges of body blows and a good deal of clever ducking and side stepping. Miller fell on the receipt of a left cross.

One of the crowd, wearing spats, patent leather shoes and a check suit, leaned over the fallen man and started to count. He had got to "three" when he stopped, assailed on all sides by paste brushes. The bill stickers thought he was trying to interrupt the fighters. He fled.

Miller was on his feet again and began to rough it. In a mixup Barr was down. Nobody attempted counting. The fighters were in the midst of the third round, both bruised and panting, when the reserves arrived. Others of the paste bucket and brush persuasion escaped, but Miller and Barr were arrested and taken to the Tenderloin Police Station. There they were charged with fighting in the street. They were caught red-handed and red-nosed. The small boys by the hundred, who had witnessed the affair, followed to the station at a safe distance to hoot at the police for spoiling their good time.

PLAYWRIGHTS ARE ON GUARD.

They Fear an Attempt to Alter the Copyright Laws.

Because of a rumored effort on the part of Western publishers to change the existing copyright law, Playwrights Charles Klein, Bronson Howard, and Milton Royle will go to Washington to-morrow afternoon to represent the American Dramatists' Club at a hearing to be given by the Senate Committee on Copyright Tuesday.

"We shall simply watch proceedings," said Mr. Klein, the Secretary of the club, last night, "with a view to protecting the interests of American dramatic authors, particularly those in the Eastern States. We are quite satisfied with the American copyright laws as they stand. We have heard a report that an attempt is to be made by the publishers of the Middle States, which have always been the piracy belt, to modify the law so as to allow themselves greater liberty in the republishing of books and plays. Any such extension of the present law we shall vigorously contest."

REAL REALISM ON THE STAGE.

Mimic Pathos Causes Breakdown of an Actor Anxious for His Mother.

In the second act of "The Heart of Maryland," now being played at the Academy of Music, the action calls for a scene between father and son in which the former speaks of the dead mother of the young man. R. D. MacLean, who plays the father, on reaching these lines, broke into tears yesterday afternoon and was so overcome with emotion that he could hardly go on with his part. The audience was puzzled. After a few minutes Mr. MacLean controlled himself and the play proceeded.

Yesterday afternoon was the first time that Mr. MacLean had played his rôle for several days, having been out of the cast in attendance at the bedside of his mother, who is seriously ill at Shepardstown, West Va. He returned only yesterday morning.

To Pocahontas Descendants.

WASHINGTON, March 10.—Having completed its organization, the Pocahontas Memorial Association to-day sent out a notice through the press expressing its desire to enroll among its members "all the descendants of the Indian Princess and of the colonists whom she saved from massacre and starvation."

MUSIC BY AMERICANS.

The First Concert of the New Music Society in Carnegie Hall.

The new Music Society of America, that has been formed to provide a hearing for instrumental music of American composers, gave its first concert last evening in Carnegie Hall. There had been much effort put forth toward making the occasion a success and toward rendering it, indeed, possible at all. It was rewarded by the presence of an audience not large, but of more than moderate numbers. The Russian Symphony Orchestra, under Modest Altschuler's direction, gave the backbone of the performance, and two artists not familiar to New York concert halls were the soloists—Miss Elise Stevens and Miss Ruth Lynda Deyo.

As to the value and necessity of this sort of propaganda for American musicians, there may well be a difference of opinion. Mr. MacDowell, who dominated the programme of this first concert, was stoutly opposed to such attempts and pointedly refused to let his music be concerned in them, more than a few times. However that may be, it turned out that the only compositions heard last night that showed any real importance—Mr. MacDowell's Indian suite and his second piano concerto—had both been given in the regular concerts of the city three times within a not very long span of years. To music lovers who attend such concerts they were both known. Their present repetition, however, may have been prompted partly by the desire to do honor to the composer, whose unfortunate condition is now so well known.

The Indian suite is of more interest as showing what an accomplished and ingenious orchestral writer could do with difficult and intractable material than as music in and of itself. And while there are certainly some striking and impressive effects gained of orchestration and of rhythm, the composer has not been able to avoid monotony, nor does the music sound as the spontaneous and necessary utterance of one who had something of his own to say. The concerto is an imposing and dazzling piece of virtuoso music, with some remarkably fine themes and much skillful treatment, and with noble and beautiful expression in the first larghetto and in the largo that precedes the final allegro. Miss Deyo played it with sweep and fire. She has great strength and accuracy of finger, and her style is full of dash and nervous energy. She did not show last night always a beautiful or varied quality of tone. Miss Deyo is a young player, and is clearly one full of promise.

Henry F. Gilbert's dramatic scene, "Salammbô's Invocation to Tänith," has some effective points in the orchestration, but the music has little power to deepen and accentuate the mood of Flaubert's text. Miss Stevens sang it with earnest endeavor but not always successful achievement, and in a voice that had much unsteadiness.

The "Overture Joyeuse," by Arthur Shepherd, that gained the Paderewski prize last year, begins well, with a swinging and expansive phrase brilliantly proclaimed by the orchestra, but the composer is not well able to sustain his music at this level, and he lapses into laborious and inconsequential treatment of his material, and continues it to too great length.

The audience was very enthusiastic and unwearied in applause. Miss Deyo was repeatedly recalled, and finally sat down and played again. A cable dispatch was received by Mr. Altschuler from Mr. Safonoff in Berlin, who has taken an interest in the new music society. He conveyed his thanks for its invitation to him to be present, wishing it prosperity.

HAROLD BAUER'S RECITAL.

A Very Large Audience Hears the Pianist in Mendelssohn Hall.

Mr. Harold Bauer's piano recital yesterday afternoon in Mendelssohn Hall was an interesting occasion in several ways, and artistically truly a rare delight. He stands apart from most of the virtuosos upon the piano in the profoundly artistic nature of what he does, in the high distinction of his playing, in the entire disregard of any personal display or of any personal effect. Mr. Bauer has a wide range of vision as a musician, and is interested in and sympathetic with many different styles. And while he is remarkably accomplished as a technician able to cope with all he undertakes without disturbance of his repose, there is that in his playing which is lifted above all considerations of technique, and technique is thereby put into its rightful place as a means to an end. It is the end, the exposition of the emotional and poetic and intellectual content of music that can be enjoyed in Mr. Bauer's playing as in that of few others.

He played Brahm's B minor rhapsodie and A major intermezzo, Schumann's F sharp minor novellette, and Beethoven's sonata in A flat, Op. 110, with a remarkable sympathy and a remarkable penetration into the significance of the music. Schumann's novellette is one of his strikingly original pieces that pianists neglect, and in which Mr. Bauer found full expression for its swiftly changing moods of fiery impetuosity, drastic humor, and poetry. The sonata by Beethoven he played in a lofty style and a romantic spirit. The fugue, with its dramatic recitative, he played in a masterly style, as one who was in truth master of its material and intellectual difficulties and who had not continually to struggle anxiously with them.

The second half of his programme was devoted to music of a lighter nature. In these he produced some remarkable effects of color in his tones and gained some singularly beautiful effects in pedaling. A piece of very slight musical texture by Maurice Ravel, "Jeux d'eau," gave suggestions of falling waters through the uneasy harmonies cultivated by the young Frenchmen. There was a brilliant and voluble impromptu by Fauré, a scherzo by Balakireff that is full of a rampant scherzo spirit, and a curious study by Alkan, which showed that the Frenchmen of fifty years ago were not less skillful in suggesting nature and her doings than those of to-day. The wind wails through the rising and falling chromatics of this piece so successfully as to make the slender melody that threads its way through it seem rather superfluous. Mr. Bauer closed with Chopin's C minor nocturne and B minor scherzo.

There was a very large audience—one that called into requisition all the extra seats that could be provided. It was the result of furnishing tickets for music students at a low price, and the policy would seem to have numerous advantages over the old policy that provides a lonesome handful of listeners at a regular price, even for excellent artists.

MME. SEMBRICH WILL RETURN

She Is Engaged for Three Months of Next Season at the Opera.

Mme. Sembrich has been re-engaged for next season at the Metropolitan Opera House. The negotiations were completed yesterday between the distinguished singer and Mr. Conried. The present arrangement, however, is not for the whole season, but only for the first three months of it. It is understood that it provides for the same number of appearances per week on the part of the distinguished singer as at present.

MUSICAL PLAY AT FORDHAM.

"A College Complication," Arranged by Students, to be Given.

"A College Complication," an original musical comedy in two acts, is to be produced on March 17 at the Fordham University Theatre. The performance marks the opening of the newly equipped auditorium. The music is by J. Ignatius Coveney, a senior, while the lyrics are by Stanley J. Quinn, a sophomore. The stage grouping and ensemble dancing are under the direction of Prof. Dare.

Many women well known in Catholic circles will be patronesses. The programmes will be souvenirs containing excerpts from the opera.

Taylor-Johnson Wedding on April 5.

Invitations are out for the wedding on April 5, at the Marble Collegiate Church, of Miss May Valentine Johnson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert H. Johnson of Spuyten Duyvil, N. Y., to Wyatt Warner Taylor, son of Mr. and Mrs. John J. Taylor, formerly of Stamford, Conn.

E. J. MORGAN SUFFOCATED IN HIS ROOM IN A HOTEL

Actor, However, Was Really a Victim of Morphine.

DRUGS AS AIDS TO ACTING

Morgan Used Them So at First, Then Became Their Slave—Too Weak to Rise After Fatal Fall.

Edward J. Morgan, the actor, was found dead in his room at the Belleclaire Hotel, Broadway and Seventy-seventh Street, at noon yesterday. In the opinion of Coroner Shrady and Coroner's Physician Weston his death was caused by asphyxiation following a fall which pinioned his head between a steam radiator and the carpet.

The fall, from which he was too weak to rise, was caused by vertigo or some weakness of the heart. In the awkward position into which he fell his face was pressed tightly upon the carpet and suffocation followed. The weakness which caused the fall, however, followed a course of treatment necessitated by Mr. Morgan's addiction to drugs. It had long been known to his friends that the actor was a victim of the morphine habit.

Some of the theatrical men who knew Morgan in the earlier days of his career speak of him as having been a great student. He soon learned, however, what drugs would do for him, and those who conversed with him when he was playing in "Quo Vadis" heard him speak more about "inspiration" and "temperamental moods" than about books. He first used drugs, his friends say, to bring on the emotional frenzies which he desired, but the habit grew upon him so that it affected his work and he finally became a slave to morphine.

About four weeks ago the actor had reduced himself to such a condition that through the persuasion of his wife, Helen Bertram, he was led to take a course of treatment at the Hahnemann Hospital. Under treatment he improved so much that he insisted upon going to Chicago to visit his wife, who is playing there in "The Gingerbread Man." He returned from that city on Friday evening.

Mr. Morgan, his wife, his step-daughter, Rosina Henley, and Mrs. Kate Eustace, who, during the absence of Mrs. Morgan took charge of Rosina, have been making their home at the Belleclaire when in the city. Mr. Morgan reached the hotel in the best of spirits on Friday evening. He seemed to the clerk to be in good mental and physical condition. He went at once to his room.

Soon after his arrival at the hotel he promised to take dinner with his stepdaughter and Mrs. Eustace, but he failed to join them. In passing his room, Mrs. Eustace knocked at his door, but got no response. Supposing that he was overtired from his trip and had lain down to sleep, they passed on. It was not until noon yesterday that a chambermaid found him on the floor. He was on his knees with his face on the carpet. He wore a suit of pajamas, and the position of the suit case which was near the body indicated that he had fallen while leaning over it, presumably to get a woolen slipper, the other one being on his foot.

Mr. Morgan was born in a suburb of London in 1873. After a preparatory course he went to Oxford, where he was graduated in 1892. He is said to have made his first professional appearance in a music hall, but in 1895 he got a small part with James O'Neill, who was then playing "Virginius."

He first showed promise as a member of the company that supported Mrs. Leslie Carter in "The Heart of Maryland." He then became a member of the Lyceum Theatre Stock Company and played at the Lyceum Theatre and at Daly's.

When Liebler & Co. began preparations for their presentation of Viola Allen in "The Christian" Mr. Morgan was cast for the part of John Storm, and many theatre-goers still remember his work in that play.

Following the engagement in "The Christian" Mr. Morgan created the part of David Rossi in "The Eternal City" and continued in this part until March, 1905, when he appeared in Booth Tarkington's "The Gentleman from Indiana." His last important engagement was in "The Prodigal Son." After that he played for a short time at the West End Theatre in "The Eternal City," but those who saw him in that engagement said yesterday that he merely walked through the part.

Mr. Morgan was twice married. His first wife was Adelaide Cushman. She died in 1904. About a year and a half ago he married Helen Bertram, the singer.

JAKE WUNDERLICH IS DEAD.

Tenderloin Professional Bondsman Meets His End in a Hospital.

Jake Wunderlich, saloonkeeper and professional bondsman, died yesterday morning. The Tenderloin did not know it last night although it knew the man better than almost any other south of Forty-second Street. The news of his death came from a hospital in Lexington Avenue.

The cabbies about Twenty-eighth Street and Sixth Avenue, where Wunderlich had owned a saloon for forty years, knew that Wunderlich had gone to the hospital several days ago. They said he was suffering from a kick received in a row with a man whom he tried to eject from his place.

Some one had obtained a lease of his saloon over his head and that worried Jake. The night hawks said it helped to make his hair white, but Jake was 62 years old. Those who knew him intimately declared that he had had worse troubles than that.

A book might be written about Jake Wunderlich, but it would take more than one book to record both the good and bad deeds in the career of the Tenderloin's most noted character. But Jake Wunderlich is dead. His body was taken to an undertaking establishment last night.

"Poor Jake," said Jersey, the cabman, "he was certainly good wid de coin when he had it. And Flo Sinclair added:

"Yes, he was der benefactress of every girl what got pinched."

MISS GEORGE'S NEW PLAY.

Audience Enthusiastic Over "The Richest Girl in the World."

Special to The New York Times.

ST. LOUIS, March 10.—Miss Grace George received an enthusiastic welcome at the initial performance of Rupert Hughes's play, "The Richest Girl in the World," at the Olympic Theatre to-night. There was prolonged applause at her first appearance, and she was frequently applauded.

The opening scene of the play is laid in New York, where a society girl, known to be the richest girl in the world, is besieged by a crowd of fortune hunters. Her true American spirit sickens at the fawning, and disguised as a stenographer she flees to a farm in New Hampshire to "separate the wolves from the sheep." Finally in an apartment house in New York the girl is won for her own worth.

"Il Trovatore" at the Opera.

Operagoers could not recall within recent years a matinée performance of Verdi's most popular work which was sung at the Metropolitan Opera House yesterday afternoon. There was a very large audience to hear it and the singers who have hitherto appeared in the performances of the current season were warmly applauded. Herr Knote repeated "Di quella pira" on the stage before the curtain in order not to interfere with the scenic changes on the stage. Mme. Homer repeated her admirable performance of Azucena. The other singers were MM. Campanari and Journet.

SURE ENOUGH TRANSFER MAN.

See Commissioner Bingham, Says the Policeman, Who Knows.

He wanted to go from the elevated railroad to the Subway, and when he got off the train at the 147th Street Station to continue on down town he asked a passing policeman:

"Where do I get a ticket to transfer me down below?"

"See Commissioner Bingham," replied the policeman over his shoulder as he hurried away to his home in the Bronx.

DEATH OF EUGEN RICHTER.

Radical Leader in Reichstag—Was a Bitter Opponent of Bismarck.

BERLIN, March 10.—Eugen Richter, Radical leader in the Reichstag since its foundation, Bismarck's old opponent, and for long editor of the Freisinnige Zeitung, died this morning.

Herr Richter, who was enfeebled by an illness of two years, and who had been blind for a year, died from heart weakness. He was the last remaining notable parliamentary-journalistic figure of the formative period of the empire. As the leader of the Radical Party he once numbered Profs. Virchow and Mommsen among his lieutenants. Owing to the drift of political opinion and the growth of Socialism the party sank from a million votes and sixty-seven seats in the Reichstag in 1885 to twenty-one seats.

DEATH LIST OF A DAY.

Elizabeth N. Bradley Bystrom.

Elizabeth N. Bradley Bystrom, who died at Dobbs Ferry on Friday, was born in Chicago in 1852. Her father, the late D. Ogden Bradley, had gone there as a young man from Penn Yan, N. Y., to enter the banking business. He married Elizabeth Neely. The family came to Brooklyn. Elizabeth, their eldest daughter, before she was twelve years old had passed the Regents' examinations, and in 1875 made up her mind to study medicine. After a two years' course in chemistry at the University of California, she entered the Medical School of the Faculty of Paris and was graduated with great honors in 1887.

The young American woman, confronted by such critics as Robin, Fournier, Pouchet, and Gautier, advanced an original theory, furnished her own illustrations, and adduced her conclusions in a thesis entitled "Iodism." In a long debate she came off victorious and was warmly praised. The professors told her that, although they could not agree with her, the work she had done merited the higheste mark, "Mention Honorable."

A long illness followed, and her life was despaired of several times. On her recovery she returned to America, and settled in New York as a general practitioner for ten years. She married in 1892 Ernest Bystrom, a Swedish pianist. She was a member of the Academy of Medicine, the New York County Medical Association, and the Pathological and Neurological Societies. She did considerable translating.

Obituary Notes.

EDWIN BINDLEY, President of the Duquesne National Bank, died at Pittsburg yesterday.

Dr. ELIAS H. JOHNSON, a member of the Faculty of Crozer Theological Seminary, died yesterday at Chester, Penn. He was 64 years of age.

FREDERICK F. S. FARWELL, owner of the Farwell Mills and one of New England's best-known worsted manufacturers, died at his residence in Warwick, R. I., yesterday.

BENJAMIN V. FRASER, for many years one of the best-known of Saratoga hotel managers, died at Saratoga yesterday. He was 84 years old. Lately Mr. Fraser had spent much of his time in this city.

BOARDMAN C. FROST, widely known in lake marine insurance circles, died suddenly at Oswego yesterday. He was also prominent in local politics, having held several municipal positions. Mr. Frost was 62 years old.

CHARLES H. SOUTHWORTH of Springfield, Mass., President of the Hampshire Paper Company and the Carew Manufacturing Company of South Hadley Falls, was stricken with apoplexy in the Carew Mill office yesterday and died within a few minutes.

ISAAC LANE, one of the oldest residents of Caldwell, N. J., and a member of the firm of Lane & Lockwood, tobacconists, died at his home in Caldwell Friday night. He was a member of the Old First Presbyterian Church and a large property owner. A widow survives him.

CHARLES M. WALTERS, formerly of Cincinnati, who resided in Brooklyn the last two years, died suddenly of heart trouble on Friday. He was a Knight Templar and served in the navy in the civil war under Admiral Porter. He leaves a widow, one son, and two daughters.

Dr. EDWARD W. DERBY, a practitioner in New York for fifty years, died yesterday at his home, 344 East Fifty-eighth Street. He was 77 years old, and a native of New York. He was a graduate of Williams College and the New York Medical College. He was at one time Master of Alma Lodge of Masons. Dr. Derby is survived by his wife.

ELBERT SNEDEKER, at one time a leading building contractor in Manhattan and Brooklyn, died on Friday at his home, 366 Macon Street, Brooklyn. He was 64 years old and was born in Oyster Bay. He was one of the organizers of the Brooklyn Elevated Railroad Company and was its first Vice President. He leaves a widow and a daughter.

Major WILLIAM FERGUSON, formerly attached to the Custom House in this city, died at his home in Central Valley, N. Y., yesterday. He was born in Marion, now Lafayette, Street, this city, on Sept. 12, 1837. He served in the civil war in the Fifth Regiment, New York Volunteers, Duryea's Zouaves. He retired from the Custom House in 1901. He was a Mason and a member for the Loyal Legion. He leaves a daughter and two sons.

WINFIELD SCOTT CHAMBERLAIN, a broker, died suddenly of paralysis at his home, New York Bay and East Centre Street, Bayonne, on Friday night. Mr. Chamberlain was a prominent Republican and had been a candidate for Congress against John T. Dunn of Elizabeth. He was the organizer and first Commodore of the Winthrop Yacht Club of Boston. He leaves a wife. He was 59 years old.

WILLIAM MILLNER, a veteran of the civil war and for nearly half a century a resident of Boonton, but for the last year a resident of Bloomfield, N. J., died Friday night in the latter place of paralysis. Mr. Millner was born in Tipton, England, sixty-five years ago and came to this country when a boy and settled in Boonton. When the war broke out he enlisted in Company K, First Regiment, New Jersey Volunteers, becoming a Lieutenant. He was wounded in the battle of Cold Harbor. For eighteen years he was employed in the Public Stores in New York, but retired two years ago. A widow, one son, and one daughter survive him.

THE WEATHER.

WASHINGTON, March 10.—The great barometric depression which has occupied the Canadian marine provinces since Friday morning is central to-night over the south of the St. Lawrence, with a barometer reading of 28.98.

A second depression, with very low barometer readings, overlies the middle plateau, while an area of high pressure and zero temperatures covers the northeast Rocky Mountain Slope.

There has been a sharp fall in temperature throughout the Middle and Northern Rocky Mountain region and the Missouri Valley, amounting to a cold wave in North Dakota, where the temperature has reached zero.

It will be decidedly colder in the Middle Mississippi Valley, and thence southward to Northern Texas, with a cold wave in Oklahoma and Northern Texas.

Winds along the New England Coast and Middle Atlantic Coast will be brisk northwest, diminishing; South Atlantic Coast, light and variable, becoming easterly; Gulf Coast, fresh east to southeast, increasing Sunday; Lake Michigan, fresh northwest.

FORECAST FOR TO-DAY AND MONDAY.

Eastern New York, New Jersey, Eastern Pennsylvania, and Delaware—Fair, colder Sunday. Monday, partly cloudy, followed by snow in the afternoon or at night; diminishing west winds.

New England—Fair and colder Sunday. Monday, fair, followed by snow in west and southern portions; brisk west winds, diminishing.

Western New York—Snow flurries Sunday; colder in east portions. Monday, snow.

Western Pennsylvania—Cloudy Sunday, followed by snow late in the afternoon or at night. Monday, snow; diminishing west winds.

The temperature record for the twenty-four hours ended at midnight, taken from the thermometer at the local office of the United States Weather Bureau, is as follows:

	1905.	1906.		1905.	1906.
3 A. M.	37	36	4 P. M.	46	40
6 A. M.	36	36	6 P. M.	45	38
9 A. M.	38	39	9 P. M.	41	37
12 M.	43	39	12 P. M.	36	37

This thermometer is 108 feet above the street level. The average temperature yesterday was 38; for the corresponding date last year it was 40; average on the corresponding date for the last twenty-five years, 39.

The temperature at 8 A. M. yesterday was 37; at 8 P. M. it was 37. Maximum temperature, 43 degrees at 1 P. M.; minimum, 33 degrees at 4:30 P. M. Humidity, 74 per cent. at 8 A. M.; 74 per cent. at 8 P. M.

ROAD DRIVERS PLAN BIG SEASON'S CAMPAIGN

Speedway Parade and Horse Show to Excel Previous Efforts.

CUPS FOR MATINEE RACING

Ten Trophies Offered for Competition in Spring and Fall Brushes—Meeting Next Wednesday.

The Road Drivers' Association has taken a new lease of life, and plans are under way to strengthen the organization. It is proposed to establish a permanent headquarters, with a meeting room capable of accommodating at least 200 members. The membership list has passed the 400 mark, and it is expected that fully one hundred more members will be added by the Fall. At no stage in the history of the association has so much interest been shown as at present, and a big season of matinee racing is now under consideration by the Board of Directors.

The annual Speedway parade and horse show of the association this year will be the most elaborate affair of its kind ever held. It is expected that the entry list will be nearly double that of last year, and fully 300 harness horses will be in line. The date will be either the first or second Saturday in May, depending on the plans with reference to the police parade. If there is no police parade, the Road Drivers' Association will claim the first Saturday, otherwise the annual event is set for Saturday, May 12. Many novel innovations are planned for the parade, and the sub-committees are working hard to make it a big success.

A special meeting of the members has been called for next Wednesday evening at the Hotel Cadillac. The plans of the Executive Committee will be laid before the members and an appeal made to still further increase the interest in the parade and matinee racing. The association does not intend to confine all its energies toward making the Speedway parade and horse show a success, but all matters pertaining to driving will receive careful consideration. A committee is now trying to get the city authorities to require street cars to stop before passing the Eighth Avenue crossings at 135th and 145th Streets owing to recent accidents there. The organization was previously successful in securing the opening of Central Park to drivers at West Sixty-sixth Street and at Fifty-ninth Street and Seventh Avenue.

Some important changes in the Spring and Fall Speedway brushes are contemplated. The subject of out-of-town versus city competitors was decided last week, when it was voted that in order to be eligible for a trophy a horse must take part in at least half of the meetings both in the Spring and in the Fall. The question of distinctions between trotters and pacers in the brushes will be decided at Wednesday's meeting. Heretofore all competitions have been open to all, each horse having been classified as to his ability, regardless of his gait. It is practically certain that Thursday will again be selected for the brushes. It is proposed to set apart one or more cups for point winners, instead of heat winners. Many drivers lay up their horses when they find they are unable to win. With the substitution of points it will give the second and third horses a better chance to win and make the races more interesting.

Ten cups are offered for competition, with a probability of two more. The Morosini Cup will be the principal trophy. Miss Giulia Morosini is the donor, and it is valued at $500. The Frazier Wagon Cup is worth $250, while the other eight are more or less valuable. The cups are donated without conditions, and may be assigned in any way the committee may decide. They become the property of the winner outright each season.

COLUMBIA WRESTLERS LOSE.

St. George A. C. Team Wins Five of Seven Classes—One Drawn.

The St. George Athletic Club wrestlers defeated the Columbia team in a dual meet at the St. George Memorial House, 207 East Sixteenth Street, last night after an interesting and well-contested series of bouts, in which the athletic club men made much the better showing. The meet was held under intercollegiate rules, requiring three-second pin falls, else the athletic club men would have won more handily.

On the St. George team were a number of very able wrestlers. I. Niflot, the National champion, was entered in the 135-pound class. In the 158-pound class R. Tisney was another title holder, while they were represented in the 175-pound class and in the heavy-weights by C. Mayer, the amateur champion boxer, who is also a wrestler of no mean skill. He was overmatched in skill, however, by both his opponents in the two classes, but his superior strength pulled him through one successfully. Echeverria got the decision over him in the heavy-weight class, but neither got a fall. Both Niflot and Tisney also won.

Columbia, too, had a title holder entered in her lists. T. Howell won at the recent intercollegiate championships in the 145-pound class, but his colors were lowered last night when Joseph Klein threw him in the first bout of the evening after 6 minutes 7 4-5 seconds of as lively work as one seldom sees on the mat.

The 115-pound class followed, with C. Sephton and I. Bloom facing each other. Neither could gain a fall in ten minutes, and after a two-minute rest they were sent at it again for three minutes and again failed to secure a fall. The decision was given to Sephton.

The 125-pound class followed, and recorded Columbia's first victory. W. W. Wise was her first representative against C. Raedel. The two men were scarcely together before Raedel had Wise on the mat. In ten seconds, however, the advantage was reversed, and a quick double roll after being in chancery landed the fall for Wise in 0:32 2-5. F. Conant for Columbia and J. Renkle for St. George then met in the class and a bully bout resulted. Conant handled himself mighty well, though Renkle seemed the stronger, and the bout was remarkably even for five minutes. Then whether Conant tired or not is not known, but he certainly weakened, and Renkle scored the fall in 7:03 1-5.

It was Champion Niflot and A. J. Shimmar of Columbia who gave the best exhibition. The men were finely matched in weight and strength and both unusually skillful. The bout was wonderfully fast, and both men got holds that appeared irresistible; but the other managed to break away. Shimmar was especially clever in this, and each time he eluded his opponent he gained the ascendancy temporarily. Finally, however, Niflot got a three-quarter Nelson on him and slowly forced him to the mat in 5:42. M. J. Elsing, the second Columbia man, was also defeated in this class by O. Hutter of St. George.

H. B. Post, the Columbia end rush, and Champion Mayer then met. Post had the upper hand of his husky opponent during the first part of the match, when his greater skill counted; but Mayer got him finally with a half Nelson, and, though Post put up a clever fight, he was put on his back in exactly 8 minutes. Mayer presented just the same kind of a battle against J. F. Echeverria, the other Columbia gridiron star; but neither got a fall, and the Columbia man received the decision.

J. Effinger and R. Tisney of St. George in the 158-pound class won over M. D. Jessup and W. Kingsbury of Columbia.

Kentucky Racing Bill Up to Governor.

FRANKFORT, Ky., March 10.—The Chinn State Racing Commission bill received the approval of the House of Representatives to-day and goes to Gov. Beckham for his signature. The bill provides that five Commissioners be appointed to control all the tracks in the State.

Columbia Defeated at "Soccer."

Columbia University Association football team was defeated yesterday, when the Boys' Club eleven won a close game at Columbia Oval by the score of 3 goals to 2. This is Columbia's first game this year, and the players were not seen to advantage. The Boys' Club played a better passing game than their opponents. In the first half Roff and Evans scored for Columbia. The Boys' Club improved in the second half and succeeded in shooting 3 goals, while Columbia was unable to add to the score of the first half. The goals in the second half were made by Hein, Smith, and Kessler.

NEW ORLEANS STAKE RACES.

Judge Davey and Judge Treen the Winners—Phil Chinn's Purchase.

NEW ORLEANS, March 10.—After a hard drive through the last furlong, Clint Dewitt's colt, Judge Davey, well supported at 3 to 1, won the Rosebud Stakes at the Fair Grounds to-day. The race was worth $1,295 to the winner. Mintberia was a strong favorite at 7 to 5, but was never a factor. Lyne forced the pace with Salvisa, and she was exhausted when the pinch came. Monis and Lady Navarre were the only other beaten favorites. Weather clear; track good.

"Phil" Chinn to-day completed the purchase of Judge Himes from "Charlie" Ellison. The horse, which has won $40,000 during his career on the turf, will be retired to the stud. Mr. Chinn also bought the mares Cognomen, Intrigue, Fritzi Scheff, Hattie Kingston, and Julia Arthur and will ship them to his farm near Lexington. Summaries:

FIRST RACE.—Six furlongs. Paul Clifford, 122 pounds, (W. Robbins,) 8 to 5, won; Tom Mankins, 115, (W. McGee,) 3 to 1, second; Little Red, 102, (W. Hayes,) 60 to 1, third. Time—1:15 4-5. Verandah, Pawtucket, Bazil, Glen Gallant, and Bonebrake also ran.

SECOND RACE.—Six furlongs. Brookston, 103 pounds, (L. Smith,) 4 to 1, won; Brilliant, 107, (Robbins,) 8 to 1, second; My Gem, 107, (Macey,) 12 to 1, third. Time—1:16 3-5. Teddy Brookwood, Frank Rice, Ethel's Pride, Monis, St. John, Firing Line, Flying Trapeze, Intrigue, Raining Leaves, Ogontz, John Randolph, and Tennyburn also ran.

THIRD RACE.—Mile and a sixteenth, handicap. Logistilla, 103 pounds, (D. Smith,) 5 to 2, won; St. Valentine, 114 pounds, (J. Hennessy,) 3 to 1, second; Redfern, 4 to 1, second; Macey, Jr., 87, (Moreland,) 10 to 1, third. Time—1:48 3-5. Lady Navarre and Peter Paul also ran.

FOURTH RACE.—Five furlongs; The Rosebud Stakes. Judge Davey, 113 pounds, (Livingston,) 3 to 1, won; Friction, 108, (W. McGee,) 30 to 1, second; Gold Circle, 108, (Robbins,) 10 to 1, third. Time—1:03 4-5. Glad Pirate, Big Store, Salvisa, Black Mate, Al Powell, Mintberia, and Quagga also ran.

FIFTH RACE.—One mile. Joe Lesser, 112 pounds, (J. Martin,) 1 to 3, won; Hyacinth, 101, (Aubuchon,) 4 to 1, second; Safeguard, 103, (Bedell,) 20 to 1, third. Time—1:43 3-5. Barkelmore and Docile also ran.

SIXTH RACE.—One mile. Arabo, 111 pounds, (Robbins,) 11 to 10, won; Beechwood, 103, (Bedell,) 30 to 1, second; Hortensia, 101, (Obert,) 7 to 2, third. Time—1:44 2-5. Jungle Imp, Chub, Bourke Cockran, Trogon, and Light Note also ran.

SEVENTH RACE.—One mile. Louise McFarlan, 101 pounds, (W. McGee,) 8 to 5, won; Pirate's Dance, 88, (J. Johnson,) 3 to 1, second; Chauncey Olcott, 86, (Moreland,) 3 to 1, third. Time—1:44. Mazzini, Gay American, Will Shelley, Little Rose, D. W. Flynn, Goo Goo, and Mr. Wixson also ran.

Favored by luck and well handled by Koerner, Judge Treen scored easily in the Juvenile Stakes at City Park to-day. The race was worth $1,320 to the winner. Lans, the favorite in the betting, got the worst of the start, and covered more ground than any horse in the race. Gravina and Bert Osra were the only winning favorites. Weather cloudy; track heavy. Summaries:

FIRST RACE.—Mile and a half. Dazzle, 103 pounds, (Koerner,) 9 to 1, won; Bradley's Pet, 101, (W. McIntyre,) 6 to 1, second; Piller, 101, (Pendergast,) 20 to 1, third. Time—2:43 1-5. Woodlyn, Flying Charcoal, Palthos, Hymettus, Doeskin, Vonda, Trepan, Fox Hunting, Delcarina, and Siss Lee also ran.

SECOND RACE.—Two miles. Safety Light, 101 pounds, (Romanelli,) 16 to 5, won; Double, 98, (J. Hennessy,) 6 to 5, second; Little Elkin, 100, (C. Morris,) 8 to 1, third. Time—3:41 1-5. The Trifler and Bisque also ran.

THIRD RACE.—Mile and a sixteenth. Gravina, 109 pounds, (Nicol,) 5 to 2, won; Dungannon, 107, (Koerner,) 9 to 2, second; Rain Devils, 94, (J. Hennessy,) 20 to 1, third. Time—1:53 2-5. Ingolthrift, Judge Traynor, Sanction, and Oddoletta also ran.

FOURTH RACE.—Four and a half furlongs; the Juvenile Stakes. Judge Treen, 118 pounds, (Koerner,) 6 to 1, won; Lans, 120, (J. Jones,) 3 to 5, second; Blue Dale, 120, (B. Smith,) 5 to 1, third. Time—0:56 4-5. Chamblet and Edward Wilder also ran.

FIFTH RACE.—Five and a half furlongs. Mary Worth, 108 pounds, (J. Jones,) 9 to 2, won; Clifton Boy, 108, (B. Smith,) 11 to 2, second; Major Carpenter, 108, (W. Allen,) 8 to 1, third. Time—1:10 4-5. St. Sever, Martha C., Ernest Parham, Armorer, Trompeuse, and Sportsman also ran.

SIXTH RACE.—Six furlongs; handicap. Braien, 107 pounds, (D. Austin,) 9 to 1, won; Garnish, 109, (Romanelli,) 5 to 1, second; Devout, 105, (W. McIntyre,) 6 to 1, third. Time—1:16 2-5. Emergency, Lucy Young, Nonie, Lucille, and Tinker also ran.

SEVENTH RACE.—Five and a half furlongs. Bert Osra, 99 pounds, (Innes,) 3 to 1, won; Mynheer, 108, (Jost,) 7 to 2, second; Monochord, 106, (W. Allen,) 7 to 1, third. Time—1:08 3-5. Jack Adams, Alcantara, Adare, and Marco also ran.

JOCKEY CLUB'S PROGRESS.

Quite a Change in Personnel of Organization in Twelve Years.

The full list of the members of The Jockey Club was published in the Racing Calendar last week for the first time in several years. The membership is limited to fifty, with a large waiting list.

The Jockey Club was organized Feb. 7, 1894, to take the place of the old Board of Control. The incorporators were Perry Belmont, J. R. Keene, W. P. Thompson, O. H. Payne, W. C. Whitney, F. K. Sturgis, J. B. Haggin, John Hunter, A. J. Cassatt, G. L. Knapp, and James Galway. The club originally had thirty members. John Hunter was the first Chairman, while James R. Keene has occupied the place of Vice Chairman throughout its existence.

There has been a change in the personnel of the club in twelve years. Of the thirty original members ten are dead, while five have resigned. Those to pass away were G. L. Knapp, W. H. Forbes, W. P. Thompson, J. O. Donner, Edward Kelly, E. S. Knapp, J. G. K. Lawrence, W. C. Whitney, S. S. Brown, and A. F. Walcott. Those to resign were A. Clason, John Hunter, O. H. Payne, Seward Webb, and Rudolph Ellis. Several members elected after the organization was well under way have died also, two of them being Jesse Brown of Washington and B. F. Clyde of Philadelphia.

The present membership of The Jockey Club includes men of the highest standing in social and business circles in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Washington, and Central and Northern New York State. The list is:

J. Harry Alexandre, August Belmont, O. H. P. Belmont, Perry Belmont, J. H. Bradford, A. J. Cassatt, William Astor Chanler, H. B. Duryea, P. J. Dwyer, W. C. Eustis, W. S. Fanshawe, J. G. Follansbee, James Galway, F. Gebhard, J. O. Green, F. Gray Griswold, J. B. Haggin, J. G. Heckscher, F. R. Hitchcock, Thomas Hitchcock, Jr., R. C. Hooper, S. S. Howland, C. Oliver Iselin, F. P. Keene, James R. Keene, H. K. Knapp, Prescott Lawrence, W. B. Leeds, P. Lorillard, Clarence H. Mackay, Andrew Miller, E. D. Morgan, J. Pierpont Morgan, A. H. Morris, H. T. Oxnard, Schuyler L. Parsons, Ralph Preston, Samuel Ross, J. Ruppert, Jr., John Sanford, Robert L. Stevens, John Steward, Jr., F. K. Sturgis, L. S. Thompson, W. P. Thompson, William K. Vanderbilt, G. Peabody Wetmore, H. P. Whitney, Richard T. Wilson, Jr., and Craig Wadsworth.

GALLOPS AT GRAVESEND.

Severe Squall Strikes Track and Stops All Training Operations.

Considerable work was done at the Gravesend track yesterday by the thoroughbreds in preparation for the coming racing season, but a severe squall late in the afternoon put a sudden end to all training operations.

Fred Burlew was out early with a bunch of two-year-olds, which included Paumonak and Waterbury, the pair going together a quarter in 0:25½. Waterfall and Conville did the same task in 0:26. Dollie Dollars and Ellcott breezed three furlongs in 0:41½. Judge Post and Captain Emerick went three furlongs in 0:41. Waterbearer went the quarter in 0:24¾ and pulled up the three furlongs in 0:41½. The Yankee filly breezed three furlongs in 0:41.

"Father Bill" Daly sent Josephine, Louise Daly, and Kingston Girl three furlongs in 0:36. Proceeds galloped a mile in 1:58½. Eileen's task was three furlongs, which she did in 0:39. Welsh was in evidence with three big sets, but only moderate galloping was required of them. McGivney sent Hustler for a five-furlong gallop, which was covered in 1:12. Barbee speeded John F. Ahearn six furlongs in 1:23.

Huston breezed Jessamine and Masiniello four furlongs in 0:55. Kehalian, Oarsman, and Marinetta got good strong gallops. Baker sent Cyclops three furlongs in 0:40. Asterisk was allowed a smart gallop. Claxon brought a set of nice-looking juveniles over from Sheepshead. They were breezed in pairs, quarters, the time ranging from 0:25 to 0:26½.

WILL SWIM IN ENGLAND.

Daniels, Spencer, and Schwartz to Take Part in British Championships.

American swimming champions will invade England this Summer. C. M. Daniels and Joseph N. Spencer of the New York Athletic Club and Marquand Schwartz of the Missouri Athletic Club will be entered in the English amateur championships. All three athletes are included in the American team which will compete in the Olympic games at Athens. After the games the trio will visit Vienna, Berlin, Rome, and Paris, leaving the latter city in time to take part in the first of the English swimming championships.

Daniels recently established ten records at the Amateur Athletic Union swimming championships at the New York Athletic Club, including several English records. When Daniels swam 100 yards in 0:57 3-5 the English swimming authorities ridiculed the performance and claimed it was impossible. They refused to recognize the record on the ground that it was made without costume, which is contrary to the English rules. In the Amateur Athletic Union championships Daniels wore a costume for the purpose of proving to the British that his previous record was a legitimate one. His time for the 100 yards was 0:58, which equaled the world's record and materially reduced the best English time. His appearance in England this Summer is certain to create a sensation.

Spencer and Schwartz rank close behind the American champion, and should do good work in the long-distance events.

STIR AMONG OARSMEN; INVESTIGATING CHARGES

N. A. A. O. Will Face Difficult Problems at Annual Meeting.

WORCESTER TO GET REGATTA

Mulcahy and Varley and Vesper B. C. Cases Will Be Disposed Of—Pelham Bay Course Favored.

The annual Spring meeting of the National Association of Amateur Oarsmen, which will be held at the New York Athletic Club house next Saturday night, promises to be one of the most important and sensational ever held by the organization. Matters of special interest to all amateur rowers will be brought up before the Executive Committee. The most important subjects, aside from the selection of a place and date for the next annual regatta, will be the reports of the committees appointed to investigate the cases of Mulcahy and Varley of the Atalanta Boat Club, and the Vesper Boat Club Henley eight. The meeting will be an open one, and all oarsmen are invited to be present.

From a local standpoint the case against J. J. F. Mulcahy and William Varley of the Atalanta Boat Club will be of paramount importance. Mulcahy and Varley were sent to Hamburg, Germany, last July to compete for the international double sculls race for the Kaiser's Prize. The regatta was held under the auspices of the North German Rowing Association. After the race Mulcahy and Varley cabled to the members of the Atalanta Boat Club that they had won the race. An elaborate reception, including a banquet, was tendered to the oarsmen upon their return. They failed to bring back the trophy, and in explanation said it would follow on the next boat from Hamburg, as the engraving was not completed when they left.

Subsequent events disclosed the fact that Mulcahy and Varley not only did not win the race, but did not actually start in the event. A foul occurred in the race, and the referee declared the race off and ordered the event to be rowed over again. The American oarsmen claimed that they had won the first race and refused to take part in the second event, which placed them in the actual position of non-starters.

While Mulcahy and Varley have not transgressed the rules of amateur sport as far as the National Association of amateur oarsmen is concerned, the latter body appointed a sub-committee, consisting of Fred Fortmeyer, Claude R. Zappone, and John O. Regan, to investigate the whole affair and report to the Executive Committee next Saturday.

A special meeting of the sub-committee will be held in this city next Thursday, when Mulcahy and Varley will have an opportunity to present their side of the case. Mulcahy will submit affidavits, which he says will completely vindicate him and his rowing partner, and place an entirely different aspect on the unfortunate affair. The findings of the sub-committee will be submitted to the Executive Committee on Saturday for acceptance, rejection, or modification.

The charges against the Vesper Boat Club of Philadelphia are that the Henley crew last July failed to make a satisfactory accounting of the money raised to pay its expenses to England. Members of the club requested the National Association to investigate the charges. There were many rumors at the time as to how the money was spent, and the result of the investigation is awaited with much interest. The case was taken into the Philadelphia courts, but no satisfactory result was obtained.

The report of James Pilkington, Henry Whiting Garfield, and Judge James G. Tighe on the proposed regatta course at Pelham Bay will be a favorable one. Little has been done in the matter during the past Winter, owing to the unsatisfactory condition of municipal affairs. With the atmosphere cleared, President Pilkington will at once take up the matter, and expects to push it to a successful conclusion. All the plans are ready and estimates prepared, and a meeting will be called within a few weeks to select working committees.

The National Regatta will probably be rowed on Lake Quinsigamond, Worcester, Mass. Philadelphia and Saratoga will bid for the annual event, but, as Springfield, Mass., has withdrawn in favor of Worcester, the latter city will be supported by New England and New York, which will throw the necessary votes to that city.

AMATEUR BILLIARD MEET.

National Championship Begins To-morrow at the Chicago A. A.

More evenly classed than in any previous year, the six leading amateur billiardists of this country will begin the competitions to-morrow night in the sixth Class A National championship. For the second year the tournament will be held in the gymnasium of the Chicago Athletic Association. It was there that the first meeting outside of New York was held a year ago, when Charles F. Conklin of Chicago won the emblem and title after tieing with Wilson Sigourney of San Francisco. The latter has since become a professional and is no longer eligible to compete under the rules of the National Association of Amateur Billiard Players, which governs and directs the sport in the United States.

The six aspirants for the title include J. Ferdinand Poggenburg, ex-champion and representative of the Liederkranz Club; Edward W. Gardner, ex-champion and representing the Acquackanonk Club, Passaic, N. J.; Charles F. Conklin, the present champion, Chicago; H. A. Wright of San Francisco; Clarence S. Norris of New York, and Calvin Demarest of Chicago. Only three of these men played in the tournament last year, Demarest being the newcomer, and both Poggenburg and Wright being absent after entering because of illness in their families.

Because of the recent display of form on the part of at least two of the competitors, it is expected that new records for the 14-inch balk-line game, two counts in balk, will be established by this meeting.

The Billiard Association is offering a trophy for the tournament that is to be won twice before it becomes the property of any one person. Last year the players had the Gold Cup to play for, but the terms under which it was to be won were so severe that it was decided to play off for the cup last November. It was won by Poggenburg. In addition to the Championship Cup, the Chicago Athletic Association will give a beautiful cup to cost $1,000 for the first prize and three other prizes to the second, third, and fourth players. The special prizes are to be given by the Chicago Athletic Association for the player making the high run during the tournament, the highest single average, and the highest grand average.

Edward W. Gardner and H. A. Wright will open the tournament to-morrow night. The second game will bring together Champion Fred Conklin and the young expert, Calvin Demarest, at 3 P. M. on Tuesday, and the third game will be between Charles Norris and Ferdinand Poggenburg on Tuesday night. Three games, two in the afternoon and one at night, will be played thereafter until the tournament is completed.

Harvard's Deficient Athletes Indignant

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., March 10.—The threat to publish the names of Harvard's deficient athletes in The Harvard Crimson has brought counter threats from the athletes who are on probation, including some of the best on Harvard's teams. These say if their names are printed they will sue the paper and the team captains for libel. The authorities reply that malicious intent must be proved, and as the action is taken for the best interests of the men and of the university, the suits will be unavailing. The athletes are greatly enraged over the matter, but the general opinionn is that it will make them all work and recover their class standing.

Athletics Could Only Tie Montgomery.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., March 10.—The champion Philadelphia team of the American League faced a difficult proposition to-day in a game with the local nine of the Southern League. On paper it looked like a walkover for the major leaguers, but the Montgomerys held them in check and at the end of the eleventh inning the score was a tie, each team having four runs to its credit.

AMERICANS' FIRST VICTORY.

Shut Out Southern League Team at Birmingham, the Score Being 12-0.

Special to The New York Times.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., March 10.—The Greater New Yorks shut out the "Barons" this afternoon in the first game of the practice season. Manager Vaughan used Pylant, Utter, and Billiard, all youngsters, and Manager Griffith used Newton, Clarkson, and Leroy. The score was 12 to 0, Gear's strike-out in the last inning ruining Birmingham's only chance of scoring. For the first three innings there was a pretty display of ball playing, young Billiard of the local team holding the visitors down to one hit and no runs. No "Baron" succeeded in getting on base. Utter was substituted for Billiard at the end of the third inning, and the New Yorks annexed four hits and six runs, errors by Montgomery and Alcock being accountable for more scores than hits credited to New York.

Newton is in fine shape, and he and Walter Clarkson succeeded in pitching the "Barons" out without a hit. Leroy allowed the first hit, it being made by Hayes. In the ninth inning the Birminghams had a chance to score, due to an error by Clark Griffith, who was playing third base. Alcock hit safe and went to second on Griffith's error in handling Hayes's grounder. Smith walked. Gear then struck out, blasting all hope. With three men on bases in the third inning and no one out, Billiard distinguished himself by striking out McGuire, Hahn, and Chase in succession.

Another game will be played on Wednesday. The field to-day was packed by enthusiastic "fans." The teams were:

Birmingham—Moleworth, centre field; Smith, right field; Montgomery, third base; Gear, left field; Elsey, first base; Hayes, second base; Matthews, catcher; Alcock, short stop; Billiard, Utter, and Pylant, pitchers.

Greater New York—Dougherty, centre field; Keeler, right field; Griffith, third base; Hahn, left field; Chase, first base; Williams, second base; McGuire, catcher; Yeager, short stop; Newton, Clarkson, and Leroy, pitchers.

MATHEWSON'S ARM INJURED ?

Story at Memphis That the Great Pitcher Was Hurt at Football.

Special to The New York Times.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., March 10.—Christopher Mathewson and "Billy" Gilbert were again forced out of practice to-day, statements being made by McGraw that Gilbert had sprained a ligament, while Mathewson was suffering from a cold. According to report, however, Mathewson has injured his pitching arm as a result of a collision with one of the opposing side in the "soccer" game of football played on Thursday. Mathewson himself denies that this is his trouble, but admits that he has felt a pain in his arm ever since he bagan training.

"Sam" Mertes and "Sammy" Strang reported to Manager McGraw to-day and immediately entered into preliminary work of getting ready for the championship season. The Giants, paired off into teams designated as the McGraws and McGanns, met again to-day, attaining what Manager McGraw regarded as good results in base running, fielding, hitting, and bunting.

George Browne, the outfielder, has been detained on the Pacific Coast, and may not be able to join the Giants until the real season starts. Illness in Browne's family has kept him in San Francisco. He will condition himself there. Mertes, who came from 'Frisco, looks brown as a berry, and says that Browne is in good enough condition right now to begin the season.

WHEN GIANTS RAISE PENNANT.

June 12 Is the Day—Cincinnatis Will Be Here.

Arrangements were completed yesterday by John T. Brush, President of the New York Baseball Club, for the raising of the world's championship pennant at the Polo Grounds. Tuesday, June 12, has been selected as the date, and the Cincinnatis will be the champions' opponents. It is proposed to make the event memorable. The National Commission, composed of Henry C. Pulliam, President of the National League; Ban Johnson, President of the American League, and August Herrmann, Chairman, of Cincinnati, will be in attendance, as will most of the club officials of other baseball organizations and city officials. There will be special features, such as a musical programme, and other interesting ceremonies to commemorate the hoisting of the championship flag.

Secretary-Treasurer Knowles has completed all details preliminary to the opening of the championship season in New York. He will leave to-morrow to join the Giants, remaining with them until they return on April 6. President Brush will probably join the team at Memphis in a week or ten days.

A change has been made in the championship schedule of the New Yorks. Originally they were to play at Boston on June 30, but this has been changed so that the Boston, instead of playing in New York on May 4, will remain at home on that day, and play in New York on Saturday, June 30, the day being an open one here.

Americans in Oxford Rowing Squad.

OXFORD, England, March 10.—Among the twenty-four Rhodes scholars now rowing in the "Torpids," the name given to the annual races for men who have not rowed in the Summer "eights" of the previous year, there are the following Americans, their respective Oxford colleges, and the States they are representing in the scholarship games, being given in each case:

F. Aydelotte, Brasenose College, (Ind.;) R. E. Blodgett, Wadham, (Mo.;) J. A. Brown, New College, (N. H.;) C. W. Bush, Brasenose, (Del.;) E. J. Ford, Christchurch, (Miss.;) R. K. Hack, Oriel, (Mass.;) H. Hinds, Queen's, (N. D.;) B. H. Jacobson, Exeter, (Utah;) E. R. Lloyd, Wadham, (West Va.;) P. C. Many, Queen's, (La.;) L. G. Railsback, Lincoln, (Wash.;) H. W. Soule, Worcester, (Me.;) W. W. Thayer, Magdalen, (N. H.;) C. C. Vincent, Queen's, (Ohio.)

Automobile Notes of Interest.

Sidney S. Gorham, Secretary of the American Automobile Association, will leave for Chicago to-day. He will confer with President John Farson regarding several automobile matters that will come up for action by the various committees of the American Automobile Association during the latter part of this month. President Farson and Mr. Gorham will return to New York later in the month.

Robert Graves, whose high-powered Mercedes car was entered in the Vanderbilt Cup race last Fall, has just purchased a new Pope-Hartford car. He inspected the latest model carefully and pronounced its mechanism fully equal to the leading foreign touring machines.

A large number of New York automobilists left for Boston yesterday to attend the opening of the Boston automobile show, which began last night. The show will be in progress during this week, and the New York dealers are well represented among the exhibitors.

The Atlantic City Automobile Club is preparing an interesting series of races for the beach track during Easter week. There will be events for stock touring cars and runabouts as well as high-speed contests for regular racing machines.

In the Hartford factory, where the Pope-Hartford cars are made, axles, knuckles, and all material in connection with the steering gear are made of heavy forgings pounded out by a four-thousand-pound hammer. Forgings made in this way are used in the steering gear—all the propeller shaft mechanism, gears and pinions, and connecting rods.

The recent fire in the factory of the George N. Pierce Company at Buffalo will not delay deliveries of the Pierce-Arrow cars. The chief damage done was to the bicycle shop.

Positive and practical progress toward the perfection of factory methods is now being made through the co-operation of the engineers and superintendents of the Association of Licensed Automobile Manufacturers, who are organized as the mechanical branch. This was demonstrated at the March meeting, held a few days ago. The discussion was upon the standardization of screws, under which generic term are included the threads of all bolts, nuts, caps, &c. The Committee on Tests, which has charge of the laboratory work, reported on a definite standard for the adoption of all members and for the use of better materials.

A fact worthy of note by all who take a keen interest in the American automobile industry was brought out by a placard at the Philadelphia show. It hung over Dr. Thomas's Locomobile racer, with which Joe Tracy finished third in the Vanderbilt Cup race. It called attention to the fact that the American car had defeated twelve out of the fourteen foreign cars in the contest.

At Pasadena, in the Altadena hill-climbing contest, every popular "$1,500 and under" car in the West was entered. Altadena Hill is three miles long, the altitude at the base being 904 feet and 1,500 feet at the finish. The $1,250 Reo car not only won first place in the $1,500 class, but it also defeated four $2,500 cars of much higher power rating.

It is beginning to be realized that the power of a gasoline engine can never be up to par unless the carburetter is efficient in design and in proper order. Several American makers have given special attention to the carburetter question in constructing their 1906 cars. One of the most interesting of the new designs is that used on the 28 and 45 horse power Columbia cars, the apparatus representing a decided departure from former methods.

The modern garages in New York are bigger and better equipped than those of Paris, and American cars are the equal of any made elsewhere, according to Count de la Vallette, the French engineer who has been in this country for a few weeks, studying the automobile situation.

AUTOISTS WILL FIGHT FOR UNIFORM LAWS

National Bill Through State Aid to be Policy of A. A. A.

OPPOSITION IS EXPECTED

Sidney S. Gorham Outlines Plan for Good Roads Agitation in West—Lawyers for His Committee.

Automobile legislation is only just beginning in the United States, if the energetic policy advocated by President John Farson of the American Automobile Association may be accepted as an indication of the future. In this respect he is ably supported by the new Secretary, Sidney S. Gorham, and who, by virtue of his being a lawyer, has very properly been named as Chairman of the Law Committee. Mr. Gorham believes that the time has come in many States of the Union for the automobilists to come out squarely in favor of good roads, and, if necessary, to fight strenuously for them. Not only are the motor users to fight for good roads, but they will be advised to demand an equitable law regarding the use and licensing of automobiles. Hitherto the great bulk of legislation of this character has been directed against automobilists. The latter have virtually been on the defensive, and many of the benefits they have obtained have been secured through quiet and devious ways.

Mr. Gorham said yesterday:

"I intend to get right to work on a bill which I hope will be the foundation of a uniform bill to be presented to the Legislatures of a number of States, gradually increasing the number as occasion requires, so that in time, through the action of the States, a uniform automobile law may be in vogue all over the country. In this way, I think, we will eventually approach that ideal—a National automobile law. I do not think the Government can ever pass a law to regulate the speed of motor vehicles or make other stipulations. It appears to me that this is more in the line of State legislative action, and it is along this plan that we will begin our work."

Mr. Gorham proposes to gather around him as assistants on the Law Committee lawyers from every club in the association. Besides having a lawyer from every club, Mr. Gorham will also ask lawyers who have represented automobile interests in certain sections of the country to act on the committee. To these lawyers Mr. Gorham will submit his bill, asking for suggestions or changes, and he expects to have it ready within two or three months. According to local conditions, it may be necessary to make some alterations in the bill for different States, but the main principles will remain the same. Particular attention will be paid to the law licensing machines and the regulations governing tourists while passing from one State to another.

"It ought to be as easy for an automobilist to travel from State to State, without submitting to special legislation, as it is for the man who drives a horse," added Mr. Gorham. "A uniform act in this respect should prevail throughout the country, so that when a man has paid his fee in his residential State and exhibits his number he need not be forced to secure additional numbers or pay extra fees in other States."

Mr. Gorham hopes that his proposed bill may be introduced into the Legislatures of some of the Western States before the close of the year. A great deal of the necessary work will be done through the State automobile associations, and plans are being made to organize new bodies of this character. Mr. Gorham, being well acquainted with the hostile conditions that prevail in some Western sections against automobilists, frankly admits that he expects opposition, and he believes that a good deal of it will be directed by the farming element against the good roads movement.

"No sport or industry in the country is so menaced by hostile legislation as that pertaining to automobiles," said Mr. Gorham. "The individual autoist is powerless to accomplish anything. Practical results must be sought along lines which are essential to the enjoyment of the sport—that is, by organization. As long as people live there will undoubtedly be anti-automobilists. It is the same spirit that encourages an individual to get the better of the railroad, if he can. New trolley lines, even when projected in districts where they are bound to benefit the inhabitants, always meet with opposition, and automobilists must expect the same treatment. But the motor users are now strong enough in many localities to stand up for their rights, and they are sure of getting a semblance of a hearing. This does not imply that they will get what they ask for, but it is the only way to secure tangible results in the near future.

"This principle should be carried out now in the agitation for good roads. In many of the farming districts of the West there is strong opposition against better roads. The farmers, perhaps, have seen one or two bad cases of reckless driving by some wild tourist scouring through the country, perhaps killing a few chickens or frightening the old nag driven by the farmer's wife on her way to the village to sell a pail of butter or a basket of eggs. This is enough, the farmers in that section are 'agin' automobiles from that time on. In fact, they have actually brought up the argument that they know they have bad roads, but if they were better automobiles would invade their precincts, and between the two they prefer to stick to poor roads.

"Well, this is not a state of affairs or of mind that is going to benefit the farmer or the country. Automobilists should be willing to show that while they will be benefited by good roads the farmer will really reap a greater advantage in securing better opportunities for carrying his goods to market, the added value to his land and the encouragement of travel which will bring more money to his district. Railroads will also be benefited, as freight can be more easily handled and larger shipments made from a distance. The demand for improved roads is growing all the time, and automobilists can hasten the work by proper and reasonable agitation."

Brown Students Control Athletics.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., March 10.—Brown University athletics, beginning with the commencement of the next academic year in September, will be controlled by the students subject to Faculty approval, as the result of the acceptance by the undergraduate body to-day of the rules prescribed by the Faculty in a communication made to the students on Thursday. A committee consisting of students from the several classes will be appointed to formulate rules of organization, eligibility, and play to go into effect in September. An attempt to make Summer baseball playing permissible under the rules will probably be the chief result of their deliberations. The Faculty rules to be observed are that no freshmen or graduates participate in intercollegiate athletic contests, the appointment of an athletic supervisor and good scholarship standing.

AUTO BUSINESS BOOMING.

Value and Output of Cars Increasing—Americans Buying Better Machines.

Some remarkable figures illustrating the growth and value of the automobile industry have recently been compiled by the Association of Licensed Automobile Manufacturers. The statement was sworn to in the United States Circuit Court, where the testimony is now being taken in the suit for infringement of the Selden patent. The association has been fighting for several years automobile manufacturers who refuse to pay royalty for the use of the gasoline engine principles embodied in the Selden patent, and it is expected that a decision will be reached within a short time.

President M. J. Budlong of the Licensed Association, in showing the volume of business done by manufacturers who are operating under the patent, stated that during the three years from Jan. 1, 1903, to Jan. 1, 1906, the total number of vehicles manufactured or imported under the license in the United States was 41,696. Their valuation was $63,141,437, and the royalties paid amounted to $814,183.

The increase of production in 1904 over 1903 amounted to 30 per cent. in the number of vehicles, and the increase in the value of the gross sales was 58 per cent. The increase of 1905 over 1904, in the number of vehicles, was 32.5 per cent., while the increase in the value of the product sold rose to 66.2 per cent. The total business in 1905, according to the testimony, amounted to 17,840 vehicles, having a valuation of $31,814,758.99.

These figures reveal some averages of peculiar interest. Taking the total number of cars produced by the licensed makers and their selling prices, it was shown that the average selling price for cars of all sorts in 1903 was approximately $1,170. In 1904 the average price was $1,422. In 1905 it was $1,784. For the three years, 1903, 1904, and 1905, the average selling price of domestic cars was $1,429 and of imported cars $6,710.

There are thirty-seven concerns now operating under the Selden patent.

"POLY" WINS CHAMPIONSHIP.

Defeats Boys' High in Rough Game of Basket Ball by 38 to 17.

The "Poly Prep" basket ball five won the championship of the Long Island Interscholastic League by defeating the team of the Boys' High School by the score of 38 to 17, at the Second Signal Corps Armory, on Dean Street, Brooklyn, yesterday. There were about 800 "rooters" from both schools present to cheer their team to victory, and the defeat of the Boys' High was quite a surprise, as they have held the championship for the past three seasons. The spectators also witnessed a fight in the centre of the floor between Goodwin of "Poly" and O'Connell of the high school, and when Referee Lochmuller separated the players he called a double foul.

In the second half several of the players on the Boys' High changed places and went all to pieces. Much rough work was indulged in, especially by Goodwin and O'Connell, and it was in this half that Goodwin threw many of the points from the foul line for "Poly." In all Goodwin scored 24 points for his team. The line-up:

Boys' High, 17.	Position.	"Poly Prep," 38.
Ritschy	Forward	Goodwin
Swallow	Forward	Trecarlin
Moorehead	Centre	Losee
Crosby	Guard	Dingee
O'Connell	Guard	Randall

Goals from field—Crosby, 3; Goodwin, 8; Trecarlin, 4; Ritschy, 1; Moorehead, 1; Losee, 2; Dingee, 1; O'Connell, 1. Goals from fouls—Goodwin, 8; Crosby, 5. Referees—C. Lochmuller and H. B. Morel.

Fordham's Baseball Men Improving.

The Fordham baseball candidates who have been practicing outdoors for the past week have shown a decided improvement in their work. There are seven positions vacant, and the rivalry among the candidates to fill them is very keen. What is troubling the coach most is the development of a pitching staff. At present it consists of Dunbar, Mansfield, Barry, and Cassasa of last year's freshman team; Coyle, a youngster from Pittsburg; Rudolph, from Morris High School; Egan, from St. John's College, Brooklyn, and Hedorff, from a Staten Island high school. The candidates for catcher are Gargan of last year's team, Baker, Hayes, and Stone of last year's freshman team, and Wilkes and McCabe, promising men from the Morris High School.

There is a spirited contest for first base between Hinchliffe of last year's freshman team and McCarthy from the Morris High School. McNeils and Cheise are fighting it out between themselves for second base, while third base is being looked after by Tierney and Kane. Coffey, from the Morris High School, and Daly of last year's freshman team are having a good tussle for shortstop. The outfield is being looked after by Siskind, O'Reilly, Seider, Fay, and Hallahan.

HANDICAP YACHT CLASS THE SEASON'S FEATURE

Prominent Designer Regards It as of Immense Importance.

LOOKS FOR FREAK BOATS

Year Will Test Measurement Rule and Mold Future Development of Sport.

"The coming yachting season will be one of the most interesting that America has seen in years," said a prominent New York designer yesterday. "There has been a revival of building activity all along the line, and the opportunity will be afforded to test the value of the new rating rule thoroughly. I think you will find that there will be a lot of freak boats designed in an effort to beat the rule. The race for the Roosevelt Cup will offer a chance to develop a wide diversity of types that may be studied with profit, and the handicap class starting on Long Island Sound will afford plenty of food for reflection.

"The scheme of handicap racing is not a new one. It has been in use in Scotland for a number of years, with anything but satisfactory results. It was tried in Massachusetts Bay last year with great benefit. The difference between Scotland and America is that there are a lot of professionals seeking to jockey and gain races by not trying to win in all their starts. Continual bickering is the outcome. Here there are sportsmen racing, and this evil would naturally be minimized, while the plan of percentage handicapping further removes the objections to the plan.

"Where a given time is allowed it is easy enough to figure how you stand in a race and jockey. Where a percentage of the first boat's time is accorded it is mighty difficult. Then by allowances not over a given maximum one limits the possible allowance greatly, and by passing a rule ignoring boats which finish behind a reasonable limit of time the matter is further simplified. It strikes me the plans outlined by the new Handicap Race are as near perfect as they can be made, and that the best racing of the season will be seen right in those classes.

"There were over twenty boats enrolled in the class at the organization meeting. Before the season opens there should be forty, and there may be three divisions organized, with a dozen boats in each. If the handicaps can be fixed nearly correctly at the start, the class will be a tremendous success. The only way to handicap is to do so absolutely mathematically. We have records of most of the boats. It is perfectly easy to find out how any two compare over given courses when racing against each other, and by adding together the elapsed time of each in a number of races a true average can be got for various weathers. Then by dividing the smaller into the larger aggregate the correct percentage of allowance can be secured. This must be done with each pair of boats in the class until all are placed with respect to one another. It is very simple then to place them all on a common scale with respect to the fastest boat in the lot.

"As each race is finished these times are added into the tables and new relations figured for the second race, and so on indefinitely, with a changing scale being constantly modified and always approaching closer and closer to the true proportions by the inevitable certainty of the law of average. If honestly applied there can be no question that close and exciting racing will result, and that the winner will vary from week to week in accordance with the skill with which it is handled. All the men going into the class are going in for an opportunity to race, not for an opportunity to win, and I believe the class will be entirely free from jockeying."

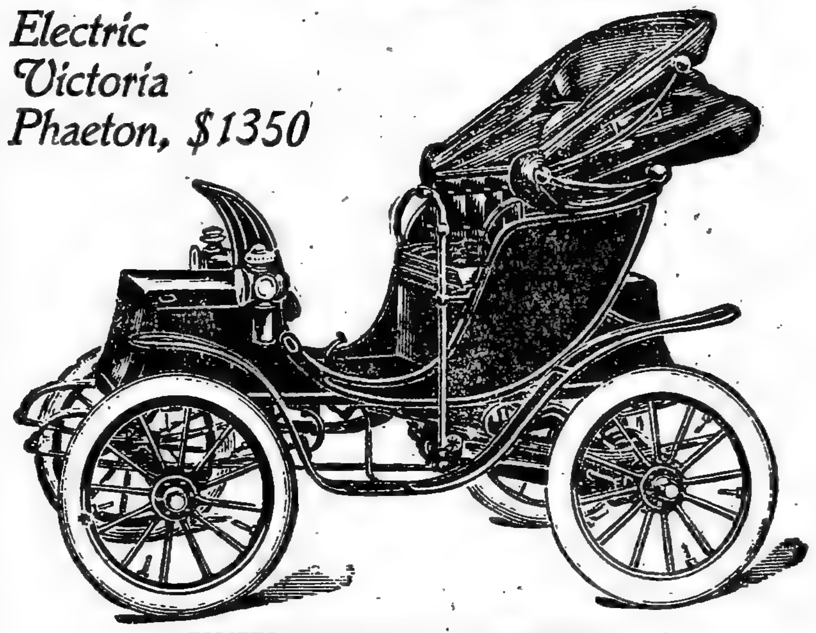
Electric
Victoria
Phaeton, $1350



UNIVERSALLY ADMIRED.

THE COLUMBIA Electric Victoria-Phaeton merits approval for its many admirable features. Chief among these are simplicity of operation; freedom from noise and odors; admirable in design and finish; three essential requirements for a carriage to be used in town, more particularly by ladies desiring a vehicle for calls and shopping. Demonstrations on application.

MARCH 1906

OLYMPIC RUNNERS WON FOR CIVIL DEPARTMENT

Police and Fire Teams Defeated in Eighth Regiment Games.

BACON FAILED TO FINISH

Bonhag and Sullivan Helped Their Team to Victory—Ledyard, First in Bicycle Race, Was Disqualified.

Only three of the half dozen Olympic team athletes who were entered in the annual games of the Eighth Regiment Hospital Corps, which were held in the armory, Park Avenue and Ninety-fourth Street, last night, competed. George V. Bonhag and J. P. Sullivan won the medley relay race for the civil department from the Police and Fire Department teams, but C. J. Bacon met with defeat in the three-quarters of a mile handicap. W. A. Schick, the Harvard sprinter, and other members of the Olympic team, who were advertised to appear, were on the main floor, but did not compete.

The events were generally well contested, and a big crowd watched the sport. In the bicycle race C. W. Ledyard of the Twenty-third Regiment finished first, but was disqualified for cutting the corner of the track.

E. Wittholm, with the liberal handicap of 16 feet, won the opening event, sixty-yard handicap, from a big field. He beat the pistol by about a yard and won by that distance from George E. Hall of the Irish American A. C., who was one foot in front of A. J. Knoder, unattached, both of whom received fifteen feet handicaps. W. L. Batchelder of the Irish American Athletic Club, won the quarter-mile novice run by a few inches after a close race with L. B. Dorland of the Elmwood Athletic Club. The pair had the race to themselves during the entire distance. Herbert D. Green of the Gordon Athletic Association, secured third place, ten yards away.

The Midget relay race was one of the most interesting of the evening. The teams of Public Schools 17 and 40 kept together, alternating in the lead up to the last relay, when the former's last relay by a splendid sprint won on the tape by a few inches.

The absence of Herry L. Hillman, Jr., of the New York Athletic Club, and one of the Olympic Games athletes, robbed the 300-yard handicap of its interest. Owing to the big entry list only the winners of heats were permitted to start in the final. C. J. Bacon of the Irish-Americans, one of the Marathon runners in the Olympic games, won his heat from scratch, but quit in the final heat after running last. The event was won by H. G. Wilson of the St. George Athletic Club, with 20 yards handicap. W. Horner of St. Bartholomew Athletic Club was second, with 14 yards start, and R. Koch of Xavier Athletic Club finished third from the 16-yard mark.

The medley relay race was a handicap affair confined to the teams of the Police, Fire, and civil departments of the City of New York. The police team received a handicap of half a lap, while the Fire Department quartet was in receipt of three-quarters of a lap. The first men ran half a mile, the second 220 yards, the third 440 yards, and the fourth one mile. The civil department team, which included G. V. Bonhag and J. P. Sullivan of the Olympic team, cut down the handicap when the fourth lap was started, and all three men started on the final mile together. Bonhag soon drew ahead of the other pair and, running easily, won by nearly half a lap. Timothy O'Connor and Edward Carrette, for the Fire and Police respectively, engaged in a desperate struggle for second place, O'Connor securing the verdict by two feet.

Fifty-six athletes started in the three-quarters of a mile handicap, which made it an almost impossible undertaking for the men on the back marks to get through the bunch. Before going half the distance fully half of the competitors dropped out, while the limit men had no difficulty in keeping to the front. F. Lafforgue won easily from R. P. Tracy. The former received fifty-six yards and the latter sixty-five. A. L. Herzer, with sixty yards, was third. Summary:

Harvard Beats Yale at Basket Ball.

NEW HAVEN, March 10.—Harvard defeated Yale to-night in basket ball in the Yale gymnasium by a score of 23 to 17. The game, which closed the season for both teams, was fast from start to finish, and one of the roughest played here this season. None of the players was hurt, however. At the end of the first half the score was 9 to 7 in favor of Harvard, and, beginning with the second half, the Cambridge players jumped ahead rapidly.

SPEEDY HAND TENNIS.

Olsen, Scratch Player, Defeated Kroehle in New York A. C. Tourney.

Three hotly contested matches were decided in the continuation of handicap hand tennis singles tournament yesterday at the New York Athletic Club. The best was that in which F. Olsen, the scratch player, defeated F. Kroehle, handicapped at 13 aces, and moved up to the third round. Both of the other competitions were in the first round. Guy L. Brigg, (8 aces,) winning over W. A. Brown, (8 aces,) and J. Hinds, (8 aces,) defeating G. B. Gibbons, (11 aces.) All of the matches were decided in straight sets.

From the manner in which Kroehle had been playing in the first round of the singles and also in the doubles, in which he came through to the finals, it was thought that he would easily win over Olsen, playing from scratch. But Olsen had taken the measure of his opponent, and from the first service hand he came up to the net and stroked the ball so as to give it terrific pace as it traveled through Kroehle's court. Summary:

Handicap Singles.—First Round—Guy L. Brigg (8 aces) defeated W. A. Brown, (8 aces,) 25—23, 25-15; J. Hinds (8 aces) defeated G. B. Gibbons, (11 aces,) 25—20, 25—19.

Second Round—F. Olsen (scratch) defeated F. Kroehle, (13 aces,) 25—23, 25—20.

MAYOR TO PRESIDE AT MEET.

Free Athletic Games for Schoolboys at Madison Square Garden.

Several of the prominent officials of the city have indorsed the plan of free athletic games which the Public Schools Athletic League will undertake next Saturday in Madison Square Garden. There will be no entrance fee required from contestants, and admission to spectators will be free. The plan has received the support of Mayor McClellan, who has consented to act as Honorary President of the games; of Controller Metz and Patrick F. McGowan, President of the Board Aldermen. Egerton L. Winthrop, Jr., President of the Board of Education, and City Superintendent of Schools William H. Maxwell have also signified their interest by consenting to serve as Directors.

Commenting upon the experimental plan of the big meeting Controller Metz said: "The League's experiment of holding free games for the people without entry fees or price of admission is to my mind one of the most important advances in athletics in recent years. I am a thorough believer in wisely controlled athletics. And by wisely controlled sports I mean such a system as will lead people to pay attention to bodily development, and yet keep them from neglecting serious duties.

"Athletics are of value only when, by giving the participant a better physique, they make him a better worker in more serious lines of business, and consequently of greater economic value to his city. The child, aside from sentimental value, is actually worth dollars and cents as a citizen, and he is worth more if he is well and strong than if he is sick and weak.

"Now the League strives to build up the physique of the children and young men in our schools, but at the same time it insists that, before they can compete, they shall do their school work well and be amenable to school discipline. In this way the League encourages both physical well being and attention to serious duty—two factors important to the value of the citizen."

"Big Nine" Acts on Football.

CHICAGO, March 10.—The recommendations that have been before the Intercollegiate Conference Committee, composed of representatives of the "Big Nine" universities of the Middle West, for the past two days with respect to football were finally passed to-day, subject to the individual ratification of the various institutions within two weeks. If any measure fails of ratification by a single university a mail vote is to be taken at once, and a two-thirds vote favoring will enforce its adoption. The question of semi-professional baseball was taken up, but laid on the table until the next meeting. The principal recommendations passed were to abolish professional coachers after the expiration of present contracts and to do away with the training table.

SHOOTING IN BLIZZARD AT BAY RIDGE TRAPS

Wind and Snow No Handicap to Crescent A. C. Marksmen.

FRANK STEPHENSON LEADER

Has a Total of 315 Targets in Championship Event, to 312 for H. M. Brigham.

All kinds of weather has prevailed during the trapshooting season of the Crescent Athletic Club at Bad Ridge, but with one accord the palm was given to yesterday. The wind from the west blew with terrific force, and as a climax to the day's sport a veritable blizzard swooped down on the grounds, making the sight of the targets an almost impossibility. The squad subjected to the full force of the brief storm was composed of Theodore W. Stake, C. G. Rasmus, Henry Werleman, A. E. Hendrickson, and Dr. H. L. O'Brien. Rasmus shot bareheaded, and, with Werleman finished second to Stake.

The third leg in the championship series of 500 targets placed Frank B. Stephenson in the lead with a total of 315 out of a possible 75. Henry M. Brigham is only three targets behind. The next highest man of the eight starters is A. G. Southworth, with a total of 278, one bird ahead of Henry Steyn. F. T. Bedford, Jr., carried off the day's honors for the March Cup, and with George Stephenson led for the team trophy. The scores:

AT TRAVERS ISLAND TRAPS.

Big Squad of Shooters Contest in a Gale and Snow Squalls.

Fourteen enthusiastic trap shooters of the New York Athletic Club braved the unfavorable weather at Travers Island yesterday and did some good shooting under the conditions. The wind blew with the force of a gale throughout the afternoon, and frequent snow squalls prevailed. All in all it was a day entirely unsuitable for good marksmanship, still the contestants enjoyed the sport and put up fairly good scores. Dr. Hamlen was the high gun for the March Cup, while he also annexed a trophy shoot. J. S. Dickenson also won two events, and the winners of other prizes were Dr. De Wolfe, I. W. Hibbard, and Capt. Borland. The scores:

Hoppe Again Defeats Peterson.

Willie Hoppe, the world's champion, and C. T. Peterson concluded their series of balk-line billiard games yesterday, Hoppe winning both games with consummate ease. The champion played 18.1 against Peterson's 18.2. In the afternoon the pair played a 400-point match, Hoppe winning by the score of 400 to 119. The champion ran out his string in eighteen innings, with an average of 22 4-18. His best run was 105, unfinished. Peterson was badly off his game, and averaged but 6 11-18, with a high run of 43. The final game was 500 points, Hoppe running out, with his opponent's score at 217. The winner made an average of 15 20-30, and a high run of 71. Peterson's average was 12 11-30, with 55 as his best effort.

Would Not Listen to Jockey Carter.

NEW ORLEANS, La., March 10.—The American Turf Association convened here to-day. The meeting was an executive one, and nothing was made public outside of the fact that Jockey Carter, who was ruled off the turf for life for pulling H. M. P., was not permitted to appear before the Board of Appeals, his application for reinstatement being refused.

N. Y. A. C. FENCERS WIN.

Junior Team Captures Saltus Medals—Five Clubs in Competition.

Five teams of junior fencers met last night in the rooms of the Fencers Club in the Windsor Arcade, Fifth Avenue, for the Saltus medals. The medals are fenced for annually in an invitation contest. The New York Athletic Club team won the event and each member of the winning team received a medal. The victors met the Fencers Club team in the final round and won by 5 bouts to 2. The five teams entered were:

New York Athletic Club—Dr. S. McCullagh, Dr. L. M. Hubby, and J. K. Bainbridge.

New York Turn Verein—Thomas J. Donohue, Albert Strauss, and John Richter.

Columbia University—F. J. Byrne, T. N. Baychle, and C. E. Dwyer.

French Branch Y. M. C. A.—D. Beraud, R. Tilmont, and E. D. Stevens.

Fencers Club—H. St. Gaudens, L. W. Curran, and C. Gould.

The New York Turn Verein and the French Young Men's Christian Association team had the closest team competition of the night. They were the first to meet in the opening round, and it was not long before the French swordsmen showed that they knew something about fencing. Tilmont was their best man. He was beaten by Strauss, but defeated the other two Turn Verein contestants, Donohue and Richter. The bouts were four all when the last bout between Stevens of the Y. M. C. A. and Donohue was called. Stevens showed the better mastery of the foil and won the decision, which placed his team in the second round. In that round the Frenchmen met the Fencers' Club team, which had drawn a bye in the first round. The former victors found sturdier opponents, and Tilmont was the only member of the Y. M. C. A. to score for his side.

The Columbia representatives made a sorry showing against their New York Athletic Club opponents in the first round. Bauchle was the only collegian to win, and he got but one bout, beating Hubby. The New York Athletic Club won the round handily by 5 to 1.

The summary:

First Round—New York Turn Verein vs. French Branch Y. M. C. A.—Strauss, Turn Verein, defeated Tilmont, Y. M. C. A.; Beraud, Y. M. C. A., defeated Donohue, Turn Verein; Stevens, Y. M. C. A., defeated Richter, Turn Verein; Strauss, Turn Verein, defeated Beraud, Y. M. C. A.; Tilmont, Y. M. C. A., defeated Donohue, Turn Verein; Richter, Turn Verein, defeated Beraud, Y. M. C. A.; Strauss, Turn Verein, defeated Stevens, Y. M. C. A.; Tilmont, Y. M. C. A., defeated Richter, Turn Verein; Stevens, Y. M. C. A., defeated Donohue, Turn Verein. Total—French Branch Y. M. C. A., 5; N. Y. Turn Verein, 4.

New York Athletic Club vs. Columbia.—McCullagh, N. Y. A. C., defeated Byrne, Columbia; Bauchle, Columbia, defeated Hubby, N. Y. A. C.; Bainbridge, N. Y. A. C., defeated Dwyer, Columbia; McCullagh, N. Y. A. C., defeated Bauchle, Columbia; Hubby, N. Y. A. C., defeated Dwyer, Columbia; Bainbridge, N. Y. A. C., defeated Byrne, Columbia. Total—New York Athletic Club, 5; Columbia, 1.

Fencers' Club team drew a bye.

Second Round.—Fencers' Club vs. French Branch, Y. M. C. A.—Gould, Fencers' Club, defeated Beraud, Y. M. C. A.; Tilmont, Y. M. C. A., defeated Curran, Fencers' Club; St. Gaudens, Fencers' Club, defeated Stevens, Y. M. C. A. Tilmont, Y. M. C. A., defeated Gould, Fencers' Club; St. Gaudens, Fencers' Club, defeated Beraud, Y. M. C. A.; Curran, Fencers' Club, defeated Stevens, Y. M. C. A.; Tilmont, Y. M. C. A., defeated St. Gaudens, Fencers' Club; Curran, Fencers' Club, defeated Beraud, Y. M. C. A. Total—Fencers' Club, 5; French Branch, Y. M. C. A., 3.

New York Athletic Club drew a bye.

Final Round.—Fencers' Club vs. New York Athletic Club—McCullagh, New York A. C., defeated Gould, Fencers' Club; Hubby, New York A. C., defeated Curran, Fencers' Club; Bainbridge, New York A. C., defeated St. Gaudens, Fencers' Club; Curran, Fencers' Club, defeated McCullagh, New York A. C.; Bainbridge, New York A. C., defeated Gould, Fencers' Club; St. Gaudens, Fencers' Club, defeated Hubby, New York A. C.; Bainbridge, New York A. C., defeated Curran, Fencers' Club. Total—New York A. C., 5; Fencers' Club, 2.

The judges and timers were W. Scott O'Connor, C. C. Curran, J. Albert Hawkins, Marshall Kernochan, John Allaire, and Charles E. Goodhue.

COLUMBIA FENCERS BEATEN.

Cornell Foilsmen Win All But One of the Bouts.

Special to The New York Times.

ITHACA, N. Y., March 10.—The Cornell fencing team decisively defeated Columbia here to-night by the score of 5 to 1. Capt. Kehrlein of Columbia failed to appear on time, and Miller and Amend alternated in taking his place. The meet was cut short after six bouts because the Columbia men had already each fought three times. In the first three contests the Ithacans had little difficulty in winning out, Capt. Hecheimer particularly doing brilliant work.

The bout between Howard of Cornell and Miller of Columbia was the closest contest of the evening, and the Columbia fencer surprised the spectators by finally defeating his opponent. Miller did the best work for Columbia, but Capt. Hecheimer of Cornell was easily the star of the evening, his work being the best seen in Ithaca this year. Delcasse made his first appearance at Ithaca on the home team. Summary:

First Round.—Hecheimer, Cornell, defeated Amend, Columbia; Hecheimer, Cornell, defeated Miller, Columbia; Howard, Cornell, defeated Amend, Columbia.

Second Round.—Miller, Columbia, defeated Howard, Cornell; Delcasse, Cornell, defeated Amend; Columbia, Hecheimer, Cornell, defeated Miller, Columbia.

Foot Is Pinehurst Golf Champion.

Special to The New York Times.

PINEHURST, N. C., March 10.—The third annual club championship tournament ended to-day with close matches in the final rounds of both divisions. J. D. Foot of the Apawamis Golf Club, Rye, N. Y., won the championship trophy, beating C. L. Becker of Woodland by 1 up. John M. Ward of Montclair, N. J., won the Consolation Cup, defeating L. D. Pierce of Woodland by 1 up.

A special match for women has been arranged for Monday, with prizes for the best gross and best net scores.

The summary of to-day's match play rounds is:

Championship.—Semi-final Round—J. D. Foot, Apawamis, beat L. E. Wardwell, Camden, Me., 2 up and 1 to play; C. L. Becker, Woodland, beat William C. Freeman, Montclair, 4 up and 2 to play.

Final Round.—Foot beat Becker 1 up.

Consolation.—Semi-final Round—John M. Ward, Montclair, beat R. R. Perkins, New York, 5 up and 4 to play; L. D. Pierce, Woodland, beat H. C. Fownes, Oakmont, 1 up.

Final Round.—Ward beat Pierce, 1 up.

Downs Won from Daly at Pool.

W. Downs (100) defeated P. Daly (85) last night in the amateur pool tournament at the Broadway Billiard Academy by the score of 100 to 68. Downs's high run was 16, with 2 scratches, and Daly's best single contribution was 12, with 3 scratches. On Monday C. Jackson (90) will meet J. Bartels (90.)

CANADIANS TOO FAST FOR ST. NICHOLAS TEAM

Montreal Hockey Players Beat Local Men 9 to 4.

BOWIE SCORED SEVEN GOALS

Rough Play at Times, but the Game Was a Fine Exhibition of Team Work.

Fast skating and close following of the puck resulted in a victory for the Victoria Hockey Club of Montreal last night against a picked team of the St. Nichoals Skating Club by a score of 9 goals to 4 at the St. Nicholas Rink. There were many periods of rough play, but on the whole it was a fine exhibition of team work, with Bowie, the Canadian, outshining all of the other players.

It was the only international hockey match of the season's schedule. The Victorias, the team that has played such a remarkable game in the Eastern Canadian championship series this year, showed superiority as soon as they came out on the ice. From the face-off they developed exceptionally clever play. It was somewhat novel in many of its aspects, and exhibited styles of attack and defensive work favored by the Dominion experts. While the local tea mhas been designated as the "young" team in the Amateur League championship, they furnished the Canadians with a surprising amount of brisk opposition in following the puck.

St. Nicholas scored the first goal within thirty seconds of the face-off. Eveleigh of Victoria and K. Gordon of St. Nicholas put their sticks to the puck in the centre. The Canadian got the rubber disk for a moment, but Gordon turned with a spin on his skates and whisked it away, carrying it up the ice and shooting it into the goal prettily, unaided. Then the team play and even balance of the Victoria skaters began to show. They had a little difficulty in getting started, as the St. Nicholas men checked them forcibly at every attempt to get the puck close to the goal netting. Bowie soon scored twice in rapid succession, as he received the puck on a side pass from Church. The latter also scored on a long carry, followed by Eveleigh, so that the points tallied 4 for Victoria to 1 for St. Nicholas.

This caused the Americans to buckle down to some rapid work, which resulted in K. Gordon shooting a goal from a foul face-off twenty feet to the side of the net. Both teams were skating at top speed, the Americans checking the Canadians, while the latter made some neat trip-ups with their sticks. Bowie, however, seldom was far away from the puck and despite the attention he received from Wagstaff and Leake, he sent the rubber skimming into the nets twice more before the half ended. K. Gordon also scored on a nicely played pass from Carruthers, the score standing Victoria 6, St. Nicholas 3, when the gong sounded.

Rougher and faster play marked the beginning of the second half. Up and down the ice traveled the puck, while several of the skaters took nasty falls and landed against the board side of the rink with resounding thuds. But Bowie kept himself in the thick of the fray and after five minutes of hot work he again scored for his side. Almost immediately afterward he picked the puck from out of a scrimmage before the American's goal and sent it home.

There was desperate stick work after this and it brought out the best goal of the match. The puck went to Souther in the centre of the ice and by a long driving life he sent it straight to the goal. The line-up:

Victoria, 9.	Position.	St. Nicholas, 4.
Fry	Goal	Heywood
Bellingham	Point	Carruthers
Davidson	Cover point	D. Gordon
Eveleigh	Forward	Wagstaff
Bowie	Forward	K. Gordon
Gilbert	Forward	Leake
Church	Forward	Souther

Goals—Bowie, (7,) Church, Eveleigh, K. Gordon, (3,) Souther. Referee—William Dobby, Crescent Athletic Club. Umpire—Frank Ellison, Hockey Club of New York. Time of halves—Twenty minutes.

MURDER MAY BE CHARGE AGAINST NEGRO SPRIGGS

White Girls Beaten to Death in Resort, Jerome Hears.

BURIED IN HASTE AT NIGHT

A Woman Missionary Caused Descent on Tenderloin Dive—Found Victim in the Street.

It came out yesterday that District Attorney Jerome was led to undertake the investigation which resulted in Friday night's raid in the Tenderloin and the previous indictment of the negro, Robert Spriggs, by the discovery of a woman missionary made as long ago as last November, of the pitiable plight of the captives in his resorts.

Already, so the attachés of the District Attorney's office say, more horrors have been discovered in the daily doings of Spriggs and his accomplices than have come out in most anti-vice crusades. There is even a probability that murder may be added to the charges piling up against the negro and his associate, Sally Bennett, who was caught in the raid near the Tenderloin Station. Both prisoners are now in the Tombs under $2,000 bail each, and if any attempt be made to furnish that bail the District Attorney will insist on his right to use forty-eight hours to examine the submitted security.

More arrests will follow these, but they will only serve to bring into the net some subordinates, mere tools of the two already gathered in. The investigation is being directed by Assistant District Attorney Garvan, Chief Clerk Henneberry, and Deputy Assistant Murphy. Their labors are far from finished. The most serious group of facts uncovered by the preliminary investigation has to be verified and corroborated. These facts are:

About two years ago two young girls disappeared from one of the houses that have been the object of the District Attorney's investigation. Every precaution was taken to hide their fate from the other inmates. Yet the District Attorney has learned that the two women died the same night and that they were buried together twenty-four hours later. According to the story told the District Attorney, they were beaten to death because they refused to endure any longer the life imposed on them.

Burned in Negro Cemetery.

False death certificates were issued for both of them by a negro physician. A negro undertaker took their bodies out of the house in the dark of the night and carted them to a negro cemetery, where they were put into a common grave.

Those women were white and still young. They came from decent families, and were lured to the house where they met their death by promise of employment. To this day their families are ignorant of what became of them.

If some doubt attaches to the fate of those two girls there is none left as to the truth of the story disclosed through the woman missionary who started the District Attorney's investigation. Long after midnight on a bad night about the middle of last November this woman missionary was passing along West Thirty-first Street. Near Broadway she stumbled over the prostrate body of a young woman on the sidewalk. This woman was scantily dressed in spite of the chilliness of the night air. She was moaning and only partly conscious. This missionary saw quickly to what class the woman belonged, and saw also that she was in a far advanced stage of consumption. She called a cab and drove the sufferer to Bellevue Hospital.

A few days later the sick woman was able to tell her story. This story was laid before District Attorney Jerome. Men were sent out at once to investigate the facts told by the patient, and they have been in part at least, corroborated.

Some of the corroboration is furnished by the woman's own sister. The house in front of which she was found half conscious that November night was kept by Sally Bennett, now in custody. And while the consumptive was lying on the wet sidewalk outside, her sister was inside begging her prison keepers on her knees for permission to assist her. She was driven back with blows of a stick. The sister had been thrown out to die.

Saw Her Sister Dragged In.

The consumptive is still alive and hopes to go on the stand. The sister has been saved and will also testify against Spriggs and the Bennett woman. It has come out further that they did not enter the house together. When one of them had been a captive for months she saw her sister dragged one night into the house in a comatose state, induced by drugs served in wine. Her recognition of the victim, she has told the District Attorney, only called forth a joke.

It was said yesterday by the investigators that Spriggs had been engaged in this traffic eleven years, succeeding his father in it after it had been established more than thirty-five years. Till quite recently he has been free from police interference. He was equally well known in the Tenderloin and the Minetta Lane district. It has been definitely learned by the District Attorney that from the man's Cornelia Street resorts the police gathered a nightly toll of $3.

Since the District Attorney began his investigation several raids have been made by the police on the resorts maintained by Spriggs as well as on the Bennett woman's place. In every case but one the evidence produced next morning in court by the raiders was found insufficient by the Magistrates, and the prisoners were turned out.

The exceptional case was the raiding of the Bennett woman's place in West Thirty-first Street on the night of Nov. 20. This was within a day or two of the exposure of the character of that house to the District Attorney.

All but One Were White.

Of seven prisoners taken in that raid, all were women, and all were white but the Bennett woman herself. She was released, and so were four other prisoners. Two were sent to the workhouse, where they were later approached by the District Attorney's men, and from them important evidence was obtained. The Bennett woman opened new resorts, first in West Thirty-second Street, and on Feb. 12 in West Thirtieth Street, where she was found by the District Attorney's raiders on Friday night.

One of the women whose evidence Mr. Jerome has secured had been a prisoner in one house in Cornelia Street nearly four years. She was lured there on her arrival here from Connecticut in search of employment. She left the house three times in those years, each time in custody of a negro. When she regained her liberty at last she was so ignorant of the city that she could not find her way to Fourteenth Street to buy new clothes. When she recovered her freedom by being made a prisoner by the police, she had on the same dress she wore when she was captured by Spriggs's agents four years earlier. In all the time intervening she had received only $4.

It has been learned that only one woman ever got out of Spriggs's Cornelia Street resort without the interference of the police in the eleven years of his proprietorship. She made her way into the basement one morning when everybody else was asleep, broke open a door with an icepick and succeeded in reaching the street. She had on a single article of clothing. She hid in a saloon on the corner unable to go further for lack of clothing. No food was offered to her, nor assistance of any other kind. Toward nightfall a messenger arrived from Spriggs with this message:

"Stop making a fuss. If you come back, I'll give you clothing and some money and send you about your business."

The woman went back. Instead of money and clothing she received blows that nearly ended her life. Four teeth were knocked out and she was kept in the house still.

This woman was a widow with an eight-year-old child to support. She and the child were living with her mother in a Jersey town till she answered an advertisement in a New York paper, offering lucrative employment. The address mentioned conveyed no warning, and she got into the Spriggs prison and was kept there. Her story will be told on the stand when the cases against Spriggs come to trial.

Spriggs himself has been living in Bayonne with a white wife. Whenever storm clouds gathered on this side, he escaped across the North River. His chief aide was the Bennett woman. They are said to have been running six or eight other resorts through managers, all negroes. In capturing victims they frequently employed white women. Drugs and decoy advertisements did the rest. Exchanges of captives, the investigators from the District Attorney's office say, were made with houses in the West and South. Once twenty-five white girls were sent to a colored "club" in Philadelphia.

New stories of the iniquities of the gang are now coming in daily, started by the news of the crusade begun by the District Attorney.

PRINCETON MUSICAL COMEDY.

The Triangle Club to Produce "Tabasco Land" at the Waldorf.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, March 10.—During the period between athletic seasons at Princeton University the interest of the undergraduates is centred in a club which has played an important part in the extra curriculum work of the students for the past twenty years. This is known as the Triangle Club, the dramatic organization which each year produces a musical comedy, for which both the words and music are written by college men. The entire cast, chorus, and orchestra are drawn from the student body, and the club has undergraduate stage and business management.

The organization is at present putting the finishing touches on a play called "Tabasco Land." It will be seen for the first time in New York on April 7, when there will be a matinée and an evening performance in the large ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel. A list of dates has been made, including a performance in Philadelphia in the early part of May, while the players are also scheduled to visit St. Louis, Indianapolis, Baltimore, Washington, Louisville, and several smaller cities.

Kenneth S. Clark, 1905, who conducts the orchestra, is responsible for most of the music, but three of the songs were written by H. L. Dillon, 1907, Captain of the football team, and others by R. C. Veit, 1906. The book was written by J. F. McPherson, 1906, of Springfield, Ill., and H. D. Fish, 1906, of Hempstead, N. Y. It deals with the adventures of an American financier who is attempting to develop the infant industries of Tabasco, an imaginary country.

OCEAN TRAVELERS.

Col. Colin Campbell and His Bride Return—Two Liners Late.

Only two of the transatlantic liners due in New York yesterday, the Cunarder Lucania from Liverpool, and the French liner La Lorraine from Havre, got in. The Philadelphia of the American line and the Atlantic Transport liner Minnetonka, are expected to-day.

Some of the arrivals on the Lucania were:

Col. Colin Campbell of the British Army and Mrs. Campbell, who was Miss Leiter of Washington; Lord Ernest Hamilton, Lieut. T. C. Keeper of the Royal Engineers, Col. W. H. Birkbeck, C. N. Armstrong, Angus and A. W. Cameron, Gerard A. Clay, Dr. Alfred R. L. Dohme, James Domville, Mr. and Mrs. Edmund G. Edwards, B. Leslie Emslie, Mr. and Mrs. J. Sawtelle Ford, T. O. Jay, E. A. Langmuir, G. R. Mackenzie, James Munro, M. P. Rae, Charles M. Ramsay, Edward B. Robinson, Ernest Saunders, Thomas Spencer, G. J. Whelan, and Mr. and Mrs. George Gifford.

Among those who came over in the Lorraine were:

Clarence Phelps Dodge, Ralph Blumenthal, Mrs. A. R. S. Anderson, Miss Margaret Christie, F. Le Moyne Drew, H. N. Garland, F. C. Georges, Dr. I. H. Hepburn, Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Marchesseault, W. A. Parsons, D. W. Pope, Frank H. Partridge, W. J. Spain, Charles Tiberghien, Mrs. C. F. Thompson, W. L. Skyes, Owen Hutchins, and F. N. Watrice.

Biggest Bronze Church Tablet.

The largest bronze tablet ever made for an American church is in the windows of the Gorham Company, at Fifth Avenue and Thirty-sixth Street. It is the work of J. Massey Rhind, the sculptor, and is to be presented to St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, Wilkesbarre, Penn., by Elisha Hancock, in memory of his wife. It will be on exhibition for a week.

ART COLLECTIONS AT SALE.

Auction of Three Private Picture Galleries Mostly Modern.

On Thursday and Friday evenings at 8:30 the American Art Association will sell off three private collections of paintings at their galleries, 6 East Twenty-third Street. The pictures are now on exhibition there.

They belong to the estates of Eliza M. Curtis and J. W. Brown, and include pictures belonging to Mrs. Lee W. Haggin. While the great majority are modern, only a few being attributed to old masters, one sees immediately that none of the collectors represented have bought recently. Painters whose works were once popular, like Kuwasseg, Verscuur, Seignac, Meyer von Bremen, Theodore Frère, and Knau recall other days and other fashions in picture collecting. Even the Americans still living are represented by early work. The able picture by Eastman Johnson, "A Drink with the Squire," is dated 1880. It is an interior with characteristic figures, among which is the old man who was for so many years Mr. Johnson's model. Elihu Vedder, Frederick A. Bridgman, William Hart, C. C. Griswold, Samuel Colman, Seymour J. Guy, L. C. Tiffany, John G. Brown, and Abbott H. Thayer, all Academicians, appear with canvases twenty or thirty years old. To that period, or an earlier, belong paintings by Henry Bacon, A. H. Wyant, George Inness—"The Delaware Water Gap," a large, very empty, and tiresome picture, is dated 1857—Albert Bierstadt, John Casilear, M. H. F. de Haas, W. Allan Gay, Wordsworth Thompson, and Edwin L. Weeks. But among these there are some gems. Such are the "Water Gate, Malta," by Louis C. Tiffany, original in conception and delightful in tone, the "Gypsy Camp by the Sea" of Wordsworth Thompson, dated 1880, and "Glowing Sunset," by George Inness, dated 1885. Samuel Colman's "San Giorgio, Venice," dated as early as 1879, shows his fine color sense and large execution. There are two Wyants—"Winding Path" and "Sunset"—which are fairly good.

Among the foreign pictures a scene from British history by Paul Delaroche is at least curious, representing Charles Edward the Pretender resting in a cave attended by Highlanders. A beautiful cattle piece, fine in composition and masterly in brushwork, is by Otto de Thoren, a Hollander who died in 1889, a worthy confrère of van Marcke. Two Oriental scenes by Frère should be explained—"Persian Encampment Near Mecca" and "Mosque of the Sultan Acan at Cairo." A little landscape all Corot save the finer trick of leaves and sky is signed Max Heyl.

The "Child's Head," by Ludwig Knaus, is naive and carefully painted. "To-morrow's Banquet," by Baron Leys and D. de Noter, is a well-painted interior suggesting a study of Pieter de Hooghe. Erskine Nicoll's "Lesson in Arithmetic" shows the Scottish continuer of David Wilkie not at his best, but still interesting despite a tendency to caricature.

The visit of Vasili Verestchagin to America in 1891 and the exhibition of his pictures in these galleries are recalled by four pictures which were in that sale. "The Kremlin at Moscow" in snowy weather is a pleasing bit; but "Sunset in India" is one of the rare works by the famous traveler and painter which reaches the level of fine art. It is a glimpse of snowy peaks in the Himalayas over a foreground of mist, the peaks turned pale rose by the setting sun—a really beautiful work.

Thursday's sale will bring to the hammer a "Girl Knitting," by the late A. G. A. Edelfelt, a typical Finnish peasant child, with a Finnish background of birch trees; good still-life pieces by G. L. Steenks, "The Story Book," by Seignac; "After the Ball"; figure by Henri Lerolle, "The Turkey Girl," by Walter Satterlee, A. N. A., and "Fisherman's Family," by Clifford P. Grayson of Philadelphia, all pictures worth noting. Friday's sale will bring "Baby's Bath," by Eugen Klimsch; "Young Girl's Head," by Gabriel Max; "The Harrow," by Anton Mauve; "Hay Maker," by Julien Dupré; "The Convalescent," by Carrière Belleuse; "The Prior's Return," a jovial scene, by Delort; "Gypsies of Grenada," by Adrien Moreau, and "Afternoon in Paris," outdoor group, by James Tissot. This is an omnibus sale, in which some very nice little pictures may be secured.

ART TARIFF DISPUTE ENDED.

Appraisers Raise Invoice of Two Old Paintings 50 Per Cent.

The Board of United States General Appraisers, in a decision by Judge Waite, has settled the controversy between the Government and Alexander Hollander & Co., regarding the dutiable value of two paintings, the work of Pater, a French artist of the eighteenth century.

After examining many art dealers, the board advances the invoice price of the paintings from 30,000f. to 45,000f., on which the works will pay duty. Counsel for the importers said that the Treasury Department sought to advance the values of the works 100 per cent.

NOT MARQUIS OF ANGLESEY.

Stanley Cary Sails, Saying He Wasn't Attentive to a Singer.

Stanley Cary, the young man who in Washington a few days ago was mistaken for the Marquis of Anglesey, and who it was said was paying attentions to a well-known English comic opera singer, now in this country, sailed for Liverpool on the Cunarder Carmania yesterday afternoon.

He denied that he was the Marquis, and also said the talk about his attentions to the singer was without foundation.

LATEST CUSTOMS RULINGS.

Importers Win, Although Protest Is Overruled—Other Decisions.

In a decision by T. S. Sharretts, the Board of United States General Appraisers overruled yesterday a protest filed by John D. Gluck & Son of New York, under somewhat unusual circumstances. The firm entered at the Custom House imitation precious stones, which Collector Stranahan assessed at the rates provided under the tariff for such articles. By some inadvertence the importers filed a formal protest against the Collector's classification, while making a claim for the identical duty actually levied by Mr. Stranahan.

In a decision by W. F. Howell, the board denied claims made by Einstein, Wolff & Co. and others of New York regarding the classification of fancy lace wearing apparel, which the Collector had returned for duty at the rate of 60 per cent. ad valorem. It was maintained by the importers that the goods should be allowed to enter at 50 per cent.

Other importers' claims overruled were filed by George Borgfeldt & Co., O. F. Maniscalco, Benedict & Warner, B. Altman & Co., Steinhardt Brothers, and William Weidenkeller, New York; Cerocedo Hermanos & Co., San Juan, P. R.; Moses Norris, Baltimore, and A. C. McClurg & Co., Chicago.

The board sustained claims made by R. H. Macy & Co., J. & H. Rosenberg, and B. R. Meyrowitz, New York; G. W. Sheldon & Co., Gage Brothers & Co., and D. B. Fisk & Co., Chicago, and the American Import Company, Los Angeles, Cal.

These protests were partially sustained: Libbey & Ryker, B. Illfelder & Co., R. F. Downing & Co. and others, and Hunken, Neale & Forbes, New York; Chicago Mercantile Company, Gage Brothers & Co., and G. W. Sheldon & Co., Chicago, and George Borgfeldt & Co., New Orleans.

BUSINESS TROUBLES.

ADOLPH BAER.—Adolph Baer of 74 East 121st Street has filed a petition in bankruptcy with liabilities $22,068 and no assets. The debts were contracted in 1897 as a partner in the firm of Baer & Schwartz, furs, at 79 Greene Street, who made an assignment on Dec. 28, 1897, and the assignment was afterward set aside. Among the creditors are the National Butchers and Drovers' Bank $3,065, estate of Leopold Weil $2,146, Joseph Steiner & Brother $2,779, and Bennet J. King and Edward J. King, Jr., $3,395.

STEPHEN C. HOWARD.—Stephen C. Howard, clerk, residing at 45 West Eleventh Street, has filed a petition in bankruptcy with liabilities $9,663 and no assets. The largest creditors are the American Surety Company $4,212 on a judgment obtained against Mr. Howard on Dec. 19, 1892, by Abby Rogers Clark and E. J. Rogers, Providence, R. I., $3,200.

MORRIS SPIELHOLZ.—Morris Spielholz, wholesale dealer in butter and eggs at 294 Greenwich Street, filed a petition in bankruptcy on Feb. 13, individually, and also asked to have the firm of Spielholz & Rothfeld, of which he was formerly a member, declared bankrupt. Charles Rothfeld, the other partner, appeared before John J. Townsend, Referee in Bankruptcy, and showed that he and the firm of Spielholz & Rothfeld are solvent. Judge Holt of the United States District Court has confirmed the report of Referee Townsend and dismissed the petition as against the firm and Mr Rothfeld and ordered the assets of the firm to be turned over to Mr. Rothfeld to liquidate the business. Mr. Spielholz is adjudicated a bankrupt.

Out of Town.

PITTSBURG—William Camack Shuff, merchant, of Altoona, filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy in the United States Circuit Court to-day, in which he sets forth his debts at $43,005 and his assets at $21,855.

UNION, S. C.—Edwin W. Robertson of Columbia, S. C., was appointed yesterday Trustee of the Union Cotton Mills.

MARCH 1906

THE FINANCIAL MARKETS

Stocks Lower—Banks Add $1,454,000 to Surplus.

Loans Reduced by European Borrowings—Coal Strike Discussion.

The publication of a much more favorable bank statement than had been expected was made the occasion in yesterday's stock market for a profit-taking movement which ran practically to the close and which succeeded in replacing early gains in certain sections of the list by small losses, while it augmented the declines of such stocks as had moved weakly earlier in the short session. In the fore part of the trading the majority of stocks maintained a firm undertone, although in certain instances there was a moderate yielding to pressure, this being most notable in the case of the Hill shares and in Union Pacific, which finally closed at a loss of 1¼ points. Consolidated Gas declined 2½ points on the news of an increase of $4,600,000 in the assessment on the company's franchise, it being recognized that the yearly addition of $70,000 to expenses entailed in this increase will not be too readily earned if the company is finally forced to accept the eighty-cent rate for gas fixed by the State Gas Commission and by the State Legislature. Reading and the various other coal road stocks exhibited strength in spite of the more extended discussion of the coal strike situation, which was invited by news of the determination of independent operations in the bituminous field to stand with the Pittsburg Coal Company by refusing to supply the United States Steel Corporation with fuel if the corporation should bring pressure to bear upon the Pittsburg Company, with which it has a contract, in the event of a strike. After the close of business there was published what purported to be the form of the reply of the anthracite operators to the miners, a document which, if the terms prove correct, places the responsibility directly upon the miners, but which is couched in such terms that a settlement of differences is still possible, although Wall Street is rapidly coming to believe that the chances of a settlement are very slender. The Government report of 158,000,000 bushels of wheat in farmers' hands attracted some attention owing to the fact that it is well below preliminary estimates of the amount thus held. Prices on European markets were again firm in the expectation of a speedy conclusion of the Moroccan negotiations.

Interest in the bank statement centred in the heavy reductions made in the loan account, the cut of $21,000,000 for the week being accepted as reflecting the intervention of foreign lenders fully as much as the early liquidation in the stock market. Where preliminary estimates had foreshadowed a maximum loss of $1,500,000 in cash, the banks reported an actual decrease of $5,448,000 in this item. No adequate explanation of this disparity was forthcoming, although it may be partially explained by the fact that the statement of the previous week failed to reflect the entire loss suffered by the banks at that time. As a result of the average system's workings there was reported an increase of only $1,103,000 in United States deposits, although, as is well known, the Government had placed with local banks by Thursday night at least $3,000,000, the amount set aside for this purpose by Secretary Shaw. Just as the cash loss of the previous week failed to find reflection in the bank statement of the week, so this excess of $2,000,000 in Government deposits should affect favorably the statement for the present week. Deposits fell away $27,613,000, and as a result of the various changes surplus was increased by $1,454,000, standing now at $6,463,700, which compares with $9,278,150 in 1905, $29,937,075 in 1904, $1,024,000 in 1903, and $3,112,900 in 1902. In other words, the surplus is well up to the average of recent years instead of far below it, as has been the case for some weeks past.

LATEST CROP STATISTICS.

Amount of Wheat, Corn, and Oats in Farmers' Hands on March 1.

WASHINGTON, March 10.—The crop reporting board of the Bureau of Statistics of the Department of Agriculture, from the reports of the correspondents and agents of the bureau finds the amount of what remaining in farmers' hands on March 1 to have been about 158,403,000 bushels, or 22.9 per cent. of last year's crop, as compared with 20.1 per cent., or 111,053,000 bushels of the crop of 1904 on hand on March 1, 1905, and 20.8 per cent. of the crop of 1903 on hand at the corresponding date in 1904.

The corn in farmers' hands is estimated at about 1,108,000,000 bushels, or 40.9 per cent. of last year's crop, against 38.7 per cent., or 954,268,000 bushels of the crop of 1904 on hand on March 1, 1905, and 37.4 per cent. of the crop of 1903 on hand at the corresponding date in 1904.

Of oats there are reported to be about 379,805,000 bushels, or 39.8 per cent. of last year's crop, still in farmers' hands, as compared with 38.8 per cent., or 347,166,000 bushels of the crop of 1904 on hand on March 1, 1905, and 34.9 per cent. of the crop of 1903 on hand at the corresponding date in 1904.

The following table shows the percentages of last year's crops of wheat, corn, and oats on hand on March 1, in the sixteen principal grain-producing States:

$50,000,000 BOND ISSUE.

Proceeds to be Used for Hudson Tunnel and Traction Lines.

The financing contemplated by the Hudson Companies, it was learned yesterday, will probably be done through the Hudson & Manhattan Railroad Company, the subsidiary company of the Hudson Companies, formed to construct the tunnel from Cortlandt Street to the Pennsylvania terminal in Jersey City, and to build the traction lines in Jersey City, which will be used to supplement the tunnel service.

It was admitted in official quarters yesterday that the new issue of bonds will amount to $50,000,000, and will bear 4½ per cent. interest. A very considerable portion of this issue will be sold in the immediate future. A portion of the issue will be for the purpose of refunding the $5,000,000 first mortgage 5 per cent. bonds of the New York & New Jersey Railroad Company, now outstanding. It was not learned yesterday whether these bonds will be retired at 110, according to the option reserved to the company at the time the bonds were issued, or whether they will be allowed to run and the necessary amount of new bonds reserved against them. In the latter event it may be that the whole $50,000,000 of new 4½ per cents, with the exception of those needed to retire the $5,000,000 New York & New Jersey bonds, will be sold at this time.

The proceeds of the new issue, apart from such amount as may be needed for the refunding of the present issue of bonds, will be used for construction purposes.

ON THE LONDON 'CHANGE

Improvement in the Markets Has Amounted Almost to a Boom.

Week Began with Fears of Serious Failures and Astonishment Has Been Caused by the Lack of Trouble in the Settlement and the Strength of Stocks.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.
[Copyright, 1906.]

LONDON, March 10.—Stock Exchange people have been marveling all the week at the movements of the markets, for the trouble that seemed inevitable as they looked forward to this week's settlement has been completely averted. There has not been one important failure, in spite of the fact that even the most conservative Stock Exchange prophets believed that there would be some very serious crashes growing out of the South African situation.

But that is not all. The markets have actually improved tremendously. One might almost say that there has been a boom in every department.

When the week opened there was manifest a good deal of uncertainty, and prices showed an inclination to lag. This condition, of course, was due to the dismal forecasts published last Saturday, but as the settlement proceeded and it was seen that these forecasts were likely to be discredited, operators acquired a moderate degree of confidence, which was greatly strengthened when Continental buying set in, occasioned by the great improvement in the news from Algeciras. The influx of gold from abroad and the extremely good Board of Trade returns for February were supporting factors.

Consols and associated stocks are higher. The talk of the Exchange is that consols are going a good deal higher before the end of the year, the new Government having determined to do everything possible to improve their position.

Home rails made an excellent recovery and have been in strong demand.

American rails also have been strong and higher, and the prediction has been made that large speculation in them is likely to set in soon.

Foreign Government bonds fared well, especially Russian and Japanese issues.

Mines have been in large demand, and, with few exceptions, closed above last Saturday's figures.

Money conditions have not greatly altered. Real ease is not expected before the end of the quarter.

LONDON STOCK MARKET.

LONDON, March 10.—Money was in good supply in the market to-day and in less demand. Rates were easier. Discounts were quiet.

Trading on the Stock Exchange was of a smaller volume, but the tone was firm, and prices were inclined to harden, particularly home rails, owing to investment purchases. Consols yielded a fraction on realizations.

Foreigners benefited by Paris support, Russians again hardening. Hudson Bays were in much request and advanced further.

Americans opened steady at well over parity, and a fair amount of business was transacted, but they reacted fractionally near the close and finished steady. Grand Trunk declined owing to the new issue, but improved toward the close.

Kaffirs were moderately active, and a cheerful undertone prevailed in this department. They hardened on early trading, eased later, and closed quietly steady. A small failure was announced, but it did not affect the market.

Japanese imperial 6s of 1904 were quoted at 104.

Bullion amounting to £10,000 was taken into the Bank of England on balance to-day.

Gold premiums are quoted as follows: Madrid, 15.57; Lisbon, 4.50.

The India Council to-day purchased $1,750,000 in gold due here March 31.

IRON AND STEEL NOTES.

Expected Reaction in Iron Said by Some to be Here.

Small orders for pig iron in the week made a large aggregate, and prices closed about 25 cents a ton higher. The trade is favorably impressed with the turn for the better, and there are some who predict that the expected reaction in the iron trade is at hand.

Steel, too, made a better showing in new business for the week than could be pointed to last Saturday. Some large rail and structural orders were placed, and it is reported at the leading mills that new business is again keeping pace with production. Deliveries in wire and tin plate and other light-finished steel lines are breaking all records.

Car-building companies are finding no slackening in the demands of the railroads, and some concerns are now booking orders for delivery in the early part of 1907.

TELEPHONE TRUST EXPANDS.

Subsidiary Companies of the Bell Combine to Increase Capital.

Following the lead of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, the Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Company and others of the subsidiary companies of the Telephone Trust, which within the last few months have authorized heavy increases of capitalization, the Rocky Mountain Bell Telephone Company has voted to increase its stock from $2,500,000 to $10,000,000. The company, of whose stock 51 per cent. is held by the parent company, has the exclusive Bell rights for Idaho, Montana, Utah, and Wyoming. It has no bonded debt.

The stockholders of the Southwestern Telephone and Telegraph Company, operating in Texas and Arkansas, will meet on March 20 to pass on a proposed increase of capitalization from $10,000,000 to $20,000,000.

BUYS FISHERIES COMPANY.

Joseph Wharton of Philadelphia Acquires a Controlling Interest.

Controlling interest in the Fisheries Company, which catches menhaden along the Atlantic Coast, has been purchased by Joseph Wharton of Philadelphia, the head of large fishing interests in that city.

The Fisheries Company is capitalized at $3,000,000, of which $2,000,000 is 7 per cent. non-cumulative preferred and $1,000,000 common stock. It owns forty-one of the eighty-five menhaden steamers in the coast fishery, and in point of tonnage preponderates in the industry.

Its catches of menhaden are converted into fish-oil and fertilizers in factories at isolated spots along the shores of Long Island, New Jersey, and Rhode Island. Last Spring the Fisheries Company bought out its largest rival, the Atlantic Fisheries Company. The headquarters of the concern has already been moved to Philadelphia.

CHICAGO QUOTATIONS.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, March 10.—New York exchange was 10c discount. Time and call loans, 5@5½ per cent. Chicago Subway shares furnished something of a surprise to local traders to-day. In the short session 1,900 shares were bought on the rise from 47 to 49 and back to 48½, compared with the last previous sale at 44½. This is more business than had been done in the stock on the local Exchange in a month, and at once brought out gossip of another movement similar to that which had taken the shares up from 50 to 87½.

Incidentally, Illinois Tunnel bonds went at 92½@93.

Brick shares turned somewhat active and firmer, selling up to 67½. Gossip suggests difficulties ahead of the independents in the trade in the matter of brick prices. Swift's was bought and sold in small lots around 109 down to 108½. Kansas City Light common went as low as 63½. Ogden Gas bonds went at 99½. The list:

Not a Wabash Road.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, March 10.—The Lorain & West Virginia Railroad, which is being built from Lorain to Wellington, is a Wabash enterprise, and will eventually be taken over by the Wheeling & Lake Erie. The Lorain & Southern, to be built between the same points by Joseph Ramsey, Jr., has no connection whatever with the Wabash. A statement to this effect was given out by President Delano of the Wabash through local representatives to-day.

NEW HAVEN ROAD FARES.

President Mellen Tells of Passenger Tariff Reduction Plans.

BOSTON, March 10.—The regular monthly meeting of the Board of Directors of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad Company was held at the offices of the company here to-day, and the regular quarterly dividend of 2 per cent. was declared. At the conclusion of the meeting President C. S. Mellen made the following statement with reference to reductions in the passenger tariff, voted by the Directors:

"The Directors authorized on March 1, 1906, reduced passenger tariffs upon its Berkshire division to a maximum of 2 cents per mile figured in multiples of five, and have arranged to make similar reductions upon its Highland, Naugatuck, and Northampton divisions effective April 1, 1906; also on certain branches in Connecticut on May 1, 1906, notably the Suffield branch, New Britain branch, Valley branch, the line between Waterbury and Middletown, also that portion of the old New England Road lying west of Willimantic, including the branch to Springfield.

"Estimates have been prepared and reductions authorized in certain sections of the territory covered by the company's lines, moving regularly from the west to the east until the whole territory has been covered. The reductions are being made without regard to the earnings of the territory involved.

"The territory in Rhode Island is entitled to consideration, and to neglect it by jumping over the same would seem a wrong that could not be justified.

"It will take until October 1, 1906, to cover the whole territory, and the Old Colony being the easternmost part will necessarily be the last to be reached. The line from New Haven to Providence and from New London to Worcester will receive attention about June 1, 1906. By July 1, 1906, the balance of Rhode Island lines, including those from Providence to Worcester and Southbridge, will have received attention; by August 1, 1906, the Boston and Providence and what was formerly known as the Old Colony northern division; and by Sept. 1 the Old Colony system, or that portion east of the line from Boston through Stoughton to Fall River.

"For final action there have been reserved the old New England main line and branches north thereof and the air line connection of the same through to New Haven waiting the completion and opening for business of the new Needham line, there being more complications there to be considered on account of the shorter mileage and the consequent effect upon other routes."

BEET SUGAR RAILROAD.

Will Traverse Arkansas Valley in Colorado—Cost $1,000,000.

The officers of the American Beet Sugar Company have incorporated in Colorado a million-dollar railroad to traverse the Arkansas Valley of Colorado, where the company has 10,000 acres of farm lands, and connect with the Atchison. Besides the beet-growing lands along the route of the proposed road, the company has a factory of 1,000 tons capacity at Rocky Ford, and another of 450 tons at Lamar.

The railroad is primarily intended to carry sugar beets from the fields to the factories and to transport the finished products to a connection with the Atchison, but as a public carrier the railroad will also be a factor in the freight situation of the fertile Arkansas Valley.

The Directors are F. Weitzer, C. M. Ward, and others of Colorado, Robert Oxnard of San Francisco, and H. R. Duval of New York.

BOSTON STOCK MARKET.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, March 10.—The money market remains a trifle easier.

Call loans, 6@6½ per cent. Time loans, collateral, 5½@6 per cent.; mercantile paper, 5¼@5½ per cent. Clearing House loans, 6 per cent. New York funds at par. Clearings, $23,801,037. Balances, $2,054,627. Sub-Treasury debit, $135,324.

For the week:

Clearings, $148,063,354. Balances, $11,877,152. To-day's stock market was dull, but most of the coppers were strong. Wolverine went up to a new high mark, and Osceola, Bingham, and Parrot advanced a little. The local industrials were neglected.

MARCH 1906

THE SPECULATIVE SITUATION.

The stock market experienced an abrupt reversal of speculative form at midweek. The bear movement which was in progress at the close of the preceding week continued during Monday and Tuesday, with aggressive selling of a few stocks, notably Amalgamated Copper, which touched par; but even on Tuesday it was evident that operators who had been committed to the bear side were hammering some stocks the better to buy others, and that the manipulative cost of producing fresh liquidation would soon render further efforts in that direction unprofitable. So on Wednesday the market became very dull—at a decline of 10 to 40 points from the high prices of January. The market at this juncture was heavily oversold. Not only had the technical position of securities been greatly strengthened by the elimination of weakly margined accounts, but liquidation at the same time had lessened the strain upon the money market, brokers' loans had been cut almost in two, counting back to January, and, a war cloud being suddenly dispersed in Europe, foreign exchange declined to a point at which several international banking houses began to figure on gold imports.

Before the closing on Friday the market showed recoveries from the low prices of Monday amounting to more than 8 points in Amalgamated Copper, nearly 5 points in Union Pacific, and 3 to 6 points variously through the list, with even greater advances in a few high priced stocks like Great Northern preferred and Northern Pacific. Such a violent recovery, engineered chiefly at the expense of the bear account, is not likely to hold unless supported by enough fresh buying to replace the short interest, and although Friday's buying movement was very aggressive in some directions, brokers reported but a small increase of outside business. The advance was arrested on Saturday by a profit-taking movement, which was stimulated by the bank statement.

After prices have suffered a severe decline, banking interests send in supporting orders, the appearance of which causes speculators to buy stocks cautiously for a rally. The bear crowd, on its part, discovers that it is meeting with too much opposition and begins to repurchase stocks sold at higher prices. Then ensues a recovery, the extent and violence of which will correspond to the extent and violence of the decline, and presently the stocks which were bought by banking interests to arrest the decline and, on their example, by speculators playing only for a turn, come back upon the market. The recovery had reached a point on Friday where stocks that were bought on Monday and Tuesday could be resold at profits of from 2 to 5 points, or more, and profit-taking of precisely that nature was more or less in evidence throughout the day. The demand for the stocks came very largely from the short interests.

Since the collapse of the January boom the market has had two distinct breaks and two sharp recoveries, alternating. From 138.36 on Jan. 22 the average price of twenty active railroad stocks declined to 131.10 on Feb. 17 and recovered to 132.58 on Feb. 26. Then came the second break, which carried the average price of the same stocks down to 128.54 on March 5, followed by last week's recovery, which left the average on Friday at 131.40. Since the high point of January commission houses lines have been reduced variably from 25 to 40 per cent., brokers' loans have been scaled down accordingly, and the stock market appears to have found its equilibrium. It seems reasonable to argue, therefore, that the course of prices in the immediate future is likely to be determined more by original influences as they arise than by the effects of past excesses, assuming that these effects have already spent their force.

It has been maintained by many commentators that the money market would stand in the way of a resumption of bullish activity on a broad scale in the near future. Some very eminent bankers believe, however, that there will be room for an active stock market speculation in April and count upon it rather confidently. The condition of the money market has been improving, and if the banks and other money-lending institutions find themselves in a position, a few weeks hence, to finance an active stock market, there will be no lack of aggressive initiative on the bull side.

There can be no doubt that inner Wall Street wishes devoutly for a greater distribution of stocks than has been accomplished. The only way in which stocks can be distributed is to make a market in which the public will trade. It may be assumed that an opportunity to do this will not go unimproved.

There was very little in the market last week on which to base the assertion that the larger interests, so-called, had actually entered upon an aggressive movement toward higher prices. On the contrary, there was evidence in the behavior of many stocks, notably Union Pacific, that these interests would be disposed to discourage premature activity on the bull side. Union Pacific recovered nearly 5 points from the extreme low point reached on Monday, and above 153 it was evidently held in check. If those controlling its movement had desired to turn it effectively to the bull side they could have carried it, no doubt, to 155, with fair assurance of creating immense enthusiasm.

Recently, with the stock market depressed, there has been much foreboding comment upon what Wall Street is pleased to call the Socialistic tendency of legislation in this country. No one who has followed speculation attentively needs to be told how easily any such matter as this can be forgotten or put aside temporarily when prices are rising. It is necessary only to recall that we had a bull market continuously during the life insurance investigation. When this inquiry began people who were vaguely aware of the nature of the disclosures that could be expected stood aghast, and many sold out their stocks. The market happened just at this time to be in the doldrums, and for several weeks the "insurance investigation" was the uppermost topic of conversation. Then the stock market got under way again, and, with prices advancing, people ceased to worry about the investigation. Disclosures came one after another with astonishing rapidity, and Wall Street, reassured by the strength of the market, said that they made very good reading.

The extreme weakness last week of one coaler stock, Reading, kept the probability of a coal strike perpetually in mind, but it might be well to remember that in all the history of strikes there has never been any money in selling stocks on trouble of that kind once it had begun. It is only in prospect that a strike embarrasses the stock market. After it has been declared it ceases to become a source of bearish inspiration.

There is some bullish material in sight. The decline in wheat has been almost wholly disregarded as a bull argument on security values. Railroad earnings continue to increase astonishingly. Unless Wall Street is grossly misled by the reports now at hand, the earnings of the United States Steel Corporation for the first quarter of this year will be the best in the history of the property. The active employment of money, keeping interest rates up, is a bull argument on the stock market so long as it does not make credit so costly as to prohibit speculation.

There will be general talk presently of an increase of the Amalgamated Copper dividend to the rate of 8 per cent. The speculative position of Amalgamated Copper obviously is much stronger than it was a few weeks ago.

The rapid recovery in the Hill stocks from the depression caused by a halting of the ore deal suggests that, whether the deal goes through or not, the Hill following is confident of an early distribution on Northern Pacific and Great Northern preferred. But the ore deal is believed to be "on again."

FALL RIVER COTTON STOCKS.

Special to The New York Times.

FALL RIVER, March 10.—G. M. Haffards & Co. quote cotton stocks as follows:

PHILADELPHIA PRICES.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, March 10.—There was not much snap to the local demand for stocks to-day. The bulk of the dealings was carried on among the floor-trading element of the Stock Exchange and arbitrage houses, with Reading and United States Steel as the active leaders. In the first hour prices displayed firmness, but in the final hour they weakened, Lehigh Valley receding a full point, as did Huntingdon & Broad Top preferred, the latter on a single sale. Cambria Steel and Philadelphia Rapid Transit were also under some pressure late in the morning.

The Fort Wayne & Wabash Traction issues made further advances, the common rising a point and the preferred 5 points, making an 18-point gain for the week.

Total sales, 17,988 shares.

TRADING IN BALTIMORE.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, March 10.—United Railways 4s and income bonds continue a strong feature in the local trading. The former have been quite active of late, and yesterday made an unexpected advance, which found explanation to-day in the sale of $479,000 of the bonds to banks and trust companies and a syndicate of local brokers. The incomes seem to have been making steady gains, selling up to 74⅝ to-day, an advance of ⅛. The Baltimore Trust certificates sold at an advance of ⅛. A sharp change to a lower level was made in Seaboard Air Line common, which ran off 3 points, to 30, recovering 1 point at the close.

In the bond list, trading was mixed at the opening, steadying later as the market progressed. Georgia, Carolina & Northern 5s dropped ¾. The market closed firm and active. Shares, 753; bonds, $27,500.

THE COMMERCIAL WORLD

WHEAT—The important feature in wheat on Saturday was the Government report on foreign reserves. Although it was not issued until after the regular close of the local market, its shadow dominated everything in wheat circles before 12 o'clock. Some of the early expectations were for a total around 180,000,000 bushels. This was later reduced to expectations for about 165,000,000 bushels, and the market, which had started out irregular, began to firm up toward the regular close. The Government showed a total of only 158,403,000 bushels in farmers' hands, or 22.9 per cent., this being lower than any of the recent private estimates except one. The result was an immediate jump in the market, May advancing to 84¼c, from which there was a slight setback toward 1 o'clock on realizing. The final price on May was 84c; July, 83⅝c, and September, 83¼c. Liverpool closed partly ½d net lower, being steadier than expected. There was little important change in Continental markets. The cash market closed steady with No. 2 red quoted at 83⅝c, elevator, and 85¼c, free on board afloat; No. 1 Northern, Duluth, 85⅝c, free on board, afloat.

CORN—The corn market opened steady, but was depressed for a time by reports of good weather and realizing, together with a decline of ¼ to ⅜d at Liverpool. There was a later rally on commission house buying, and after the regular close the market sold up above the previous night in sympathy with wheat. Farm reserves were figured at 1,108,000 bushels, or 40.9 per cent. of the crop compared with 954,000,000 bushels last year. They were close to expectations, although considered bullish by some. Interior receipts only reached 880,000 bushels, compared with 773,000 bushels last year. No. 2 corn was quoted at 50c, elevator, and 47¼c, free on board, afloat; No. 2 white, 48¼c, and No. 2 yellow, 48¼c, free on board, afloat.

COTTON.—The cotton market was moderately active for a half session, and ruled generally nervous and unsettled, with prices closing at practically the low point for the week. The market opened easy at a decline of 6@10 points, rallied a few points during the middle session, but eased off again toward the close, and was finally nervous and barely steady at a net decline of 7@12 points. Sales were estimated at 100,000 bales for the day.

MARCH 1906

IN THE REAL ESTATE FIELD

With the advancing season there has come a noticeable increase in the amount of vacant property dealing, particularly in the northerly part of the west side territory, on Morningside Heights, and in other sections where there is land available for the better grade of apartment house construction.

There is apparently at present a better market for properties of this type among investors than has existed for some time past. Many of these structures put up five or six years ago can be offered at figures which seem attractive in view of to-day's increased cost of construction, while buyers have also been found for not a few of the newer buildings. In any event, the sales of half a dozen elevator apartment houses, contained in a single day's reports last week, point strongly in the direction of a returning interest in this class of property.

An increased amount of business in the Bronx is also among recent developments worthy of some attention. Buying for improvement, furthermore, constitutes a very considerable part of this dealing, as appeared in the sales of three entire block fronts on 169th Street, extending east from Morris Avenue, and in that of nineteen lots at Whitlock Avenue and Barretto Street, for improvement with two family houses. The latter neighborhood, in fact, has been within the last few days the scene of a buying campaign of much larger proportions than has been indicated in published reports.

The general situation in those parts of the Bronx which were involved in the great speculative movement of the Fall of 1894, is said to have developed unusual signs of stability. Says one operator who was in the thick of that speculation: "I came off with a large assortment of second mortgages, and I can only say that I have been surprised at the regularity with which these mortgages have been paid off, or the properties resold, with some satisfactory readjustment of loans."

The deal for the Lord's Court Building, at William Street and Exchange Place, naturally overshadowed most of the week's other business, both by reason of its size and on account of the atmosphere of secrecy with which the buyer has succeeded in enveloping himself.

This mystery was dispelled to some extent yesterday by the incorporation at Albany of the Lord's Court Building Company, with a capital of $1,200,000, for the purpose of taking over and holding that property as an investment. The Directors of the new corporation are Chauncey S. Truax, Albert R. Hager, and Frank L. Zabriskie.

LATEST DEALINGS BY BROKERS.

That Lexington or even Third Avenue is not to mark the eastern boundary of the present buying movement in east side private dwellings became apparent yesterday through the announcement of a long list of transactions involving houses in the restricted block on Seventy-second Street, between Second and Third Avenues.

Pease & Elliman have sold 235 East Seventy-second Street, 17.6 by 100, for Louisa Stein to J. Cooper Mott; also, 232 East Seventy-second Street, 18 by 100, for the Keeler estate; also, resold for M. Mott to R. H. E. Elliott, 235 East Seventy-second Street.

Henry D. Winans & May have sold for Henry Stohlmeyer and others 206 and 208 East Seventy-second Street, to Josephine Kellogg; also, to J. Cooper Mott, 214, 216 and 218 East Seventy-second Street, for Ida Morris; also, for a Mrs. Silebee, 219 East Seventy-Second Street, to Andrew S. Dickenson.

Nichols & Lummis have sold 236 East Seventy-second Street for the Teichman estate, and have resold for Mr. Mott 218 East Seventy-second Street. Brooke & Georger have resold for Mr. Mott 214 East Seventy-second Street. Nichols & Lummis have also resold No. 236 to Mrs. A. M. C. Werden.

Many of these houses will be remodeled for occupancy by their new owners.

Operator Buys on Seventh Avenue.

W. Hamilton McBride of Ames & Co., has sold for Louis Massucci 250 Seventh Avenue, 21.6 by 78.2, a four-story building. The buyer is W. Clarence Martin.

George W. McAdam has sold 257 and 259 West Thirty-sixth Street, a five-story flat on plot 34 by 98.9.

New Building on Fifth Avenue.

Webster B. Mabie has leased, for a term of years, the property 290 Fifth Avenue, west side, between Thirtieth and Thirty-first Streets, to Irving E. Raymond, for Mrs. S. Edward Nash. The property will be improved with a twelve-story building in connection with 286 and 288, now owned by Mr. Raymond. The size of the entire plot is about 60 feet front by 125 feet in depth.

Charles E. Duross has sold for Arthur W. Reichow 14 East Twelfth Street, for William C. Bowers 12 East Twelfth Street, and for Joseph Delafield 10 East Twelfth Street, to a client who will erect on the site an eleven-story loft building.

J. Arthur Fischer has bought from Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt the five-story brick building 689 Sixth Avenue, on lot 18.6 by 100, the store of which he will probably use for his office.

H. D. Baker & Brother and Edward Silk have sold for the Realty Transfer Company 39 West Seventeenth Street, a four-story building, 25 by 92.

J. Arthur Fischer has leased for Sarah C. Clarke the five-story building 798 Sixth Avenue, for a term of years.

Lower Fifth Avenue Lease.

Bloodgood, de Saulles & Talbot have leased for William G. Park 47 Fifth Avenue, known as the old Hawley homestead, to a client for a term of years. The lessee will occupy the house after altering and renovating it. The same brokers also negotiated the recent sale of 45 West Fifty-fourth Street, a four-story brownstone dwelling.

The sale of 209 to 213 East Twenty-third Street to the Manhattan Trade School for Girls, through Ashforth & Co., is referred to in more detail in another column.

Ashforth & Co. were the brokers, in conjunction with Acritelli & Co., in the resale of Calvary Chapel, on the south side of Twenty-third Street, 210 feet east of Third Avenue, on plot 75 by 122.6.

The Hamilton Institute for Girls, now at 108 West Eighty-first Street, has leased for a term of years the residence of Mrs. A. B. Colcord, 3 West Eighty-first Street, and will remove to its new quarters about May 1.

Dey Street Building Sold.

J. N. Kalley & Son have sold to a client of Robert Colgate & Co. 78 Dey Street, a five-story building, on lot 26 by 68.

William White & Sons have sold for the estate of Eugenie G. Baldwin 22 Walker Street, a five-story building, on lot 25 by 100.

Big Deals on White Plains Road.

It is reported that the Mace estate tract of fifty-seven acres, lying between the Boston Road and White Plains Road, just north of their junction, has been sold. The consideration is said to have been about $400,000.

The Sound Realty Company has sold to a client of Hall J. How & Co. the block front on the east side of White Plains Avenue, between 233d and 234th Streets, a plot of eighteen lots, on which the buyer intends to erect four-story tenements with stores.

Apartments Sold on the Heights.

Wetmore & Magill have sold for A. Guthman & Son, for about $125,000, the two new five-story apartment houses 542 and 544 West 147th Street, on plot 75 by 100.

H. H. Dreyer and F. William Sohns have sold for James Knowles 59 Audubon Avenue, a five-story flat, on lot 25 by 95.

Max A. Schimpf has sold to Bertha Heintz 532 West 175th Street, a three-story brick dwelling, on lot 18 by 78.

The Ernst-Cahn Realty Company has sold for M. L. & C. Ernst to the Louis Meyer Realty Company 523 West 151st Street, a new six-story apartment house on plot 45 by 99.11.

To Improve Park Avenue Corner.

Douglas Robinson, Charles S. Brown & Co. have sold for Gilbert C. Brown the northwest corner of Park Avenue and Sixty-first Street, a plot fronting 100.5 feet on the avenue and 57.6 feet on the street. The buyer will erect a twelve-story apartment house.

West Side Tenement Dealings.

Max Marx has resold to Philip Freeman the two six-story tenements 855 and 857 Ninth Avenue, on plot 45 by 100.

Joseph F. Feist has sold for the Prescott Realty Company the four-story double tenement 447 West Thirty-ninth Street, on lot 25 by 98.9.

Herman Arns has sold for a client to the Lyric Realty Company 637 Tenth Avenue and 501 and 503 West Forty-fifth Street, four and five story buildings, on plot 25 by 100.

Prominent Harlem Corner Sold.

Shaw & Co. have sold for the George Bliss estate the southeast corner of 126th Street and Lenox Avenue, 100 by 85, a two-story building, with store. It is reported that the new owner will erect a twelve-story building on the plot. Shaw & Co. leased this property nineteen years ago for a term of twenty years.

Thomas Fitzsimons has sold for Charles V. Fornes to Adele Kurrus, 236 West 122d Street, a five-story double flat, 34 by 90 by 100.

C. F. W. Johanning has sold for W. Berlinghof 458 Manhattan Avenue, a five-story double flat, on lot 27 by 95.

Levy Brothers have sold for I. Bordenstein 138 and 140 West 112th Street, two five-story double flats, each 25 by 100, to a Mr. Marder; also, for Blumenthal Brothers, 8 and 10 West 119th Street, two five-story double flats, each 30 by 100, to I. Bordenstein; also, for Hyman Horwitz, four houses on the north side of 135th Street, east of Lenox Avenue, in course of construction, to Mrs. E. Kahn, Henry Meyer, a Mr. Glauber, and Abraham Cohn. This completes the sale of a row of eight new houses.

Pocher & Co. and Mann & Samuel have sold the two five-story apartment houses 67 and 69 West 115th Street for Crieger & Meyer to Frieda Heidelberger.

Corner Sold on Lexington Avenue.

Francis Frey has sold the southwest corner of Lexington Avenue and 122d Street, a five-story flat, on plot 100.11 by 35.

David Rosenblum, in conjunction with Charles Galewski, has sold for Bernard Galewski 62 East 112th Street, a three-story dwelling, on lot 16 by 100. The buyer now owns 56 to 62 East 112th Street, 64 by 100.

Julius H. Reiter, as attorney, has purchased for Harris Perelmuter the five-story tenement, 25 by 100, at 213 East 102d Street; also, for Siris and Malzman, 55 and 57 Suffolk Street, two five-story tenements, 50 by 75.

Antonio Terello has sold to M. Spicciato the four-story tenement 302 East 104th Street. R. Prezzano was the broker.

L. Walter Lissberger has purchased the five-story tenement 425 East Eighty-sixth Street, 25 by 100.

Mrs. Elliot Danforth Sells.

Mrs. Elliot Danforth has sold to a client of A. C. & L. A. Marks the plot on the north side of Twenty-seventh Street, 170 feet east of Third Avenue, 46.8 by 98.9.

The Enterprise Realty Company has sold to Rosenwasser & Weissberger 317 and 319 East Sixtieth Street, five-story tenements, each 25 by 100.

John M. Reid & Co. have sold for Emma Schwab 550 Second Avenue, a four-story brick flat, with store, on lot 16.4 by 60.

Purchase on Rivington Street.

Louis J. Jacoves has bought from Hyman Rein the northeast corner of Rivington and Attorney Streets, a six-story tenement, 25 by 100.

Newman Grossman and Frank Feldman have sold 353 and 355 East Third Street, a six-story tenement, 41.9 by 96. Mr. Grossman has bought from a Mr. Goldstein the seven-story tenement 244 Clinton Street, 30 by 100.

To Build on Valentine Avenue.

State Supervision for Brokers?

The Acmy Real Estate Club will have the next of its bi-monthly dinners at Reisenweber's, Columbus Circle, to-morrow evening. Charles E. Schuyler and G. Richard Davis will address the club on the subject, "The Desirability of a State Board of Examiners for Real Estate Brokers." John M. Thompson, Robert E. Simon, J. Clarence Davies, and E. A. Treadwell have also been invited. Assemblyman Charles F. Murphy of Brooklyn, author of the Murphy bill providing for the licensing of brokers, has written to the President of the club, M. J. Harson, saying that he will attend the dinner if legislative duties will permit.

THE AUCTION ROOM.

Several vacant properties along the line of the Subway from Morningside Heights to Fort George, to be sold on Thursday by Auctioneer Parish, make up what is probably the most important offering listed for this week in the salesroom. The plots, all of which are described in detail in the subjoined schedule, include the southeast corner of Riverside Drive and 135th Street, the block front on the west side of Broadway, between 152d and 153d Streets, the block front on the east side of Wadsworth Avenue, between 174th and 175th Streets, and a parcel of thirty lots running through from Fort George Avenue to St. Nicholas Avenue, opposite the Casino.

On Wednesday, Auctioneer Day will conduct fourteen voluntary and partition sales, involving parcels in almost as many different sections—most of them flats and tenements. Among the more important items on the list are the seven-story elevator apartment house 2,731 Broadway, 128 West Thirty-sixth Street, near Broadway, the dwelling 320 West Seventy-first Street, and two lots on 146th Street, near Amsterdam Avenue.

Executors' sales announced for the same day by Bryan L. Kennelly cover the four-story business building 45 University Place, near Ninth Street, the tenements 302, 310, and 312 West Fortieth Street, the dwelling 736 St. Nicholas Avenue, and a large plot in the Bronx on Velentine and Tiebout Avenues, near 183d Street.

A foreclosure sale will bring into the market to-morrow a plot, 83 by 83, on the east side of Gramercy Park, near Twenty-first Street.

There were sales in the auction room on only two days last week, the only offerings which atracted any outside attention being those involving small parcels on Elm and Centre Streets, near Pearl Street. The three-story building 43 and 45 Centre Street, running through to Elm Street, about 40 by 50, brought $37,500, and a lot on the west side of Elm Street, 72.8 by 36.9 by 70.1 by 17, went for $55,600.

An important suburban offering is down for Thursday of this week, when Joseph P. Day will sell, at the Vesey Street Salesroom, 567 lots at Hempstead, L. I., owned by the Stephen Williamson estate.

MORTGAGE FILINGS FOR WEEK.

There were recorded last week 637 mortgages for $9,255,077, of which 357, for $3,727,102, were at 6 per cent.; 109, for $2,252,575, at 5½ per cent.; 76, for $1,350,400, at 5 per cent., and 5, for $363,000, at 4½ per cent.. COMMISSION MUST BE PAID.

Written Authority Law Not Effective If Broker's Name Is in Contract.

Justice Seabury in the City Court has denied the motion to set aside the verdict of the jury in the case of Levy against Uhlfelder, holding that, if it is stated in a contract for the sale of real estate that a certain individual was the broker, the sellers cannot interpose as a defense, in a suit for the payment of a commission, the law requiring a broker to have written authority before offering property.

In an opinion accompanying his decision on the motion, Justice Seabury cites a recent opinion of the Appellate Term in the case of Smyth against Sichel: "We consider that this section (the law requiring written authority) cannot be invoked as a defense to this action. The contract was fully executed, the defendant reaped the benefit of it, and acknowledged in writing the plaintiff's agency (which involved employment) and performance. The defendant must be held to have waived the defense afforded him by the statute."

Justice Seabury adds: "Having in view the design of the statute and the reason for its enactment, and considering 'the old law, the mischief, and the remedy,' and construing it in the light of the rule that penal statutes must be strictly construed. I can see no reason for applying it to an executed contract."

LONG ISLAND ACTIVITY.

Large Acreage Deals at Flushing and Little Neck—Lots Sold at Woodside.

William Markham Coyle has sold to the Property Development Company for David L. Van Nostrand and Charles Hewlett a tract of about forty acres at Little Neck, Borough of Queens, known as the D. Van Nostrand farm. It has a frontage of about 1,200 feet on Little Neck Road, with a right of way extending to Broadway. It has been owned by the Van Nostrand family for many years, and is directly opposite the Wooley farm, which was sold to the Rickert-Finlay Realty Company.

D. R. Magee has sold for the Property Development Company to the McCormick Real Estate Company a tract of about ninety-two acres at Rosedale, Borough of Queens, directly opposite the Rosedale Station, on both sides of Rosedale Avenue, and running back to the Merrick Road. The property has been known as the Sappelt farm.

A tract of seventy-five acres in the easterly section of Flushing has been sold by Rachel McCreery to James A. Hennessy. The property has a frontage of 843 feet on the south side of Rocky Hill Road.

Faris & MacDougall sold last week sixteen lots at Woodside to E. I. Sawyer, who is said to represent a foreign syndicate. Thirty additional lots were also sold to various buyers. At Elmhurst Square about twenty-five lots were disposed of in parcels varying from one to six lots.

W. Clarence Martin has sold fifty lots on Grand Avenue, Astoria.

Stokes & Knowles report the sales of the following properties: Ninety-six acres on the Jamaica and Hempstead Turnpike, at Munson, L. I., for Maria Hargrave, to an investor; also, forty-five acres at Munson, for William Cooke.

The Pennsylvania, New York & Long Island Railroad has bought several plots on Hill Street, Long Island City, from ex-Justice Lucius N. Manley. The price is said to have been $30,000.

The Federal Land and Improvement Company has sold during the week twenty-eight lots at Amityville, L. I., for $4,690.

I. Kashare has sold for a client to Adolf Mandel nineteen lots bounded by Van Sicklen Avenue, Lake Street, and Avenue W, Gravesend, Brooklyn.

SUBURBAN DEVELOPMENT IDEA.

Long Island Colony's New Plan for Maintaining Public Improvements.

Owners in Douglas Manor, Douglaston, L. I., have devised a new plan to provide for the maintenance of public improvements.

There are 2,500 lots in the property, and the stock of the Douglas Manor Association has been divided into 2,500 shares. With each lot sold, one share in the association will be given with the deed, providing for an annual payment of $1 by the owner to the association. This plan will create an annual revenue of $2,500, to be expended for the care and maintenance of the streets, parks, and shore front, and for such other purposes as may be authorized by the stockholders. The by-laws of the association provide that after the first year all the officers of the association shall be actual residents of Douglas Manor, thereby insuring control to those most directly interested in the property.

This property of 188 acres was purchased a short time ago by the Rickert-Finlay Realty Company from William P. Douglas, and work is now in progress on the grading of more than eight miles of streets and the laying of fourteen miles of sidewalk.

GROWING PROMINENCE OF NEW INSURANCE CENTRE

Large Building Operations About to be Undertaken Near Liberty and William Streets—Range of Prices During the Last Five Years.

Any doubt which may have existed as to the ultimate prominence of the section around Liberty and William Streets, or as to its becoming the great centre of the insurance business, has been dispelled by the developments of the last fortnight. Work has already been begun on one large structure, and two others are projected—all intended for the accommodation of large insurance concerns.

At the northeast corner of William Street and Maiden Lane foundation work is in progress on the sixteen-story building of the Royal Insurance Company; the German-American Company has acquired the Mossman properties in the triangular block bounded by William Street, Maiden Lane, and Liberty Street, and, finally, the old Powers & Weightman plot at 27 Liberty Street, running through to Maiden Lane, has been taken under a long lease for improvement with a twelve-story structure, to be occupied largely by the Employers' Liability Assurance Corporation.

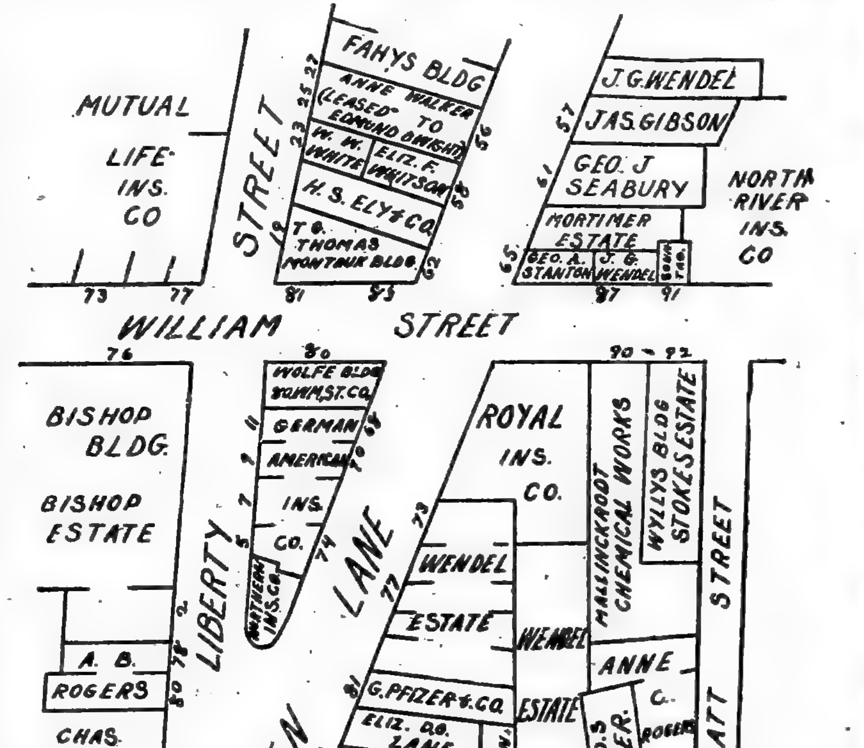
The German-American purchase has been the cause of some expressions of regret among those interested in the development of this neighborhood, because it apparently removes all prospect that William Street-Maiden Lane-Liberty Street flatiron will ever be improved with a single structure. Two or three years ago the Northern Insurance Company bought the small parcel at the point of the flatiron and some talk has been heard within the last few days that this company and the German-American may enter into some agreement by which their holdings may be merged and improved as a whole, but so far as can be learned nothing has yet come of these negotiations. The Wolfe Building, at the other end of the block, bought at auction by its present owners two years ago for $325,000, is said to be beyond the reach of any scheme for the improvement of the entire block. Ten stories in height and built only twelve or fifteen years ago, it falls within the category of those structures which are not modern in the light of present-day standards, yet which are not old enough to be consigned to the scrap heap.

The growth of the territory as an insurance centre has more than doubled its real estate values within a decade, of which increase more than half has come within the last three or four years. There is so little available property still on the market that there is likely to be no sale in the immediate future to confirm the estimate; but it is the opinion of one of the most competent of downtown appraisers that any of the corners around the William Street-Maiden Lane-Liberty Street junction is worth $150 a square foot. This is about 50 per cent. more than was paid for the Royal Insurance Company's site three years ago—that is, figuring an average of the prices paid for the various parcels that were taken to make up the plot. The northwest corner of William Street and Maiden Lane, a lot containing only about 800 square feet, was bought by its present owners in 1903 for $90,000, or at the rate of about $112 a square foot. It is said that this diminutive parcel is now held at a figure approximating $200 a square foot. The price paid by the German-American Insurance Company for the Mossman holdings was about $100 a square foot.

To get some idea of how the area of high prices has moved northward along William Street, it is only necessary to recall that it is only five years since a corner at Cedar Street sold for $100 a square foot. That approximately was the price paid by Flake & Dowling for the Kemp property, now the site of the Sixty-eight William Street Building. In 1896, these same operators bought the northwest corner of William and Cedar Streets for $79 a square foot.

Aside from the natural expansion of the downtown business district, which so far has been largely responsible for the development of Liberty and William Streets neighborhood, the proposed extensions of the Subway system also promise to benefit it perhaps to a larger extent than any other bit of territory south of Fulton Street. Not only is William Street itself included in the routes laid out by the Rapid Transit Commission, but provision is also made for three tunnels to Brooklyn, two connecting with the William Street Subway at Beekman Street and at Maiden Lane, and the third branching off further south and going under the river near Old Slip.

New buildings already erected on William Street have been hardly equal to the demands for space in the neighborhood. The newer structures, such as the Bishop Building, have been fully tenanted almost from the day of their completion, and there is no indication that the buildings about to be erected will do anything more than furnish a much needed addition to the supply of modern offices in the neighborhood.



ADDITION TO ELMHURST.

Tract of 1,200 Lots Adjoining That Suburb About to be Opened.

The Bankers' Land and Mortgage Corporation is about to open a tract of 1,200 lots adjoining Elmhurst. The property is intersected by Woodside Avenue, through which the Corona trolley runs from the Long Island City Ferry to this property in fifteen minutes. The New York Connecting Railroad will pass within a short distance of the property, and the new tunnels and bridges will make it particularly easy of access from Manhattan. The ground is the highest point in the Newtown section.

It is proposed to lay this tract out on a plan similar to that of Prospect Park South. Broad boulevards will be constructed with flower beds in the centre, careful restrictions will be made as to the character of the houses to be built, and all business and manufacturing will be strictly prohibited.

BARGAINS ON THOMPSON AVENUE.

We have but a few lots left at ELMHURST SQUARE, and the prices at which lots are selling are the same as those at which they were placed on the market last Fall, although prices in the entire Borough have gone up from 50 to 100 per cent. We propose increasing the price of lots remaining on March 15 10 per cent., and further increases will be made from time to time, until normal prices are reached.

Thompson Avenue runs directly through the centre of Elmhurst Square.

16 MINUTES FROM 34th ST. 5c. FARE.

It is on Thompson Avenue that BLACKWELL'S ISLAND BRIDGE aligns; also the PENNSYLVANIA TUNNELS and BELMONT TUNNELS. This means that Thompson Avenue will be to Queens Borough what Third Avenue is to the Bronx.

Purchasers of lots at ELMHURST SQUARE have realized this to the extent that we have only half a dozen lots left on Thompson Avenue. Here is a bargain for somebody.

N. B.—Elmhurst Square is the only addition in the Borough convenient to churches, schools and stores; with all improvements, including sewers; this is the only addition in the Borough having 5 trolley lines and two railroads adjoining the property.

LONG ISLAND.
FOR SALE.

EVERYBODY knows that the Pennsylvania R. R. is spending and has planned to spend $60,000,000 on a new tunnel through the heart of New York, and for the electrification of the Long Island R. R., which the Pennsylvania now controls. In addition to this the Belmont Company is covering Queens County with a network of trolley systems, and within the next two or three years any part of this territory will be more accessible than the Bronx is to-day.

These great transit developments mean that Queens County will have a tremendous Real Estate boom—that all property near the Railroad Stations or the proposed trolley lines will double, triple and multiply in value.

Every Dollar of the $60,000,000

being spent by the Pennsylvania R. R. and the additional millions which the Belmont people are spending for rapid transit to Long Island means an advance in the value of lots at

COMSTOCK TELLS WHY HE DIDN'T HIT BACK

His Position Too Dignified to Need Physical Violence.

FEAR AND HE ARE STRANGERS

Why, He Once Held an Assailant with One Hand and Kept Back a Mob with the Other.

Anthony Comstock, vice hunter, related stories of his prowess yesterday to show that it was not fear that restrained him from hitting back at Hugh Gordon Miller, the young lawyer who assaulted him on Friday afternoon in Commissioner Shields's court.

"I can take care of myself," said Mr. Comstock. "In the thirty-four years that I have been in this business people have tried to assault me a number of times. Once a big fellow, who I was told had been a prizefighter, attacked me in City Hall Park. I happened to catch him exactly on the chin. Down he went. I caught him then with one hand by the throat and held him backward over the fence that protects the grass plot—taking care that the grass should not be damaged by the encounter—until a policeman came. I held a mob back with the other hand."

Mr. Comstock narrated more experiences from his eventful career to show that he was a man with courage.

"The reason I did not strike back," said Mr. Comstock, "was because we were in court. My position is too dignified to make it necessary to resort to physical violence. It would be a good thing if everybody could afford to feel that way, in my opinion. If Mr. Miller had met me on the street, the story might have been different. He isn't a very big fellow."

Mr. Comstock was rather inclined to put the blame for what had occurred on Mr. Miller.

"If Mr. Miller had taken time to consider," he said, "he would have found that I did not call him a liar. I said his statement was a lie. There is a distinction. Lie may not be the politest way of putting it, but it is good English. I had already told him that once in the Tombs. He did not attack me then. But there was nobody present to see him at the time. I thought it my duty to brand his statement as a falsehood in view of the fact that he had accused me of conspiracy."

Mr. Comstock said he had only been hit once and that it did not hurt much. He seemed little the worse for the encounter. There was a swelling on his left cheek, but Mr. Comstock said Mr. Miller had not put it there. He added that he bore Mr. Miller no personal grudge for waht had happened, but was not prepared to say whether or not he would let the matter drop.

Mr. Comstock again appeared before Commissioner Shields yesterday as a witness against Ernest Richard. He was cross-examined by Mr. Miller, his assailant of the day before. No reference was made to their trouble, but Mr. Comstock swung the witness chair round so as to have his back turned to the lawyer while the latter was questioning him.

Just before adjournment Mr. Miller moved to have his client's bail reduced from $2,500 to $500. Assistant United States District Attorney Beirne objected. Mr. Comstock from the witness chair protested that the offense charged was a serious one and that the bail ought to remain what it had been.

"Now, don't let us have any butting in, please," said Mr. Miller. "You know what happened yesterday." Mr. Comstock made no reply.

Commissioner Shields reserved decision. Mr. Miller said that he felt exceedingly sorry for what had happened, but under similar circumstances he should feel compelled to do the same thing again.

JERSEY CLERGY IN POLITICS.

To Support Candidates Whom Liquor Men Mark for Defeat.

An interesting development and the agitation in New Jersey over the "Bishops' Liquor Reform Bill," now in the Legislature, is the threat of the clergy of the State to take an active part in politics. The announcement comes as a retort to the threat of the combined liquor interests to mark for the political graveyard every man who dares vote for the measure.

This note of defiance was the topic of discussion at the meeting of the Rectors' Association in Jersey City on Thursday. After the conference the rectors authorized the announcement that they had decided to protect the members who may vote for the act against any effort the liquor men may set on foot for their defeat for re-election. They decided further to actively aid the election of legislators who favor reform of the liquor laws.

The Rectors' Unions of other counties are scheduled to take similar action. The Episcopal clergy, who are as actively promoting the legislation, will follow suit. The politicians think the political effect will be far-reaching, and are making strong efforts to restore peace. The Democratic politicians, who suspect that their party will suffer the most as the result of the breach, are most aroused. The priests, however, have ignored a request from the liquor men for a conference looking to a compromise. The two points of resistance with the saloon men are provision forbidding them to screen their saloon windows and that making their saloon landlords join with them in their applications for licenses. The clergy have rejected several compromise plans offered, and say there shall be none. The Bishops' bill will probably be reported back to the Legislature without amendment and without recommendation next Wednesday night. An exciting contest is looked for.

METZ ANGRY AT COLER.

Stirred by Insinuations as to Projected Purchase of a Bank Site.

Controller Metz was angry yesterday, and again it was Borough President Color who had made him so. Mr. Coler had followed up his criticism of the city's real estate transactions, made in the Board of Estimate the day before, by referring to the projected purchase of the Brooklyn Bank site for the use of the Department of Charities. Mr. Coler also had referred to Mr. Metz as being connected with the bank.

"The statement concerning my connection with the Brooklyn Bank and the insinuation that I am interested in the purchase," said Mr. Metz, "is not a statement of facts. I never have been interested in the institution either as a stockholder or as a depositor, and was only in the place twice in my life, both times to look over the premises. Regarding the bank site and its purchase by the city, up to the present time it is the best site that has been submitted for the purposes of the Charities Department. There were three sites mentioned—Schermerhorn and Nevins Streets, the asking price for which is $75,000, and Schermerhorn Street and Boerum Place, $50,000.

"The Brooklyn Bank site is assessed at $74,000. The present asking price is $115,000 and the first asking price was $135,000. The real estate dealer reports that if the property can be purchased for $100,000 it will be cheaper than letting it go to condemnation. I consider it is the best site that has yet been submitted, and if nothing better appears I will recommend its purchase. I would be glad to have Mr. Coler's Committee of One Hundred look around Brooklyn and find a better site."

TRADE SCHOOL TO MOVE.

Institution for Girls Buys Building in East Twenty-third Street.

The Manhattan Trade School for Girls, which has outgrown its quarters at 233 West Fourteenth Street, has bought the six-story building 209 to 213 East Twenty-third Street, and will remove to it in the near future. This structure, which covers a frontage of 74 feet, was erected in 1895 as an office and loft building, upon the site of the old College of Pharmacy. For the last five years it has been used as an annex to the College of the City of New York, under a lease which will expire on May 1. The sale of the property to the Manhattan Trade School for Girls was negotiated by Ashforth & Co.

By acquiring this building, the school will be enabled not only to properly equip a permanent home, admirably adapted to its requirements, but largely to increase its usefulness by being able to accommodate a much larger number of pupils. Another advantage to be derived is that under the new conditions the cost of maintenance will be reduced one-half.

The school, which was opened in 1902, and is supported by voluntary contributions, occupies a unique position in several respects among the trade schools in the city, and is now furnishing free instruction in various lines of industrial training to about 150 girls.

The officers of the institution are: Miss Virginia Porter, President; William Jay Schieffelin, Treasurer; Prof. Mary Schenck Woolman, Director, and Miss Helen R. Hildreth, Executive Secretary.

STAND BEHIND YOUNG PRIEST.

Congregation of St. Mary's Against Vestry's Efforts to Remove Him.

Petitions signed by 360 of the members of St. Mary's Protestant Episcopal Parish, on Jersey City Heights, have been forwarded to Bishop Lines, asking him to permit the Rev. George M. Geisel to continue as rector of the church. The petitions are the response of the congregation to a letter from five of the church Vestrymen, asking the Bishop to remove the young priest because he has not been ordained.

The attendance at St. Mary's had been small, and the Rev. Mr. Geisel was called from his studies in a Western University to take hold. He has largely increased the membership, and made himself popular.

Some of the Vestrymen criticised some of his money-raising methods—particularly his Penny-a-Day Society, designed to bring in a cent a day from each church member to meet parish expenses. Neither did they approve of his gymnasium in the church basement for the young people. It is expected that there will be no further efforts made to remove the young priest.

HIS POODLE BACK.

Mr. Mettler Gets Results from the "Lost and Found" Column.

H. B. Mettler, who lives at 127 West Sixty-third Street, and is connected with Crocker & Andrews, steam-heating contractors at 34 West Twenty-fourth Street, inserted this advertisement in the "Lost and Found" column in yesterday's TIMES:

> LOST—French poodle; name Custard; regular clip; $25 reward. Mettler, 127 West 63d St.

At 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon an enthusiastic letter from Mr. Mettler was in THE TIMES office telling that Custard was back.

"I had given up all hopes of recovering the dog, as I had advertised in all the other leading papers with no results," his letter says. "I trust that others may be as successful as I."

From Errand Boy to Proprietor.

A loving cup was presented to Frank Sittig by the salesmen and department managers of R. C. Williams & Co., wholesale grocers, at the close of business yesterday, on his retirement from membership in the firm after thirty-six years' continuous service. A dinner followed. Mr. Sittig entered the employ of Williams & Co. as an errand boy.

NO COMPROMISE WITH USERS OF DYNAMITE

Housesmiths Are Without the Pale, Say Allied Iron Men.

VIOLENCE THE ONLY WEAPON

Long List of Outrages Cited to Show That the Union Should Never Be Recognized.

The continuance of the acts of violence by the striking housesmiths or their sympathizers is being looked upon by the Allied Iron Associations as the best of reasons why the Housesmiths' Union should not be recognized. The Strike Committee of the Allied Iron Associations has decided to keep a record of the outrages by striking housesmiths or their sympathizers since the present series of strikes first began.

The strikes began last Fall by the men employed by Post & McCord quitting work on the assumption that the firm belonged to the American Bridge Company, against which there was a National strike. This was followed by a general strike against the Allied Iron Associations to enforce a demand for an increase in wages from $4.50 to $5 a day. A statement issued yesterday on behalf of the Allied Iron Associations says, in part:

> From Nov. 28 of last year to March 1 of this year there have been sixty-eight hospital cases through non-union men being attacked, starting shortly after the strike against Post & McCord began. This is independent of hundreds of attacks on non-union men where the latter were able to defend themselves, some of these cases being rough and tumble fights. Since the general strike of the housesmiths for $5 a day was ordered men employed by Milliken Brothers, the Henkel Iron Works, the Hecla Iron Works, J. B. & J. M. Cornell, the George A. Fuller Company, and other firms in the places of strikers have been attacked. There have been five dynamite assaults and a number of attempts to wreck derricks. One non-union man named Jarstofer died several days ago from the effects of a blow from a lead pipe on Feb. 7, while he was employed by one of the firms against which the housesmiths are on strike.
>
> The first of these outrages to attract public attention was the wrecking of a derrick at the American Can Company's building, Tenth Avenue and Fourteenth Street, on Nov. 28, the iron work for which was being put up by Post & McCord. Later E. H. Scott, a special policeman at this building, was attacked by several strikers and shot, but not fatally. Among the recent outrages was an attempt on Jan. 9 to dynamite the Bliss Building on East Twenty-third Street, another Post & McCord contract, where a derrick was thrown down. The apparent attempt to dynamite this building, made last week, followed by the arrest of Guthrie, Moran, and Wier, is still fresh in the minds of the public. On Jan. 11 a non-union housesmith named John Krause was thrown into the Hudson River at Nineteenth Street, but was rescued, and a striker was held in $500 bail on charge of being concerned in the assault.
>
> There were many cases in which attempts were made to disable derricks, in which the culprits were never found out. At one of the Post & McCord contracts the ropes of a derrick were cut in such a way that the derrick would have fallen, causing great destruction of property and probably loss of life if it had been used before the cutting of the ropes had been discovered. An abortive attempt was made to wreck the bureau of the Allied Iron Associations at 7 East Fourteenth Street by means of a bomb, but it proved a failure, though some damage was done.

The statement says that, independent of these acts of violence, which are selected at random, there is a long list of attacks on non-union men which have not been published. Non-union men have been waylaid and beaten, it says, followed to their homes, and threatened with violence if they returned to work, the threats in some cases being made good.

The employers say that the recent attempt to dynamite the Bliss Building shows that the Housesmiths and Bridgemen's Union have learned no lesson from publicity. When the strike was ordered against Post & McCord on the assumption that the firm was a subsidiary member of the American Bridge Company, a member of the firm made affidavit to the contrary. All offers of arbitration were refused, and the union was finally expelled from the General Arbitration Board of the employers and the unions. The declaration of the open shop by the employers and the trade followed.

DYNAMITE FOR OPEN SHOP.

Attempt Made to Blow Up Barrett Manufacturing Company's Stables.

An attempt to blow up a stable owned by the Barrett Manufacturing Company, in Smith Street, Brooklyn, was made yesterday morning. One side of the stable was damaged and several windows of the concern's factory, adjoining, were blown in. This is the second attempt within a short time on property of this concern. The company runs open shop, and has been having trouble with some union men.

While the night watchman was in a remote part of the factory some one placed dynamite on a window sill of the stable. The explosion which followed brought Policeman Brown of the Hamilton Avenue Station to the scene. He arrested a young Italian whom he found behind a grocer's wagon about half a block away, with a burlap bag in his hand. In Butler Street Court the prisoner said he was Giulo Ravola of 8 Dennett Place, and insisted that he merely had been picking rags. He was held for examination on a charge of vagrancy.

PRIVATE HOSPITALS WARNED.

Coroners Say the Transfer of Dying Patients Must Stop.

At a meeting of the Manhattan Board of Coroners yesterday, called by the President, Julius Harburger, this resolution was unanimously adopted:

> Whereas, It has come to the notice of the Board of Coroners of the Borough of Manhattan that Mrs. Jeanne Cheno of 142 West Thirtieth Street died in an ambulance of the New York Hospital while being taken to Bellevue Hospital; and
>
> Whereas, The Board of Coroners of the Borough of Manhattan emphatically protest against the inhuman action of the Superintendents of certain hospitals in the borough in removing patients who are in a dying condition to Bellevue and other charitable institutions; and as we are informed that this pernicious practice is done for the purpose of keeping down the death rate of these institutions; therefore be it
>
> Resolved, That this is in violation of all principles of justice and humanity, and meets with our disapproval. That we not only object, but protest, and ask that all of the persons in charge of hospitals take measures at once and instruct the physicians in charge of patients not to remove them to other hospitals when conditions are such as to endanger the lives of the patients.

The board further resolves that if this matter is disregarded it will take stringent measures to bring the violators to justice.

THIEF AT BASKET BALL GAME.

Gets $13 from the Referee, an Overcoat and Scarfpins.

While the basket ball game between the "Poly Prep" and Boys' High School teams was in progress yesterday in the armory of the Second Signal Corps, in Dean Street, Brooklyn, some one went through the locker room where the athletes had left their street clothes and took what money was in the pockets. The thief also got some jewelry, mostly scarfpins. Mr. Lochmuller, who refereed the game, lost $13, and Randall, one of the "Poly Prep" guards, missed his overcoat.

Sealed Verdict in Brady Divorce.

It was said yesterday that the jury which has been trying the third suit of Mrs. Sadie Singer Brady, granddaughter of the inventor of the sewing machine, for absolute divorce from her husband, Daniel M. Brady, before Justice Blanchard, had failed to agree. A sealed verdict will be returned to-morrow. The other two suits ended in disagreements.

PUTS BLAME ON "BARTY."

Tillbury Says He Was Innocent in Plot to Rob Banker Moore.

Henry Tillsbury, the ticket speculator, arrested on Wednesday after Robert R. Moore, President of the New Amsterdam National Bank, had gone to the Hotel Astor in response to a decoy letter to which the signature of Supt. John Cornish of the Pinkerton Detective Agency had been forged, was held in $2,000 bail for the Grand Jury on a charge of forgery in the third degree, after a hearing in the Jefferson Market Court yesterday.

Supt. Cornish, who is the complaining witness, swore that he had not written or signed the letter. Mr. Moore testified that Tillsbury had brought him the letter. He said he believed that the purpose of the scheme was to rob or blackmail him.

Tillsbury stuck to his story that he had written the letter at the dictation of a man named "Barty."

"I am a victim, that's all," Tillsbury told the Magistrate, "and I was a fool to be mixed up in this. I thought 'Barty' was the goods and knew this man and probably wished to talk business with him. But when I came to the hotel he had disappeared, and then I was arrested."

ACCUSER JULIAN ARRESTED.

He Says It's Revenge for His Charges of Jury Tampering.

Louis A. Julian, a former investigator employed by the law department of the Metropolitan Street Railway Company, who recently charged that the company had tampered with juries in damage cases, was arrested yesterday on a complaint made by General Attorney James L. Quackenbush of the New York City Railway Company.

Julian is charged with violation of Section 254 of the Penal Code, which makes it a misdemeanor to purposely furnish false information to a newspaper or its representatives. He was arraigned in the Tombs Court and was paroled until Monday by Magistrate Steinert.

Julian asserted that the prosecution was the direct result of his efforts to expose the doings of the railway company. Mr. Quackenbush said that this was only one of several cases which would be brought "to stop a campaign of mudslinging and vilification carried on against the company."

GIRL HELD BARBER'S CHAIR.

She Had a Shampoo and Facial Massage—Men Waiting Went Unshaved.

When the French liner La Lorraine docked yesterday afternoon one of the first of the saloon passengers to come ashore was a young Frenchwoman, who, as she came down the gangplank, was glowered at by about half a dozen men passengers, every one of whom needed a shave.

Later the cause of the young woman's unpopularity became known. Just before the liner reached port the young woman had gone into the barber's shop, climbed into the chair, and ordered a shampoo. When the barber had finished this and had dried her hair she ordered a facial massage. The Lorraine was almost docked when the barber shouted "Next."

It was then too late for all the men passengers to be accommodated, and the angry six were the ones that got left.

LEFT $1 FOR HER SON.

Hadn't Seen Him Much for Ten Years, Said Mrs. Hester H. Collins.

Mrs. Hester H. Collins, who died on Feb. 24 last, left the bulk of her $10,000 estate to her daughter, Mrs. Hessie Collins Lord, whom she named as executrix. To her daughter, Mrs. Alice R. Putraw, "who gave me no help or assistance," she left $5; to her son, Luther H. Springer of 518 Manhattan Avenue, whom I have seen but very little during the last ten years, nor was he of any help or assistance to me, but the cause of lots of trouble," she bequeathed $1 "and a cane in my house called among the family 'Jack the Ripper.'"

Mrs. Collins died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Putraw, 2,186 Anthony Avenue, the Bronx. Mrs. Putraw and Mr. Springer objected to the will being admitted to probate, alleging that the instrument was illegal and void, and that their mother was of unsound mind when she executed it on Dec. 15 last.

MOSS PRODS THE RICH.

Says Mrs. C. K. G. Billings Must Appear Against Alleged Swindler.

When Arthur Ester was arraigned yesterday before Magistrate Moss, in the Yorkville Court, charged with having fraudulently obtained a subscription from Mrs. C. K. G. Billings of 673 Fifth Avenue for the benefit of a bogus telegraphers' association, the Magistrate inquired why Mrs. Billings was not present to offer the complaint.

"She is a rich lady," replied Detective Conroy. "She is the wife of the well-known horseman, Mr. Billings of Fifth Avenue. You know how difficult it is to get these rich people to come to court to make a complaint."

"I'll see that she comes here," snapped the Magistrate. "What diference does it make whether the complainant is rich or poor? The rich have no more right to stay away than any one else. I instruct you to produce her in court, and if she refuses to come I'll issue a subpoena for her attendance."

Later the Magistrate gave the detective the subpoena, and then held Ester in $1,000 bail for examination to-morrow morning. Ester said he lived at Woodmere, L. I., and had a wife and child.

TO APPEAL LEWISOHN CASE.

Mrs. Henry, a Daughter, Objects to Proposed Division of Estate.

Four of the nine children of the late Leonard Lewisohn of this city, who died in London, England, on March 5, 1902, have been engaged in a legal controversy for some time over $375,000. Mr. Lewisohn left an estate valued at $11,000,000. The litigants are Mrs. Julia Henry of London, on the one hand, and her brothers, Frederick, Walter, and Oscar, on the other.

A few weeks before his death Mr. Lewisohn had completed all the arrangements of a partnership between himself and the three sons in the copper business. He contributed $4,500,000 and gave each of the sons $100,000 to put in the business. In addition he lent to each of them $125,000, and gave orders that each was to have $15,000 a year as spending money independent of these amounts.

The copartnership had scarcely been completed when Mr. Lewisohn went abroad and died. When his will was read it was learned that he had divided his fortune among his children, with the explanation that the amounts advanced to the sons in his lifetime were to be regarded as presents, and were not to be deducted from the sons' portions when the estate was partitioned.

The executors found that the sums of $125,000 were entered in Mr. Lewisohn's private ledger as loans to the three sons, and Mrs. Henry, their sister, contended that, as these amounts were lent, it was intended that they should be repaid from the profits of the business.

Surrogate Fitzgerald appointed Robert E. Deyo as referee to make an investigation. He reported in favor of the sons. Mrs. Henry excepts to the referee's report through her counsel, Lord & Day, and will appeal.

DR. QUACKENBOS GIVES A SOUL-TRAVELING PARTY

Thinks Anna Fortwangler the Champion Soul Traveler.

HER DOINGS UNDER HYPNOSIS

She Described Mme. Serena as Marguerite in "Faust" Without Seeing Her.

There was forwarded yesterday to the London Psychical Research Society a report that tells of clairvoyant power shown by Anna Fortwangler at a seance held Wednesday evening at the residence of the leader of the "soul science" cult in this country, Dr. John D. Quackenbos. It was the first time that a third person had attempted to come between the hypnotist and his subject.

That the souls of the living can travel independently is the contention of Dr. Quackenbos and his followers. In Anna Fortwangler Dr. Quackenbos thinks he has demonstrated that under suggestion from the person in touch with the "soul mind" of a hypnotized person, the soul of the latter can be made to annihilate time and space, to see and record as clearly and accurately as the objective mind.

Anna Fortwangler is a healthy, somewhat florid young woman of 23. She came to this country from the south of Germany little more than a year ago. Hers is wholly an untutored, unlettered mind, and she can speak or understand very little English. A year ago she was a servant, dying by inches, says Dr. Quackenbos, of home sickness. Gustav A. Gayer discovered her in his brother's family in this city. Mr. Gayer is a student of hypnotism and a member of the London Society of Psychical Research. He has had considerable experience in curing boys of the cigarette habit by suggestive hypnotism. He began experimenting while a Central Office detective under Police Commissioner Roosevelt. Out of sympathy for his brother's servant he hypnotized her one day and discovered that she had uncommon psychic power.

At the "soul traveling" party in Dr. Quackenbos's study Anna Fortwangler sat in an easy chair to close her eyes at Mr Gayer's bidding, her body becoming as lifeless as a wooden automaton. Her response to the hypnotist was almost instant. Then came experiments with most of which the lay world is familiar. Smelling salts so strong that every guest shrank from inhaling them closer than at arm's length were put to the girl's nostrils without apparent effect upon her.

Under the suggestion that it was a fragrant rose she inhaled it with apparent delight. Likewise she swallowed an uncoated strychnine tablet under the hypnotist's suggestion that it was a delicious sweet. While still in a reclining position her arms were extended and across them was laid a heavy library chair. The arms which under normal conditions would probably have broken under the weight, held the burden as easily as if it had been a feather.

The hypnotist graphically described to the young woman an old world cathedral. "I want you to go to the foot of the crucifix, kneel down and say your prayers," said Mr. Gayer then.

The subject's eyes opened. She rose and walked a few steps devoutly. Then she dropped upon her knees. Her lips moved as if in prayer. She made a sign of the cross on her breast, rose with the same exalted expression on her naturally dull face, and again fell into the catalyptic state.

More than an hour had been consumed in these and similar tests which are well known to students of "soul science" when a young woman in the front row of spectators said:

"I would like to be put en rapport with Anna."

It was Mme. Séréna, the young Bohemian singer, who spoke.

"I will take hold of her hand," said she, "so there will be no break in the current. Tell her to answer my questions."

Anna was then formally introduced in what the "soul scientists" call her "sub mind," to Mme. Séréna, and instructed to answer her queries.

"Are you in sympathy with me? Do you like me?" said the singer.

"Yes," said the girl.

"Now, Anna," said Mme. Séréna impressively, "I want you to tell me what I do? What is my work, my profession?"

"You don't work," said the girl. "You sing. You're a singer."

"Think hard, very hard, Anna, and see if you can tell me what I sang last in public."

There was a prolonged pause.

"You haven't dark hair any more," the girl began at length. "I see you in a great big place, but your hair is blonde. It's parted in the middle, and two long braids are down your back. Your dress isn't black. It's red and short."

"My last public appearance," Mme. Séréna explained, "was at Denver, in January. I sang Marguerite in 'Faust,' and in the second act wore a short red skirt."

"Anna is very susceptible to music," said Mr. Gayer. "If you will sing something in German with two verses I will waken her at the beginning of the second verse."

Mme. Séréna went to the piano and sang a German folk song. At the beginning of the second verse a smile flitted across the girl's face. With her hand she rubbed her eyes. She had awakened.

"Of Anna Fortwangler's possibilities it is idle to conjecture," said Dr. Quackenbos. "She has not been subjected to systematic test. This is only the seventeenth time she has been hypnotized during a period of about thirteen months. The experiments have been made at wide intervals. In the subliminal as well as in the objective state of the mind, skill comes only by practice.

"Mrs. Piper, for instance, has probably been tested a thousand times to Anna's once, and yet this girl has already done things that Mrs. Piper has failed in. Somnambulism, mind reading, telepathy explains some of it, but there is much for which there is yet no explanation. That her sleep is not feigned has been proved by firing at her ear a revolver loaded with two blank cartridges. She never budged a hair's breadth."

While Dr. Quackenbos's theories and experiments are known to German "soul scientists," the play-going public is learning of him through a drama presented the past Summer at Berlin and Stuttgart in which the leading character is "Dr. Quackenbos, the American Hypnotist."

SAVE THE CATSKILL WATERS.

Not Needed for Staten Island and Long Island, Says Frank Moss.

Frank Moss, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the City Vigilance League, has written to the State Water Commission concerning the water supplies of Long Island and Staten Island.

"We find," he says, "the existence of the great strata of underground water throughout Long Island, wherein is stored naturally the rainfall of the island. Prof. Burr has expressed himself strongly on the usefulness of this supply, which is immense, excellent, and cheaply obtainable. The same conditions exist on Staten Island.

"The interests of New York State lie in saving the Catskill water for the benefit and for the natural beautifying of the Catskill Mountain region."

RUMOR OF FLAT REFUSAL TO ANTHRACITE MINERS

Operators Said to Have Negatived All Demands.

MITCHELL WILL NOT TALK

Postpones His Departure for Indianapolis, However—Miners' Committee Will Meet This Morning.

Rumors, not traceable to any definite source, were widespread yesterday that the answer of the anthracite operators' committee of seven to the demands of the anthracite mine workers had been sent to President Mitchell, and that all the demands of the men are refused. There was nothing in the answer, it was said, however, which made it impossible for the anthracite operators' and miners' subcommittees of seven to meet again.

President Mitchell would not say whether he had received the answer or not. He added that if he had received it he would not make it public at this time. There was a noticeable air of excitement among the members of the sub-committee who were still in the city, however, and Mitchell, who was to have started last night for Indianapolis, where he will preside at the convention of the United Mine Workers beginning Thursday, announced that he would not leave until to-day, when he will go with the other officers of the union on the train leaving Jersey City at 10:55 A. M.

He called a hurried meeting of his committee last evening. Those members in town were William H. Dettrey, President of District 7, and John Fahy and George Hartlein, President and Secretary, respectively, of District 9. Mitchell is a member of the committee.

Hartlein was not at the Ashland House, and Dettrey went out to find him. He returned unsuccessful in about two hours, and the meeting was postponed until 9:55 A. M. to-day. It will be necessarily short, as all four will have to leave for Indianapolis an hour later.

STRONG VOTE FOR DOLAN.

Enemies of Pittsburg Miners' President Defeated in Elections.

PITTSBURG, March 10.—That Patrick Dolan, President of District No. 5, United Mine Workers of America, will go to the international convention with a strong support from his own district is shown in the returns of the election of candidates by the local unions.

The anti-Dolan faction in the district has been defeated in several instances, and the new delegates being elected by the local unions reflect the work of friends of the defiant President. It was learned to-day that of the total number of delegates elected up to this time fully two-thirds are men who were not in attendance at the last convention.

The most surprising development of the elections thus far held is the defeat of James Watchorn by his local at California, Penn., for delegate to Indianapolis. At the recent convention in Pittsburg Watchorn was the floor leader of the Dolan opposition. He has arranged to go to the National Convention as delegate from some other local, and will continue to fight against Dolan there.

BRADY'S PREPAID APPEAL WON

Begged 'Em, in 80 Wired Words, Not to Burlesque His Curtain Speech.

Otis Harlan was to have made a "Billy Brady" curtain speech after the second act of "The Vanderbilt Cup," at the Broadway Theatre last night. But he didn't.

About 8 o'clock George Tyler, manager of "The Vanderbilt Cup," received a prepaid eighty-word telegram from Mr. Brady, who is now in St. Louis, begging him not to let Mr. Harlan make his talk. Here are twenty-seven of Mr. Brady's eighty words:

"I understand you are going to cast ridicule at my efforts. This would be very unfortunate for me, as I consider that my fight has been won."

Mr. Tyler then sent back word that Mr. Brady's feelings would be spared.

FIGHT OVER A DEAD WOMAN.

Lawyer and Relatives Seek to Get Miss Barker's Body—She Left $40,000.

There was a squabble in the Coroners' office in Brooklyn yesterday over the burial of Miss Edith Barker, an aged and wealthy spinster, who died at her home, 397 First Street, on Friday. Two nieces and a cousin of the dead woman called at the Coroners' office and asked for a permit for an undertaker named Riker to remove the body.

While the permit was being made out, Lawyer Charles S. Taber walked in with an undertaker named Henderson. He demanded the permit, as he was named as executor in Miss Barker's will. He showed a copy of the will. Chief Clerk McGuinness gave him the permit.

Miss Barker, who was 70 years old and lived alone, left an estate worth $40,000.

Mrs. Astor Sailed with a Headache.

Just before the Cunarder Carmania sailed for Liverpool yesterday afternoon a report spread on the pier that Mrs. Astor, who was among the passengers, was ill in her stateroom. It was explained that her indisposition was nothing more than headache.

Destitute Seamen Going Home.

Fourteen destitute seamen, members of the crew of the British sealing schooner Enterprise when that vessel was burned in the harbor of Rio Janeiro several weeks ago, arrived here on the steamship Titian yesterday. They lost the cargo of sealskins that represented the season's work of the officers and crew. They will be sent home by the British Consul General.

Monmouth Beach Club to be Sold.

LONG BRANCH, March 10.—The Monmouth Beach Country Club's property is to be sold at Sheriff's sale on March 13. After the sale it is intended to reorganize and run the club under new management. It was closed last season, and has been a losing investment. Col. William Barbour is its President.

THE JEWS OF NEW YORK ARE CELEBRATING PURIM

Holiday Commemorates Escape from Persian Massacre.

MUCH GAYETY ATTENDS IT

Old Customs Are Followed at Synagogue Services, and Many Gifts to the Poor Are Made.

When the stars began to peep out last night the fourteenth day of the Hebrew month Adar really began, and that begins the two-day celebration of Purim, which of all the Jewish holidays is the occasion for the most merrymaking. Jewish children all over the world, therefore, and many older folk, too, for that matter, have been eagerly awaiting the coming of this day.

The Book of Esther tells what the feast of Purim is. It celebrates the deliverance of the Jews of all Persia from a massacre with which they were threatened in the days of Ahasuerus. Haman, the King's Prime Minister, wanted the Jews killed. Through the good Queen Esther, who had been but a short time the consort of the King, the Jews were saved, and the death that Haman would have put on them was put upon him and his sons, so that they were hanged upon the gallows.

Esther would not intercede for the Jews unless they fasted, and so the day before the feast of Purim begins it is the custom to fast. All the old customs connected with this feast, as with others, are adhered to with varying fidelity in different parts of the world. Old World Jews, many of these on the east side of New York, especially those that have newly arrived, and the most orthodox everywhere, follow the lines of the feast in all its details.

The chief feature of the synagogue services is the reading of the Book of Esther not from the Old Testament as printed in a book, but fro ma parchment scroll called the Megillah, where the words are carefull ywritten on the skin of a clean animal with good ink. The names of Haman's sons are written on separate lines, just one name to a line. Whenever in the chanting the reader or chazan comes to Haman's name the younger members of the congregation stamp their feet and whirl rattletraps and use various noise-producing instruments to drown out the sound of the obnoxious name. Of course the sexton and the older members of the congregation pretend to put down that demonstration, but they expect little success. They would be both surprised and disappointed if they were successful.

At the evening Purim service every worshipper puts in a plate his contribution to charity. The services of the evening are repeated the following morning. On that day it is commanded in the Book of Esther not only to make one's own heart glad, but also to make others happy, and it is the custom for families to interchange gifts. These are principally wines and sweetmeats, and many a poor Jewish family receives money in the hampers that come from richer families.

The S'uda feast is the climax of the celebration. It begins at twilight and lasts usually until late in the evening. Much preparation is made for this feast. The Jewish housewife prides herself on its success, as it is the occasion for family reunions.

Many plans have been made this year for the Purim celebration in New York. Services were held last night in the West End Synagogue, and to-day there will be an entertainment for the Sunday school children in the synagogue at Amsterdam Avenue and Eighty-second Street.

This afternoon Purim celebrations will be held by the Hebrew School and Sunday School of the Congregation Beth Israel Bikur Cholim in the vestry room of the synagogue at Lexington Avenue and Seventy-second Street.

The Young Men's Hebrew Association will have its Purim entertainment to-morrow night in the auditorium of the association, at Lexington Avenue and Ninety-second Street. It will be under the auspices of the Bible class this year.

The Young Men's and Young Ladies' Auxiliary of the Consumptives' Sanitarium Society of Denver, Col., will give a bazaar and ball to-night at the Grand Central Palace.

A Purim entertainment will be given this afternoon in Astoria Hall, East Fourth Street, near Second Avenue, to the 150 children of the Religious School conducted by the Jewish Endeavor Society.

The pupils of the Lucas religious classes will march from their respective synagogues to the auditorium of the Educational Alliance this afternoon. Purim hymns and addresses and the like will precede the regular performance of "Snow White."

At the house dinner that is to be given Monday evening for the Faculty, students, Directors, and officers, of the Jewish Theological Seminary of America, in 123d Street, near Broadway, President Solomon Schechter, Louis Marshall, and one or two other Directors will deliver addresses.

The annual ball to be given at Madison Square Garden Wednesday night by the authorities of the Beth Israel Hospital promises to be a successful and dignified affair.

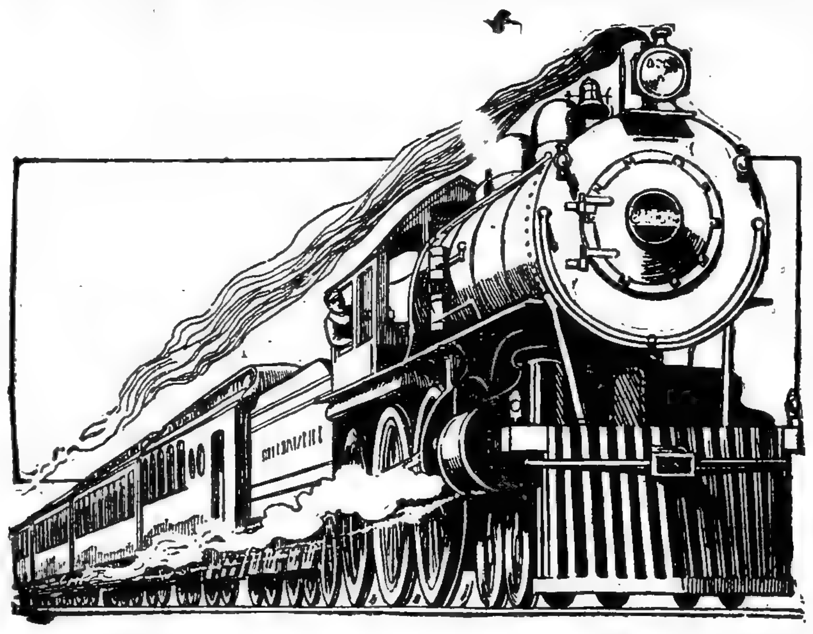
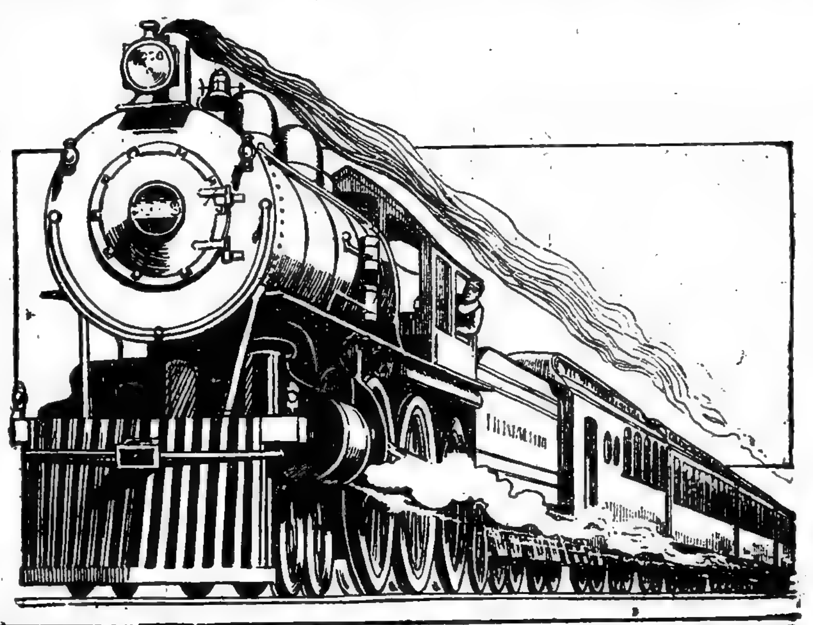
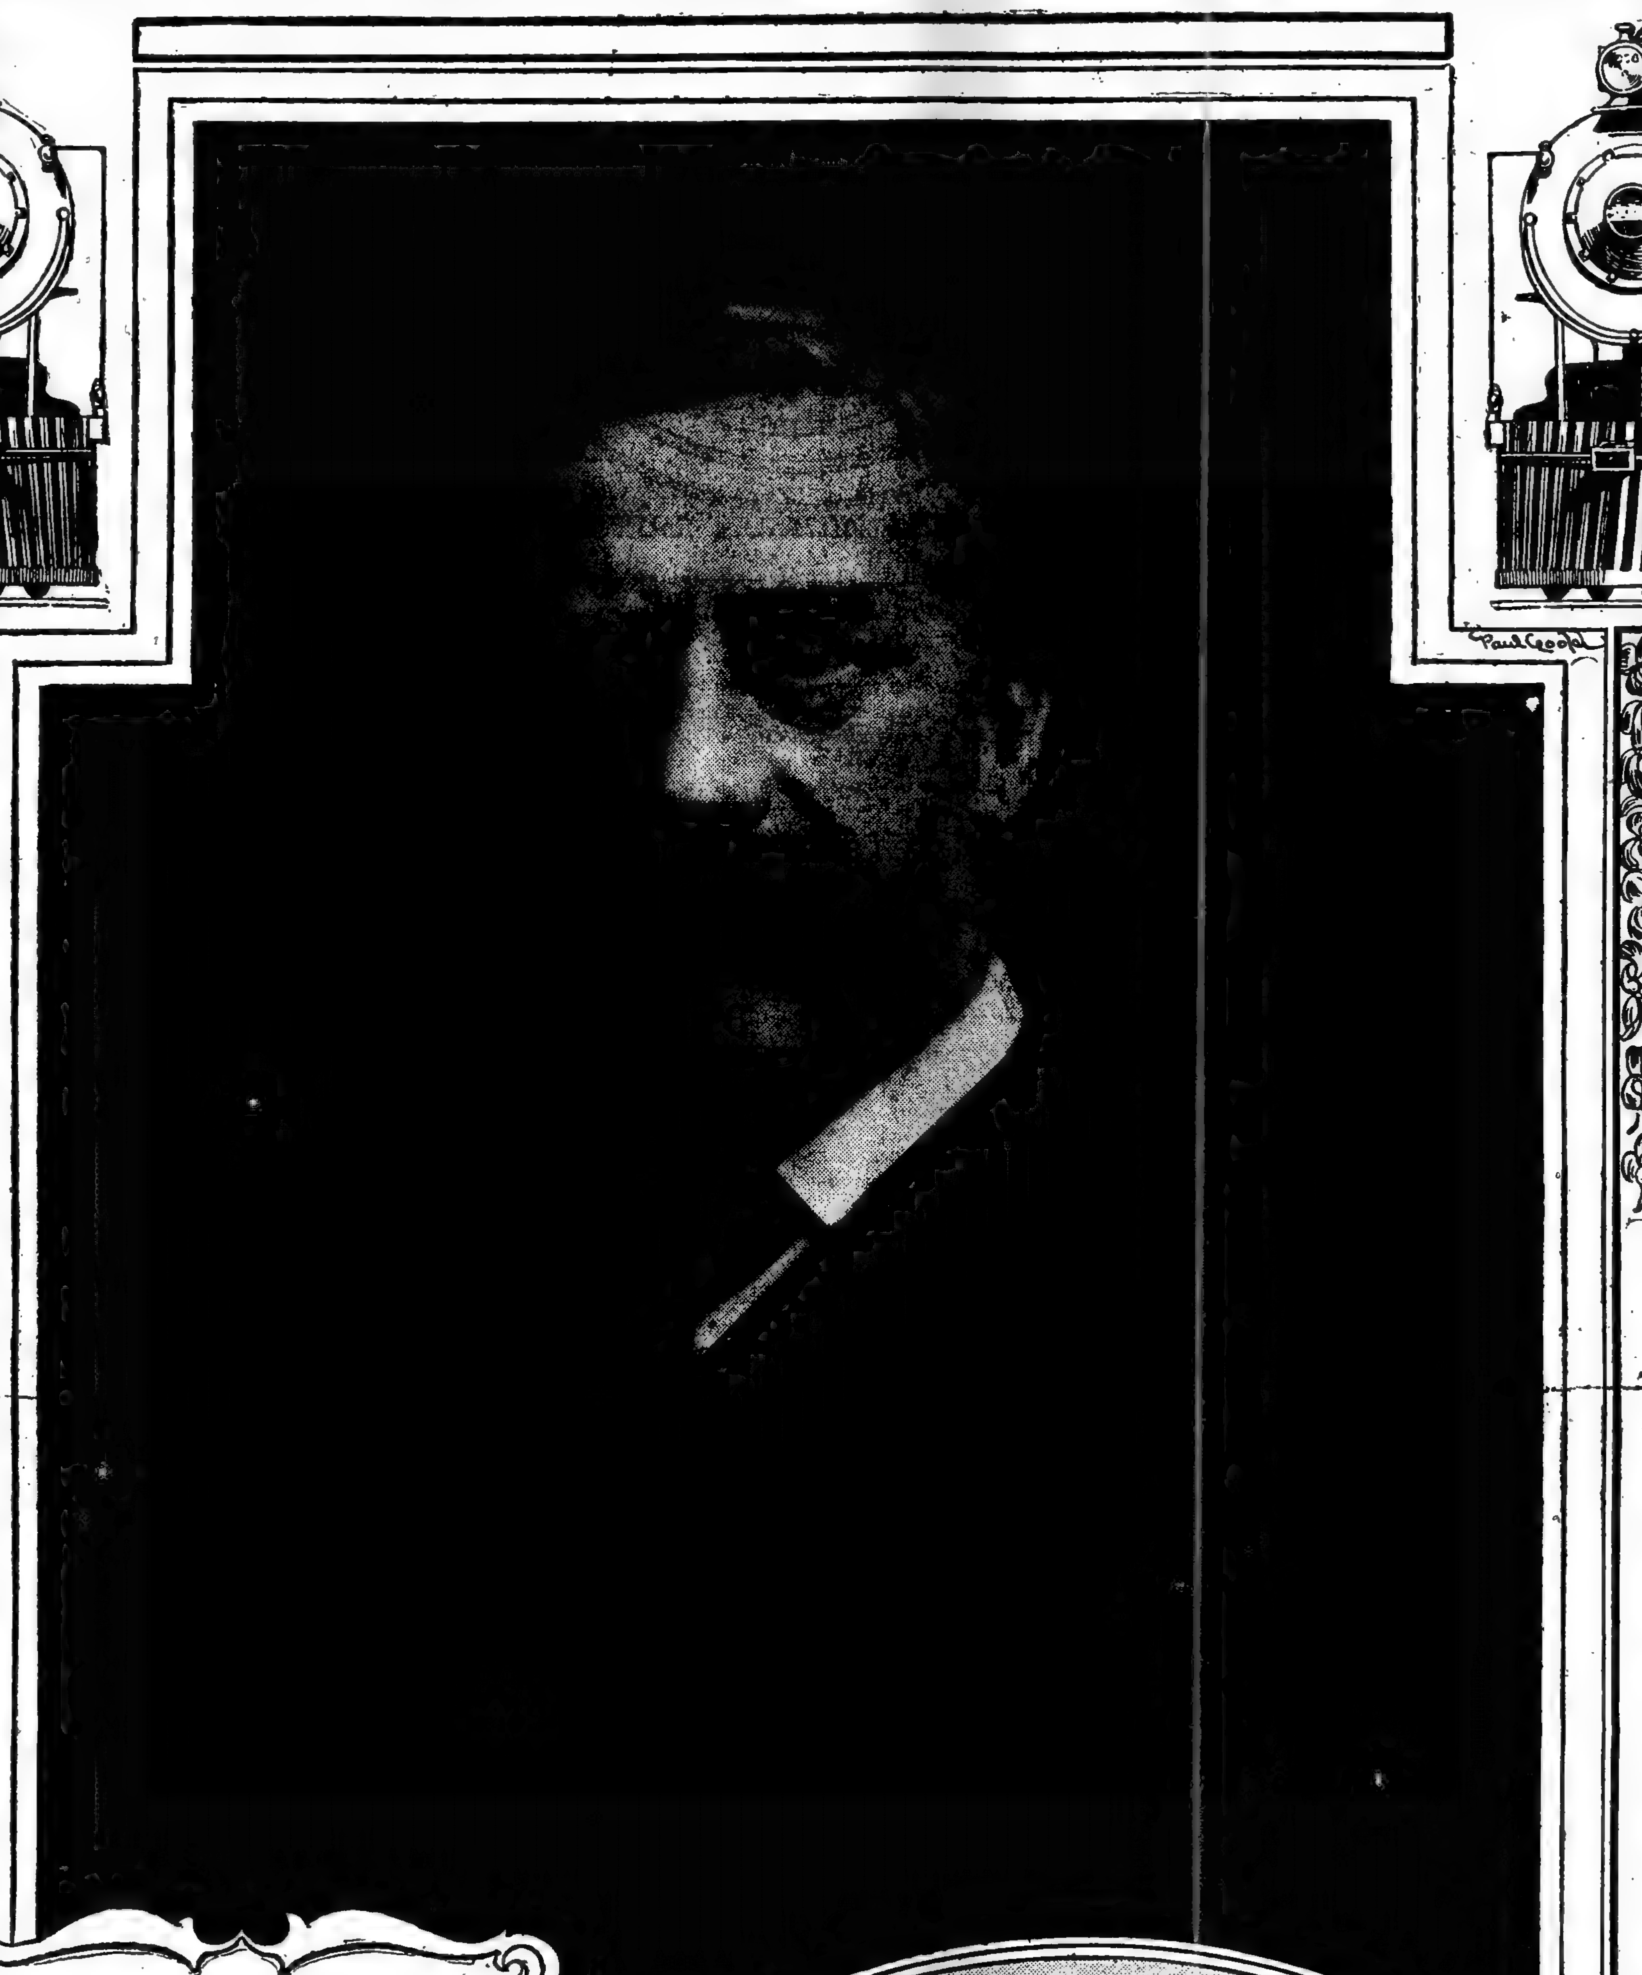
STUYVESANT FISH, POLICY HOLDERS' CHAMPION

THE MAN TO WHOM HUNDREDS OF THOUSANDS ARE INTRUSTING THEIR INTERESTS.







STUYVESANT FISH

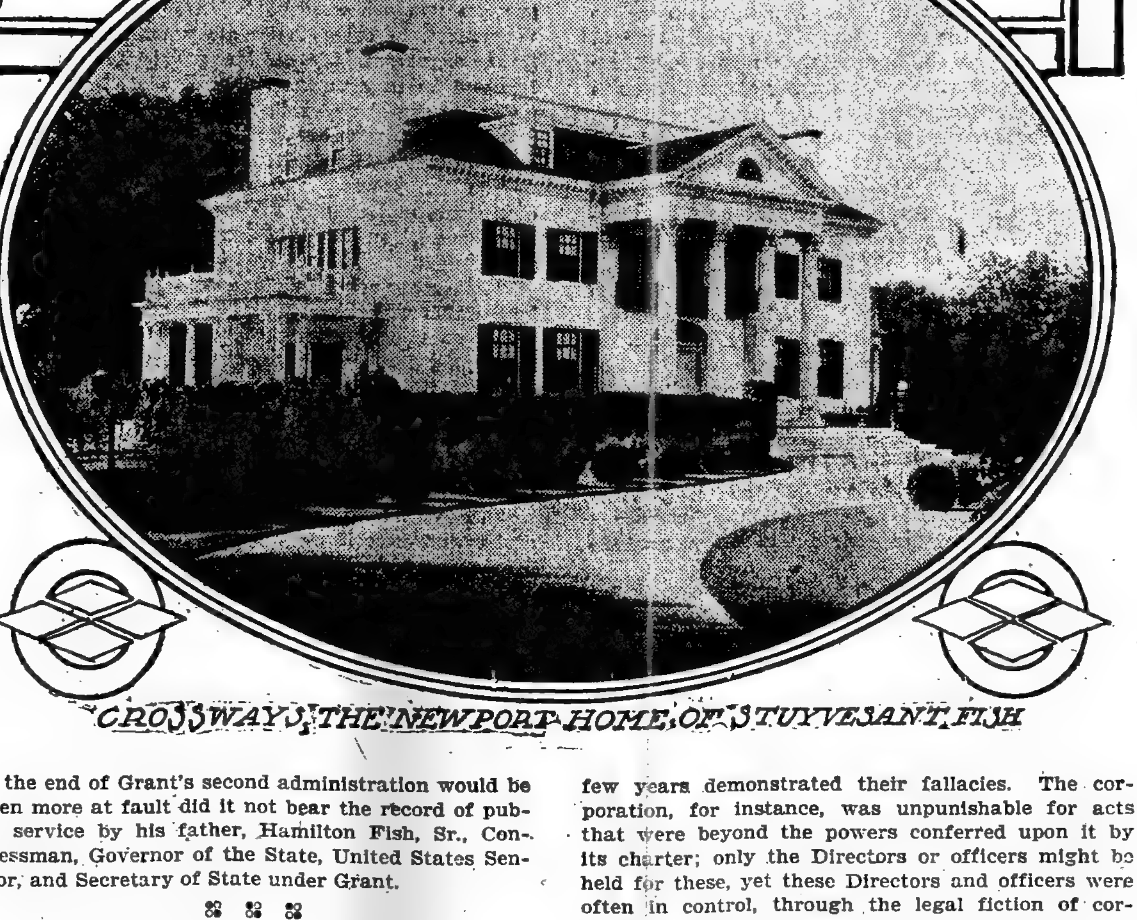
ILLINOIS CENTRAL SYSTEM



CROSSWAYS, THE NEWPORT HOME OF STUYVESANT FISH

What Mr. Fish Has Done to Win the Confidence of His Fellow-Citizens—A Man Whom Inherited and Acquired Wealth Has Not Spoiled—Good Example of a Millionaire Workingman.

WHAT manner of man is this to whom the million policy holders of two great life insurance corporations are turning with the plea that he lead them into the effective exercise of their new-found rights?

People who know him make the plain reply: "Stuyvesant Fish." The name appears its own sufficient answer to the Nation's question. It is deemed a name to conjure by; so it has been on a thousand tongues all Winter, and any explanation of the phenomenon has seemed out of place when the known events of the past five months told so forcibly their own story of the man and his doings.

Yet there is always a desire to look behind the curtain that portrays the record of things done and see the worker at his task. Sometimes there is an inspiration in this, when it has appeared that great men doing great things rightly are but following out with their clearer vision and more potent strength the processes laid down to govern the humbler undertakings of life. And if they succeed there is also the teaching that success in itself is not to be attributed to special advantage, which means the injury of one for the profit of another. Will Stuyvesant Fish succeed, if he undertakes, as all believe that he will, the cause of the life insurance policy holders? Curiously enough, it is for the million policy holders themselves to answer that question.

Their query, therefore, regarding the personality of the man who occupies the centre of the life insurance stage to-day is natural enough. Perhaps the briefest description of him comes from the lips of one who has been his close associate in many a trying situation:

"He's built on the Abe Lincoln type."

And, physically, there is a good deal to substantiate the declaration. A giant frame, loosely knit, yet offering visual evidence of tremendous strength, is the proper support for a head in which strength is the characteristic of every feature. But there is nothing to suggest the physical or mental bully; on the contrary, frank gray eyes look from under the heavy lashes with an expression that seems to mean a desire to believe in the decency and squareness and trustworthiness of mankind. There are even those who say that Stuyvesant Fish has always had too great a disposition to trust his fellow-men; but that is another story. The important fact for present purposes is that Wall Street, land of rumor, has not, in the five months in which he has been the big figure in a great financial upheaval, produced any one able to point to the fellow who wouldn't trust Stuyvesant Fish. And this has been the history of the case for a generation. That is why folks conjure by his name.

But the likeness to the "Abe Lincoln type" doesn't stop merely with physical characteristics and the power to inspire confidence. Stuyvesant Fish thinks straight to the point—as he sees it; he talks with equal directness and simplicity. There is no reason for him to becloud his conversation with ambiguous and unnecessary phrase, for he is perfectly willing that one should see right through his words into his process of thought and decide to agree or disagree on that basis and none other. Truly it is a rare trait for a man whose life has been spent in Wall Street. But it serves to explain a good many things.

Furthermore, he has great confidence in the fundamental verities. If a thing is true, it remains true in spite of the degrees of shading that Wall Street is in the habit of using, and if it is false, its falsity is not susceptible to a toning-down process, is not measured by degrees. He also believes that truth and falsity make themselves self-evident in the long run, however humans may fuss about to keep them covered up. It was not so very long ago that certain things had happened which established absolutely a contention that he had stood for in the face of persistent misrepresentation. A friend called on him to rejoice a bit and to get the fresh supply of courage that may be drawn from such a man under such conditions. Stuyvesant Fish's eye kindled, and there was a suspicion of a smile about his lips as he said with apparent seriousness:

"I have always been a strong believer in the soundness of Daniel Webster's assertion that you can invariably prove a fact."

Here was the fountain head of courage. Stuyvesant Fish didn't supply the courage itself, he simply pointed the way to the real source, which depended upon a finite being for its origin or continuation. "I like a man with four-o'clock-in-the-morning courage," he said one time, when various people were under discussion with reference to a certain large undertaking. Which meant that he liked a man who could wake up in the dark and alone, and face without fear the unpleasant fact that had been confronting him the night before and was going to fill his vision when he took up the work of a new day.

And this is the kind of courage that is in the man. If there is an unpleasant fact to face he wants to look it all over away out in some place where it can have his undivided attention; then, having examined it as if it were his best friend, it is his way to apply it to its surroundings and see how the whole proposition shapes up. Having done this, he is ready to go into the board meeting or the conference room and lay bare his conclusions and the way he has reached them, for other men to examine and test by whatever standards they may be able to produce.

Stuyvesant Fish's simplicity of life, which is another characteristic of the "Abe Lincoln type," helps this method of doing things. If another story may be pardoned—for after all it is by stories that we come to know most people—there was a time not long ago when a pretty serious question of large public importance was put up to him for decision. It was on Friday, and someone asked him when he would announce what he had determined to do.

⁂

"I used to have a lawyer down South," said Stuyvesant Fish, "who when I had a knotty problem for him would say to me, 'Stuyv,' he'd say, 'just you let me go out in my back lot over Sunday and sit on a good pine log and chew tobacco over this.' Now, I don't chew tobacco, but I'm going up on my farm over Sunday and go out in the back lot and do a mighty lot of thinking on this thing before I make up my mind."

He did, and the decision was one that has brought him the thanks of people who know what true public service is. The "farm," of course, was the beautiful Fish estate at Garrison, just across the Hudson from West Point, and while it does not appear in just what one of the many hundred acres was located the particular "back lot" in question, we may perhaps be able to dispense with that historical detail in getting the point of the incident.

Aside from the personality of the man, however, there is abundant reason why people should be turning to Stuyvesant Fish at this time with the confidence that he will accept the further call to public service in their behalf. The Fishes and the Stuyvesants, the two historic New York families from which he drew his name, have been intimately associated with the affairs of this town for a century. No record of New York in Revolutionary times would be complete without some account of the doings of Col. Nicholas Fish, Stuyvesant Fish's grandfather, and the political history of the country from a decade before the opening of the civil war down to the end of Grant's second administration would be even more at fault did it not bear the record of public service by his father, Hamilton Fish, Sr., Congressman, Governor of the State, United States Senator, and Secretary of State under Grant.

In those days the large opportunities in public life were mostly political. Of late years the field has broadened, so that, without restricting the opportunity for political service, there has been developed the opening for the man who would lead the economic or financial thought of the Nation. The country's growth is, of course, primarily responsible for this, and for the opportunity of sound financial leadership in the limited application of the word, the development of corporate life in America may, perhaps, be held accountable. It requires the holding of no brief for or against any scheme of corporate management or particular corporate enterprise to concede that problems of the most serious nature have arisen, the roots of which are so extensive that they spread out through very many departments of the National life.

The creation of a legal person known as a corporation started the development of a theory of business leading right down by easy and apparently natural steps to conclusions that have been accepted as sound until the disclosures of the past few years demonstrated their fallacies. The corporation, for instance, was unpunishable for acts that were beyond the powers conferred upon it by its charter; only the Directors or officers might be held for these, yet these Directors and officers were often in control, through the legal fiction of corporate personality, of power to safeguard themselves from the consequences of their acts which no individual, however mighty, could possibly have wielded. To some extent also administrations have been self-perpetuating, so far as the stockholders, the real parties in interest, were concerned, and perhaps naturally have come to regard their continuance in power as essential to the right being of the corporation itself and of all its members. Not far from this position was that taken by the old managements of the great life insurance companies of this town.

⁂

Let us see what qualities Stuyvesant Fish has displayed for leadership against this conception of corporate existence. In a recent address on "Economy" to the Louisville Board of Trade, he advocated a rigid restriction of numbers in the Directorates of great financial institutions so as to localize the responsibility, and then concluded:

"In the household, in the State, in the corporations, it is we, who, as bondholders, as taxpayers, and as stockholders, provide the wherewithal, that suffer because we have set others to rule over us without holding them to a strict accountability for the discharge of their trust, which the common law and common sense alike demand. Indeed things have come to such a pass that it is now considered indecorous and ill-bred for us, the many, to even discuss, much less correct, the shortcomings of the elect few. Such was neither the theory nor the practice on which our forefathers ordered the economy of the Republic."

"And so," said Mr. Fish finally, "without going the length of those who, from motives of personal vanity or of personal gain, are so freely preaching and writing vain doctrine, let me ask you to join with all our intelligent and conservative fellow-countrymen in demanding sound, patient, and discriminating economy."

But it will be said that he who speaks thus of being among the "many" as apart from the "elect few" is the President of a great railroad system, a man born heir to millions and reckoned one of the score of richest financiers in New York. Attention will be directed to The Crossways, the Fish estate at Newport, which has been one of the show places of that colony ever since it was built, to the "Venetian Palace," so-called, which affords shelter for the family at Seventy-eighth Street and Madison Avenue, and to the vast estate at Garrison, slightingly referred to above as "the farm."

Very well. And when one has examined all these evidences of the luxury that great wealth brings, he is invited to look in his mind's eye into a plain corner room on the thirteenth floor of 135 Broadway, just big enough for a good-sized desk, three chairs, and a wall cabinet for records and filing. The desk and chairs are of simple oak without ornamentation, and on the walls hang a few railroad maps and a picture of this engine or of that train which sometime in the history of the Illinois Central Railroad accomplished a feat big enough to entitle it to a write-up with cuts. Seated behind the desk, so he may swing around and look out on the broad expanse of the Hudson with its never-ending stream of commerce, is the man himself, a big, plain, unassuming American, who happened by accident to be born with the opportunities that great riches afford and who has improved them to the material benefit of himself, his stockholders, and his fellow-citizens. Why, therefore, is he not of the "many" who go to make up the aggregate strength of the country?

And to look for a minute at the record of his work as dates and facts display it. He was graduated at 20 from Columbia, in the class of 1871, and took a clerkship in the offices of the Illinois Central Railroad, with which his family had been identified from the time when Abraham Lincoln was its general attorney. This he left in a year or so for a position in the long-established banking house of Morton, Bliss & Co. Gov. Morton, then the active man in the firm, found Stuyvesant Fish a valuable young man, sent him to the London office, and then brought him back here at 24 as managing clerk. At 25 he was a member of the Stock Exchange, and at 26 a Director of the Illinois Central, and agent for the Purchase Committee of the New Orleans, Jackson & Great Northern Railroad. The next year he became Secretary of the Chicago, St. Louis & New Orleans Railroad, and in 1883 was made Second Vice President of the Illinois Central. The following year he was First Vice President, and in 1887, at the age of 36, he was President of the system with which his name has ever since been identified.

It is not the purpose here to try to trace the growth of the Illinois Central Railroad under the Fish régime. In most railroad properties the re-

What the Roosevelt Chair Really Means

Aims to Bring Germany and United States Nearer Together---Three-Year Programme Settled---American Scholars Already Chosen to Follow Prof. Burgess.

PRESIDENT NICHOLAS MURRAY BUTLER of Columbia University discussed yesterday the ideas underlying the recent establishment of the Roosevelt Chair in the University of Berlin.

"The Roosevelt Chair," he said, "has been established on a permanent foundation to carry out an idea suggested by the German Emperor at one of the public receptions of Charlemagne Tower, the American Ambassador in Berlin. It was suggested that the good feeling and mutual understanding between Germany and the United States would be furthered by the interchange of university professors. A good many American universities, including Columbia, for some time have invited foreign professors, particularly from Germany, to come to this country to deliver lectures and instruction, but these invitations have always been more or less personal and rested on no permanent foundation and were not worked out on any preconceived plan.

"The idea underlying the present scheme is the establishment in the University of Berlin, the greatest and most influential of German universities, of a chair from which every year a course of lectures on America, American life, or American institutions may be delivered to the German students in their own language by a competent American scholar.

* * *

"Three points differentiate the Roosevelt Chair from other exchanges of professors. In the first place, through the generosity of James Speyer, the chair will be permanent. In the second place, it will be incumbent on the lecturer to speak in German, not in English. In the third place, the subjects to be covered from year to year will be carefully chosen to represent a systematic course in American civilization.

"Every possible courtesy and honor has been extended to the incumbent of the chair by the Ministry of Education in Berlin and by all those official and unofficial persons who have any relation to the matter.

"The Roosevelt Professor need not be a professor of Columbia or, indeed, a professor at all. The Trustees will nominate from year to year the strongest and most representative men wherever they are to be found, who will aid in putting the plan into effect. The right of appointment rests with the Prussian Minister of Education, with the approval of the German Emperor. The right of nomination by the terms of Mr. Speyer's gift, which had the personal approval of the German Emperor and his advisers, is with the Trustees of Columbia.

Prof. JOHN W. BURGESS

"In 1906-7 the subject presented will be 'The Origin and Development of the American Constitution.' The professorship for that year will be held by Prof. John W. Burgess, who for thirty years has been Professor of Political Science and Constitutional Law in Columbia, and from its foundation Dean of the Faculty of Political Science. He is acknowledged to be an authority on the subject, and his contributions to its literature are as well known and as highly appreciated in Europe as in the United States.

"He will take with him as part of his scientific apparatus a working library of several hundred volumes, including a full set of the United States Supreme Court Reports, standard histories of the United States, and other works, all of which will be at the service of the students following his course.

* * *

"His duties will consist of a university course of lectures on 'American Constitutional History,' delivered twice weekly in the German language, and a seminar, with one weekly session of two hours, for the benefit of advanced and special students who wish to pursue the subject further and in detail. It is hoped that his lectures may be published in Germany as a permanent memorial of the first year's work of the new foundation.

"In 1907-8 'American Economic History and Progress' will be dealt with. A leading economist will be appointed who will trace the economic history of the United States, in many ways so different from that of Europe, and will examine scientifically the most pressing and contemporary problems. Undoubtedly he will cover the American tariff system, the railway and transportation problem, the currency question, the relations of labor and capital, and the organization of trusts and the like.

"In 1908-9 the subject will be 'The Ethical Problems of the United States,' and the whole field of social and personal ethics will be considered. In later years American industrial and commercial development, education, contributions to literature and science are to be set forth, and then after a time the cycle will be resumed, with such alterations as experience suggests.

"The proposed courses are to be announced three years in advance, not only to allow the professors to prepare themselves, but so that German students who wish to hear a particular professor or to study a particular subject may be able to make arrangements to do so. The nominations for 1907-8 and 1908-9 have been agreed upon, and will be made public after the approval of the Prussian Minister of Education has been received.

"It will be seen that this is not a mere exchange of academic courtesies—but a consistent, carefully planned attempt to present the civilization of one great people to the students of another in the language they best understand. There will probably be no dispute that the two most imposing political events of the nineteenth century were the preservation of the integrity of the American Nation and the unification of Germany. The first insured the permanence and peaceful development of the principles and ideals on which the new Republic was founded, and the second completed the movement to nationalization that had been going on in Europe for 1,000 years, and brought under a single governmental system the major portion of the German people.

"The importance of German culture, including philosophy, science, art, and literature, was already very great, but it was immensely increased by the unification of the German Empire. These two great nations, the United States and Germany, are now playing leading parts in the development of the world's civilization, and it is of the highest importance that they understand each other as fully as possible. No better way to accomplish this has yet been suggested than through the co-operation of two universities.

"Almost every difficulty that arises in the world that is likely to cause either public or private conflict is due to imperfect understanding or misunderstanding by one party of the point of view of the other. Any university can contribute to make such impossible or unlikely, and we think that in doing so we are rendering a public service to the Nation and the world.

"The German Government has established at Columbia a parallel chair to the Roosevelt. Prof. Schumacher, Professor of Political Economy at Bonn University and a recognized authority on railroad and grain trade problems, will visit the university in September. He speaks English fluently, and will give a course of English lectures upon German economic problems."

"AN ENGLISHWOMAN IN NEW YORK": LOVERS AND HUSBANDS

HE wears a smooth face, a derby hat, and seems to be a sort of masculine Martha—troubled about many things.

Thus, at first glance, the New York man impresses me.

He dresses well, but not so well as the average Londoner. Our Englishmen are the best-dressed men in the world, but that should not trouble the American man, since in stating this we Britons always are known to add in the same breath, "And the American woman is the best-dressed woman in the world." I have noted that the American man does not seem particularly to mind if we criticise him, but he looks amazed and uncomprehending if we have anything to say against his womankind. He has a conundrum which he invariably puts:

Why is it that, with so many Englishmen marrying American girls, so few American men marry English girls?

Now, some have been known to say, in answer: "Why, because Englishwomen prefer to marry Englishmen!" but the American man insists that it is because the American men do not ask the Englishwomen—and I am inclined to think he is right.

Kindness to women and abusiveness of restaurant waiters are the leading characteristics of the New York man, as I have seen him, and my impression is that the New York man is a fair average American, and, besides, in New York I have been meeting men from every other part of the United States.

To a woman, without any apparent reason, the American man presents a pretty compliment and a bouquet of flowers, and to the restaurant waiter, also as apparently without reason, he uses "language" and follows it with a large tip. To be sure the compliment and the flowers do seem to go beautifully together, but I am continually pondering over the seeming incompatibility of abuse and a dollar tip for the waiter.

Other characteristics, too, has the New York man. He reads too many newspapers and not enough books. If he has a wife or a fiancée he expects her to do the reading for him. The other day I asked a man if he had read any of "The Historians' History of the World."

"No," he answered; "but my wife is reading it."

Then I asked if he had read "David Harum."

"No, but my wife read it," he answered.

"Have you seen 'Peter Pan'?" I asked.

"No, but my wife and the children have."

"Have you been to Saratoga?" I asked by way of diversion.

"No, but my wife has!"

I kept on inquiring about various things and found that most things which were worth doing he had not done, but his wife had. It seemed to be rather a pretty commentary on the position of the American married woman, and I could not help thinking how different things were in my own country. Certainly in England the most interesting things have been done by the husband, and usually the husband is a more interesting person to talk with than the wife, as I think you traveling Americans are always observing.

Besides studying the New Yorker as a husband I have, through the kind auspices of an American girl friend, been studying him as a fiancé. Besides describing to me many of the good points of her own fiancé, she has told me the good and bad points she has observed among other American men, and one of the conclusions I draw is that Americans as lovers send more flowers and fewer love letters than Englishmen during the interesting period of an engagement.

I never visit this American girl without finding her in a bower of roses and ferns; she is always taking me to the matinée with the extra ticket her fiancé so generously provides; she seems but to admire a book or a picture or a bonbon box to have it placed in her hands—and her fiancé is only a struggling young broker, too. But what do you think she confessed to me? That she had never in her year's engagement received a single love letter!

It was such an unheard-of confession that I stared at her open-mouthed. Whoever heard of lovers not writing love letters! Why, even royal lovers do it, though they make only those wicked "arranged marriages," of which, English as I am, I thoroughly disapprove.

"No love letters!" I gasped. Then I said: "I should think that even though he never left town he would write to you every day. In England they always do, I assure you."

"He's so busy, you see!" apologized the girl.

"Too busy to think of you every day? But he must think of you every day, too, for you get roses every day."

"Of course he thinks of me every day," she said, half-crossly, "though the roses don't prove that. He pays the florist to remember to send the roses every day. He asked me once if the florist ever forgot it, and when I said no, he said he'd better not or he'd know the reason why."

I began to wonder whether this young lover was really so very much in love. It seemed to me he ought to bring the roses himself. An Englishman would have done so, though they might not have come so frequently. I was thinking about this when my American friend went on:

"But Sam does think about me every day and several times a day. He calls me up every morning on the telephone and says good morning, and every night and says good night, and as often as he can in between times. You see, that's the reason he doesn't write love letters. He telephones instead."

"But surely he cannot say over the telephone what he would say in a love letter!" I exclaimed.

"Yes, just about the same. We have a code. A certain word means 'love,' another word means 'kisses,' another means 'darling,' and so on."

I must say I was shocked. Here have I been admiring your New York telephone service, and wishing that Londoners would consider the telephone a necessity in every house and every office, never suspecting that miserable, bloodless, heartless little instrument was cheating American girls out of every woman's birthright—love letters.

But I said to my friend:

"Sam often goes to Buffalo, and twice he has been abroad. Surely he writes love letters then."

"No," she answered. "From Buffalo he telephones, and it's frightfully expensive, and when he was in Liverpool he cabled, and it cost 25 cents a word."

Now, of course, there are exceptions in everything, and I insisted to this American girl that her Sam must be an exception to the rule of American lovers, but she asserted that there was nothing exceptional about Sam but exceptional niceness and attentiveness.

* * *

However, she did say she would try to make him write her a love letter or two, since I seemed to think it necessary, and then she wanted me to tell how an Englishman would act if he were engaged and were a busy young man like Sam.

"Well, first," I said, "until he was engaged, he would not send you any flowers or show you very much attention, unless he happened to be at your country house, when he would take walks with you. If you began to feel you loved him and suspected he might love you, you would want to make your rooms attractive and beautiful when he called, so you would fill your place with flowers—"

"You mean the flowers he would send," interrupted the American girl complacently.

"Of course not!" I retorted. "Haven't I said he would not send the flowers till after you were engaged?"

"Then how would you get the flowers, I'd like to know?" asked the provoking young woman.

"You would buy them, unless you had your own greenhouses," I said.

"Buy flowers to fix up a room for a man!" screamed the New Yorker excitedly. "I tell you, my dear, I'd never do such a thing, unless it was to make him jealous by thinking another man had sent them, which would, of course, bring him to the point sooner. Yes, of course, one might do that," continued she meditatively—it almost seemed to me reminiscently.

"Now," said I, "we will begin again; but we'll suppose you are engaged to an Englishman at the very start, in order to do away with this terrible flower argument. He will bring you bunches of violets and an engagement ring and books and sweets, and will ask you and your mother or your aunt to go to the theatre with him. He will take you for walks and you may ride in Rotten Row.

"In the country you can get away from the chaperons, and that is the loveliest part of the engagement. You can take long walks and so be by yourselves."

"I'd rather never be alone with Sam than to take long walks with him. Walking tires me all out. Sam and I go in the automobile. We'd rather go with horses, but Sam's so busy that we must always go the quickest way. One of these days, when Sam gets rich, we're going behind a team of horses," exclaimed the American girl.

I continued my description of the English courtship.

"He would write you the dearest letter every night, and post it so you would get it with your breakfast. He would call you 'dear old girl' and—"

Here the American girl fairly screamed.

"What a dreadful thing—'dear old girl'! Why, English lovers don't say that, do they?"

"Of course," I said, "and sometimes they vary it with 'dear old thing,' and then they tell you how fond they are of you."

"Well, if a man called me 'dear old thing' and talked about being 'fond' of me, just as if I were a piece of cheese or pumpkin pie, I'd just, I'd just—slap him, I just would!" exclaimed my friend.

"What does Sam say?" I asked in wonderment.

"He says lots of thing I never shall repeat, but among other things he says 'little girl,' not 'old girl,' and he says he loves me all to little bits."

"Not on the telephone!" I exclaimed, horrified.

"Yes, on the telephone. I told you we had a code, didn't I? Well, Sam gets up right in the middle of dictating to his stenographer and tells me the loveliest things over the telephone, and his stenographer thinks he's talking about a lawsuit with a client."

Somehow I have never finished describing the typical English wooing to this American girl, and I never want to. It is so much more interesting being an onlooker at her love affair. To me it is like reading a wonderfully interesting book. Once Sam could not accompany her to the theatre as he had hoped, but he was so determined she should not be disappointed that he hired a very tall messenger boy to go with her, as her mother was ill, and, of course, she could not go alone.

Once the three of us were walking in the Park—it was a Sunday—and this busy man did take a few hours off on Sunday. Her shoe came untied and she asked him to tie it. I tried to fancy myself asking one of my own countrymen to tie my shoe, but I couldn't.

I know another engaged New York girl. One day when we were walking in the downtown part of the city a dreadful rainstorm came up suddenly. By the merest accident we met her fiancé hurrying to his Wall Street office. He had an umbrella while we had none, and in the fraction of a minute he had thrust us both into a tramcar, insisted on our keeping the umbrella "to save our hats when we got out," handed the conductor two nickels "for those two ladies there," jumped off, then onto another car going the opposite way, his hat and shoulders dripping with rain.

"Why, he paid our fares—both our fares!" I exclaimed in bewilderment.

"Of course!" answered my American friend. "Did you think, because Frank's a busy broker, he'd forget a thing like that?"

"But his umbrella!" I went on. "He needs it himself. It was wicked for us to take it. What will he do?"

"Buy another one," she returned, "and, besides, I like this one. It's a lovely big one. I'll give my little sister my other one."

Her other one! So she already claimed the poor man's umbrella which he had thrust upon her in the rain—I had thought it but a loan!

I got to wondering what an Englishman would have done in a similar case. The real English gentleman always knows what to do under every circumstance. I fancied ourselves in London and one of us meeting the man to whom she was engaged. I could see the sweep of his silk hat while he held his umbrella carefully over it—it costs such a lot of money to keep an Englishman in silk hats!—and I could hear him say "Let me call you a cab." I could hear the whistle and see the flourish of the hand that brings the dear old London "cabby" flying to one's assistance. I could see him helping us into the cab, ask us for the address to which we wished to go; another bow and sweep of silk hat, and a careful direction from him to Cabby.

At the end of the journey we would pay our own fare.

I don't profess to have made, as yet, a really profound study of the American man. He is too deep for superficial study, it seems to me. English students of American character have usually dismissed him with "Kind to women, generous of pocket, too busy to eat his meals, so he bolts them."

These are but the things one notices at once and on the outside. He sometimes seems to forget the "little things" which we women make so much of. I can readily fancy my friend's fiancé forgetting to raise his hat as he jumped off the car, though I cannot fancy his forgetting to pay the car fare if he kept all Wall Street waiting while he did it. I can fancy him, when they are married, giving way to her in all things—almost—and then suddenly putting his big foot down and becoming the ruler of his own household after she had flattered herself she was the head of the family.

Over in England our people have a way of saying that the American woman is superior to the American man, superior in education, breeding, intellect. If this is true (mind, I say "if") it is not particularly to her credit, for she is given nearly all the chances, when chances are limited, and the man takes whatever opportunities he can make for himself.

I know a New York family where the three daughters have been sent to college and the two sons have been put to work when they were fifteen. One is an office boy with a lawyer. Another is a messenger boy. In England the two boys would have gone to college and the three girls would have remained at home. Then, when the boys are making their way in the world, if, by a very probable chance, the girls are not married, the brothers will help the sisters, giving them an allowance from their own hard-earned incomes.

It is difficult to decide which is the better way, but, as a woman, I suppose I should choose to be given the opportunity myself, become independent of brothers, and not to be obliged to think about marrying unless the right man were accessible.

Among our English gentlefolk of reduced means it is often quite pitiful to see brothers struggling along, wishing to marry, yet denying themselves the woman they love because they feel in honor bound to provide for unmarried or widowed sisters. I will say for our English young men that in the main they are good brothers.

But in America the brother is not so much of a necessity to his sister. She can take care of herself. She has been educated with that end in view.

But is this system really good for your men? Is there not something good in life that they are sure to miss? I do not plead for the adoption of our English system, which seems to me a bit one-sided, but your system is also one-sided. A middle course is needed. Women are not entitled to all the advantages.

And besides, from my observation of her, the American woman would make a sorry Amazon.

Stuyvesant Fish, Policy Holders' Champion

sults of any given administration speak for themselves, and it may be safely assumed that the proposition applies to the Illinois Central as to others. But one phase of the policy that has controlled may be noted because it throws considerable light on the fundamental question here under discussion. Stuyvesant Fish early laid down the proposition that the Illinois Central was going to be administered in the interest of all the stockholders so long as he was at the head of it. He held as a corollary of this that so long as the stockholders were satisfied with the results of this policy they would probably keep him in office, and admitted just as freely that whenever the stockholders became dissatisfied they would have a perfect right to throw him out and put in another man.

Many stories are told in Wall Street offices of developments that have resulted from this policy. It is recalled, for instance, that a dozen years ago Norman B. Ream and another equally sizeable financier who had been Directors of the Illinois Central for some time, developed the fact that they represented in the board certain blocks of stock—certain "interests," as Wall Street knows that word. Mr. Fish informed them that all the Illinois Central Directors that he would personally stand for must be in office as representatives of the whole body of stockholders and not of any limited coterie. There was a difference of opinion, and Mr. Fish, enjoying at that time, as usual, the approval of the stockholders, threw out Mr. Ream and his associates. It was done very pleasantly, but quite firmly, nevertheless.

Recent events bearing upon the control of the Illinois Central and the fight that has been started now in earnest by Mr. Harriman and his allies to get the property have been so thoroughly discussed in the news columns of the daily papers that they hardly need detailed consideration at this time. It is interesting, however, to note the talk of bankers that when the Harriman interests offered, before the battle was fairly started, to make terms with Mr. Fish on whatever basis he might decide to dispose of his personal stock holdings in the railroad, he replied that whatever his personal interests might be, the interests of the stockholders who put him in office were many times greater, and that so long as they chose to keep him there he would protect their interests and take whatever personal consequences might be involved.

The connection of Mr. Fish with recent developments in the Mutual Life Insurance Company is another matter that has been publicly discussed with enough detail to enable people to understand it pretty well. But it may be reckoned the same kind of "4-o'clock-in-the-morning courage" that made him go up against what are known as the most powerful financial interests in the world when they attempted to get control of $500,000,000 of policy holders' money, which prompted him to throw down the gage to Harriman, the resourceful, persistent fighter, whose "Not Yet," as an announcement that another financial battle was on, has kept the Street agog and watching for developments for a sixmonth. And the need for courage did not lessen when it was considered how close were the ties between the men who were fighting for the life insurance money on the one side and those who wanted the Illinois Central, with its wealth of strategic and financial resources, on the other.

It is a safe guess, therefore, that there has been a "mighty lot of sitting" done out in the back lot on the "farm" lately, for which the policy holders on the one hand and the stockholders on the other may have occasion to be sincerely thankful before certain pending financial questions have been adjusted.

Broadway at Night

EXULTANT theatre-rush!
Mad mobs!
O, such a sight as all the star-rout holds not!
Broadway at night!
A million windows pour their blazing beams,
A thousand incandescents shoot milk-floods
Of light, sun-splendid.
Crowded cars career, jangling, steady, track-fast,
Hacks, hansoms, hurry, here a whirl of lace,
There a two-star-set miracle of face!
O, the women, the beauty-buoyant women,
And the men, elate, electric, naked of trade,
Holiday-happy, laved by splendor and love!
But O, you sidewalks, throbbing with the steps
Of the million-loosed people bathing free and careless
In the sparkle, the sun-glow, the laughter-smitten midnight,
And the wild spirit that breezes over Broadway,
Blowing in hearts' wine-tipped exhilarations!—
You sidewalks that midday the tread supported
Of drunk-mad business, barely tapped on now
By dainty woman-boots and sandal-slippers!
O, wild advertisements in brilliant bulbs,
Self-consumed electricity!
O, broad policemen shouldering the crowd!
O, newsboys hoarse and sibilant, overawake!
O, women, men!
O, over-intensification of things human,
Warm tides of heart-spontaneous brotherhood,
The hearty spirit of the human race
Collected in quintessence and gulped down
In over-draughts, joy-prompted!
Is not this glory, Earth? Is not this Life?
Is there about this, silent swaying Ocean,
Bearing no noise, but breaking crests of foam
That smash the moonlight in a million stars
And swing great leagues of water with soft sound?
Are silver-loaded mountains within hail,
Pulsing pine-odors over sleep-hushed valleys,
Lone houses window-lit in breathing woods,
And the ever-breaking brooks that tumble over
The moss-streaked stones?
O, do there stretch miles out
Infinite prairies stiller than midair
To aeronauts above the clouds? And say,
Are stars in the skies, great planets, meteors, suns—
A universe above this Life's keen extract?
O, mad crowd, and mad I, such things may be,
But not like this, but not like this!
Broadway at night!

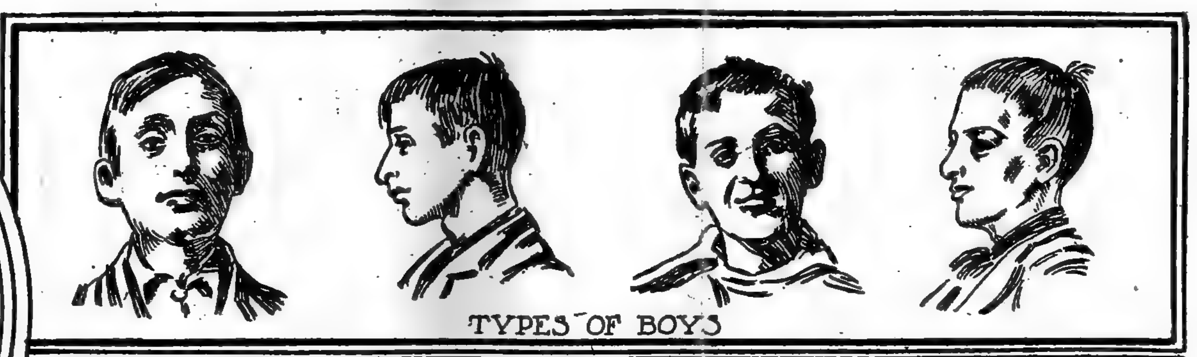
MARCH 1906

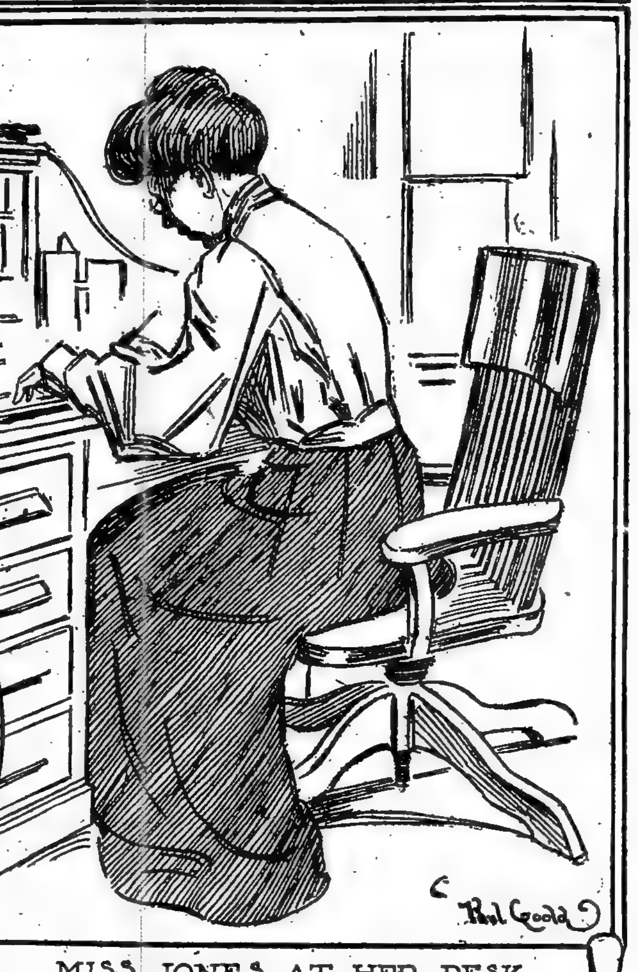
Most Interesting Educational Experiment in New York

Remarkable Results Obtained in Five Months by Miss Olive M. Jones at a New Idea Truant School in Broome Street--Miss Julia Richman's Suggestion.

MISS OLIVE N. JONES
Principal of Public School 120



TYPES OF BOYS



MISS JONES AT HER DESK

MISS JULIA RICHMAN
District Superintendent of Public Schools

DOWN in the heart of the Russian Jewish quarter of New York on the far east side, on Broome Street, where crude, gaudily colored presentments of moujiks and soldiers of the Czar toasting one another in bumpers of vodka and beer form signs for basement grogshops, a man the other day grasped a boy by the collar.

In an instant, from that mysterious nowhere whence crowds in great cities gather at the slightest happening out of the ordinary, a seething mob surged about the couple. There was a short, sharp struggle, during which the man's right hand, swinging like a flail, rained blows on the boy's flushed face. Then a door opened and through it shot both man and boy.

Howls, jeers, and shrieks of laughter in many keys rose from the motley mob thus suddenly deprived of their fun. A policeman appeared, and at his authoritative command the people dispersed, slowly, sullenly.

The building into which the struggling man and boy had vanished was Public School No. 120, a new departure in educational institutions, forming one of the most important experiments in sociology ever undertaken by the New York Board of Education. It is a school for truants, but is intermediary between the ordinary primary school and the regular reformatory institution. The boy, one of its pupils, was a confirmed thief, and the man was his father, whom he had robbed, and not for the first time.

Within three minutes after being hustled through the door by one of the men teachers, father and son were standing before an earnest little American gentlewoman, Miss Olive M. Jones, the Principal, who after hearing through a Russian boy interpreter the father's complaint quietly but scathingly expressed her opinion of him and then ordered him out of the place. The boy at her command remained behind, cowering in a chair. What the little culprit thought might be in store for him it is beyond the inexperienced adult mind to surmise. What actually took place between the woman and the child is known to the writer. As a result of it the boy may, as he often before has done, sleep out in doorways or in friendly trucks in preference to returning to the two wretched rooms where three adults and half a dozen or more children herd and which he calls home, but he has never missed a minute from school, and is as devoted as a dog to the Principal.

The story of the young thief is a sad one indeed, but it were a work of supererogation to enter into the details, as the incident is only one of many, and these of almost daily occurrence, which Miss Jones is called upon to deal with as judge or arbiter, for her kind but firm influence is exerted to control about the toughest aggregation of boys outside of the reformatory, to which under ordinary circumstances they would belong.

⁂

The experiment of this intermediary school has been in progress since Oct. 18 last—barely five months—and the results obtained are encouraging in the highest degree.

The idea of the institution originated with Miss Julia Richman, District Superintendent of Schools, whose work as a progressive educator is well known, and who is implacably opposed to putting a boy, however bad, in the reformatory without giving him a chance to mend his ways under milder but equally practical guidance. She imparted her theories about an intermediary institution to the city school authorities.

Some received them dubiously. They were doubtful as to whether teachers willing and at the same time qualified to undertake the task could be found, and they also had in mind the matter of expense. But Miss Richman declined to be discouraged. She enlisted the sympathy and support of Superintendent William H. Maxwell, and so it was decided to put her theories to practical test. For this purpose the old school building at 183 Broome Street was placed at her disposal, and she selected as Principal of the school Miss Jones, who was Assistant Principal of Public School No. 2, in Henry Street, had had much experience in dealing with rough and unruly boys, and fully shared her humanitarian views concerning them.

It was, however, no encouraging task that Miss Jones took up, as she realized before she had been in the Broome Street school a week. Boys whom teachers in other east side schools had given up as hopeless cases were sent to her, and she found herself called upon to control the brutal, vicious instincts and violence of over 100 veritable little savages, who looked upon her and her work with ferocious hostility or amused contempt. It meant the hardest kind of labor under conditions often vile, and in which her sensibilities would be shocked at every turn. She had to face more than the probability of failure, and her only reward in the event of success appeared to be the consciousness that she had turned into the right road a lot of youngsters who had started along the devious paths that lead from it.

On the top of her desk in her office is a plaster cast of a lion, which may be taken as symbolical of grit and strength of will and of purpose. It serves as a support to a card on which is printed the following:

> PLUCK.
>
> Pluck will win, its average is sure.
> He wins the fight who can the most endure,
> Who faces issues, he who never shirks,
> Who waits and watches and who always works.

Here is the truth that ever consoles and sustains her, that she ever impresses upon and brings home to every pupil under her charge, and which nearly always appeals successfully in the end to that spirit of manliness that lives somewhere in the nature of nine hundred and ninety-nine boys in a thousand, however bad they may be—this and the appeal to their spirit of fair play.

⁂

This feminine advocate of strenuousness of purpose and of level dealing, who can fathom and counter the deep cunning and crime wisdom of the gutter chick and sway to her will his savage, independent nature impatient of all restraint, as well as command the awe or respect of men and women hardened by poverty and degradation, has acquired her power during a decade of keen, discriminating observation and comprehensive apprehension of the problems which she is helping to solve.

She is a slender young woman of medium height, whose appearance on casual acquaintance gives no indication of her concentrated strength of character. There is none of the brisk, businesslike imperiousness about her or her movements that a tamer of tough boys might be assumed to possess, no characteristic of feature to denote indomitable will power. Nor, on the other hand, is there any manifestation of that urbanity which generally distinguishes the pedagogue of the suaviter in modo fortiter in re kind. Quiet earnestness is her predominating trait, and it speedily impresses itself upon one as her large, dark, serious eyes look through her spectacles at her visitor with that frank, self-possessed gaze that marks women who have constantly to do with strangers. This earnestness is enhanced at times by a vaguely cloisteral melancholy, certainly unconscious, that may have grown upon her from the preoccupation of her position and the weight of the responsibilities of her mission.

One easily understands that it is so when she explains that unless called upon by circumstances to render prompt decision or judgment, she never acts upon a case until the intervening repose of a night has enabled her to study it dispassionately. Yet it would hardly occur to the judge of character that she would give way to weakness or misguided indulgence. Therefore it must be that these boys—big boys, the majority of them—over whom she exerts such influence, combine with a basal respect for her power of gentle firmness that will not be denied a liking for her "manliness," if it may be so described, exemplified in her advocacy and action of "fighting fair."

⁂

But here are Miss Jones's views and some of her experiences as given by herself:

"I am opposed to institutional life for the boy who is only just beginning to go wrong. I am opposed to it because it places him in contact with boys already far gone on the downward grade. To send a boy who has 'swiped,' as they call it, a few vegetables as he walked along the street, to some institution among boys who already have committed burglary is to make it possible for him to come out a trained thief, and I have seen this very thing happen only too often.

"Another reason for my opposition to institutional life is that I think parents, however poor and ignorant they may be, should be brought face to face with the law which should compel them to bring up their own children. The extent to which people of the class with which we have to deal are anxious to throw their offspring upon the community is shocking.

"My method of dealing with the boys themselves? Well, when a boy is brought here he wonders what is going to happen to him. I detain him over in the corner there opposite my desk for an hour or two, without speaking to him after the clerk has entered him on the books. This keeps him guessing and gives him a chance to study me while I am studying him. Then I call him over to talk to him. I impress him as possessing a good deal of knowledge about him.

"'What made you go wrong and play truant?' I ask, for instance. 'Was it the Seward Park or river gang you went with?' He generally lies. I tell him so, and give him to understand that that is the worst offense in my eyes he can commit, and that I am a friend of all boys who tell the truth, however bad the truth may show them to be. He doesn't believe it, but if one of the pupils happens in I appeal to him. 'Isn't that so?' And the boy answers with conviction that it is; for my strong point with the boys is that I have never broken my word with one of them. I tell them at the start that with me it is the square deal and fair play and that I expect the same from them. When they come to realize this they trust me implicitly. They say: 'If Miss Jones says she'll help us, she will, and if she says she'll send us up till we're 21 years old, she'll do it.' Being sent to the reformatory is the one thing they dread.

⁂

"Having got a confession from the boy, I learn enough about his history and family life to handle him. This sometimes involves hours of hard work and tactful questioning and a pretty thorough knowledge of slang. These boys are queer creatures, astonishingly sensitive if one only knew it, and quick oftentimes to form judgments and act in accordance therewith. To get at what a boy thinks and feels you have to be able to talk to him in his own language. Thus, here, a knowledge of general slang and district slang is indispensable, for each district of the city having foreign settlements or a mixture of the foreign element has its own peculiar vernacular. Slang phrases are common here that are not heard in other neighborhoods, while ordinary slang is just as common. To put a question in the wrong way to a boy or to draw a wrong conclusion may mean that you will have to begin all over again with him, or that somebody else will have to do it.

"I have a staff of eleven teachers, six of whom are women. The men are all trained athletes, and young enough to remember what it is to be a boy and all about a boy's ways. Some boys will yield more quickly to a man than to a woman. Others will yield to a woman where a man could not dominate them with a knockout blow. The classes here are limited to fifteen pupils instead of fifty, as in the ordinary primary school, so that each boy is brought under closer influence of the teacher and receives individual attention. All new-comers are placed in the classes of two teachers who deal only with new boys, and endeavor to overcome their truant proclivities. I hold out the inducement that just as soon as the teacher will vouch for a boy he will be promoted to a higher class. It really amounts to putting him in the grade to which he belongs, but he regards it as a promotion, and that suffices.

"At first some of them use the most appalling language and are insubordinate to a degree that the teacher can do nothing with them. The other day a boy called his teacher an unspeakable name in the ball court. The teacher before the other boys simply said, 'I will attend to you in my room when the game is over.' He did, giving the boy a severe talking to. That afternoon when he was leaving the school the boy was waiting for him with a slung shot—a piece of lead weighing a pound or two with a hole through it, by means of which it is attached to a piece of string. He hurled it at the teacher, and missed his head by an inch. It would have killed him had it struck him. I had the boy arrested, and the courts will deal with him.

"At the beginning the teachers were horrified at the conditions of their work, but they all stuck to it and by me with a loyalty that has earned my profoundest gratitude, and now they like the work and are devoted to it. They have had to deal with a few extreme cases in which I have been compelled to send for the parents to administer corporal punishment. There are times when corporal punishment is absolutely necessary. I am a believer in it. In some boys you have to instill a respect for your physical powers before you can conquer them.

"Among themselves the boys were accustomed to settle all arguments by immediate resort to fighting; for in this neighborhood savage fighting is habitual among both boys and men. When the school first started it was awful. There were fighting and murderous assaults every day. Look!"

(And Miss Jones opened a drawer in which were knives and blackjacks taken from her pupils, together with cards and dice.)

⁂

"These boys are little animals," she went on. "Conquer the brute spirit and you conquer them. Almost all of them have violent tempers. I overcame this by appealing in a peculiar way to their better natures. I began a series of talks at the morning assembly, before the boys were sent to the classrooms, describing the capture of cities by great Generals, starting with the earliest periods of history. They became so interested that not a boy would miss being present at the assembly for fear of losing the war story. At last, when I had brought the wars up to our own times, I told them that when all was said and done, 'he that ruled his own spirit was greater than he that took a city,' and made my meaning clear. Their faces at this unexpected conclusion were a study. It was really comical.

"I followed this up by having an honor list of boys who had ruled their spirit read at assembly every morning. After a time I substituted the names of individuals for whole classes. If any member of a class engaged in a fight, his class was barred from the honor list next morning. This had most astonishing results. It fostered an esprit de corps, a class spirit that has been a potent factor in the success of the school so far obtained. I have seen some of the worst fighters walk off from a quarrel with tears of rage in their eyes and their fists clenched. They would not fight because the pride of their class would have suffered.

"I naturally fostered this class spirit and brought it to bear in the matter of attendance and studies. It is a great power for good, and frequently takes the necessity for exercising control out of the teacher's hands, for the pupils themselves resent backsliding on the part of a class member.

"There are now in the school 135 boys, of whom 100 are Russian Jews, the remainder being Irish, Polish Catholics, and Italians. They have been recruited from a radius of a dozen blocks. Since the school began we have had 190 pupils. Some have obtained employment certificates and gone to work. Places have been found for others in the country. Some have been sent back to regular schools as cured. One is in an institution for the mentally defective. Another had to be sent to the reformatory, where he will stay until he is of age. Five or six others have been lost to us because of criminal conduct outside the school, which led to their arrest and commitment by the court.

"My experience goes to show that the worst children are not those brought into the United States by aliens, but those born here of foreign parents, the very worst being the offspring of atheist fathers. And it is the dreadfully degrading conditions of the congested districts that is responsible for most of the crime in this city. The conditions in this very neighborhood are beyond the power of words to depict. In this district over 25,000 school children are housed within an area of less than half a square mile."

⁂

Miss Julia Richman takes a pessimistic view of the ever-increasing lawlessness among the city's juvenile population, which, if allowed to continue unchecked, she predicts will have terrible results in the next generation.

"I wonder how many people have any idea of what happens to the boy of the tenements if he is left on the streets for a year or two?" she said. "Let them study the history of the boys committed to city or penal institutions during the last ten years, let them read the biography of the city's professional loafer, and they will find out. The boy kept out of school gets his education on the streets, and graduates in loaferism, gambling, and burglary by the time he is fourteen. This has been the fate of many hundreds of boys, ruined for life because of administrative niggardliness, or because of the official wickedness of those teachers and Principals who attempt to maintain discipline by driving the troublesome boys out of school.

"But from the very efforts of the school authorities to ameliorate this condition and the better administrative methods adopted of late years, a new and perplexing problem has arisen that an attempt to solve must be made. Hundreds of children, mainly boys, have been brought into the schools lawless, undisciplined, untutored; fitted by age and size for the middle and upper grammar grades, unfitted in book learning for any but the lowest primary classes; ignorant as new-born babes of all that the course of study demands, wise as veterans in all street shrewdness and knowledge of the seamy side of life. Introduce five or six of these street arabs into any class; can you not foresee the result? Add to these the boy paroled by the Children's Court, the boy known to be a thief, the boy known by his classmates to have been arrested, the boy known by his confederates to be sent back to school unpunished, the boy whose answer to the question, 'What did they do to you in court?' is 'Oh, nutten. De Judge jest talked soft ter me,' and the result is disheartening.

"The incorrigible child, now counted by the score, must soon be counted by the hundred unless remedial and preventive measures can be immediately applied. In every class there are children several years older than the age for which the regular grade work is designed. Think of the effect upon the boy of 12 or 14, who, having spent years on the street peddling, gambling, and often stealing, is forced to attend school with forty, fifty, or sixty little fellows of 6 or 7, and compelled to repeat with them, 'One apple and two apples are three apples.' Think, too, of the effect upon these six or seven year old babes associating with the boy who swears, gambles, and smokes, and who has eaten of the fruit of the tree of knowledge, of both good and evil. To meet these conditions the formation of special classes is imperative."

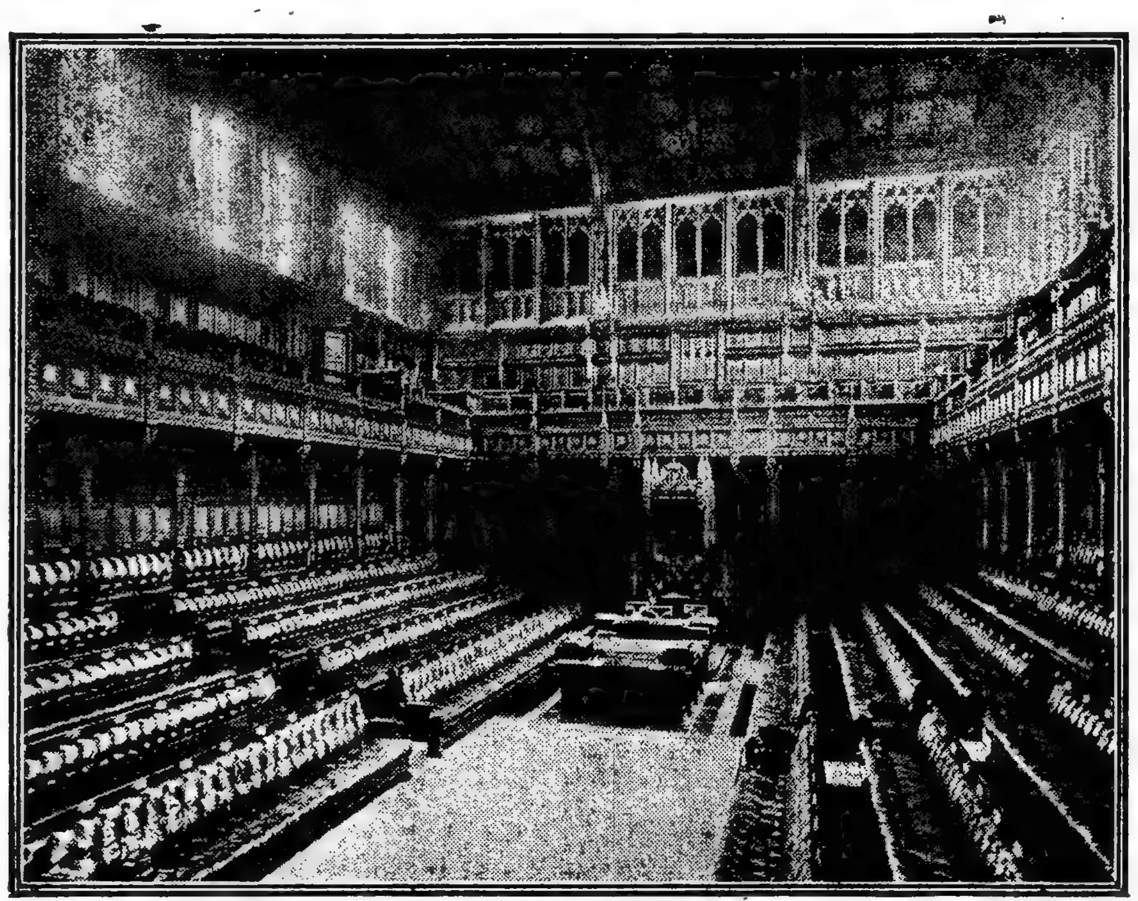
Talk of "Reforming" the House of Commons--But How?

British Democracy Now in Control Want to Make It a Real Legislative Workshop---Methods of Our House of Representatives Which Find Favor.



HOUSE OF COMMONS.

LONDON, March 1.—"It's a silly old thing, the British Parliament," a member of the new House of Commons said to me this afternoon. "Not altogether silly," he went on; "you know, of course, I don't think that. Its silliness consists in its subservience to custom, tradition, courtesy, precedent, and ceremonial, and in its slavish adherence to ancient and stupid procedure. It is silly because it wears fetters from which it could free itself at any moment. We Liberals mean to reform it—to a certain extent."

Those qualifying words are very important, for complete reform of the British Parliament is a matter to dream about rather than to talk about in a spirit of hopefulness. It looks as though Parliament would continue forever and forever hampered and handicapped with some of its worst faults. But reform "to a certain extent" is without doubt easily practicable, and it certainly would be a gain to all concerned.

* * *

Efficiency is the great thing aimed at by the Liberals in their reform projects. They mean, as soon as possible, to reform certain practices of the House of Commons which, in their judgment, have not been ordered in a fashion promotive of efficiency. They will begin with a curtailment of debate and a restriction of the obstructive power of the opposition party.

They have come into control of the House, they say, as the representatives of the people—the common people—and, teeming with ideals and purposes and abounding in devotion and energy, they are impatient with everything in the shape of parliamentary usage that is an obstacle to rapid work. They wish to legislate, to do speedily the things they promised the people they would do, and other things that from time to time shall seem to be wise and necessary.

They mean to turn the House of Commons into a workshop in which shall be carried into effect the mandates of the people as expressed at the polls. Apparently they are moved by the same sort of spirit that, in Mr. Reed's time, caused such a momentous change in the methods of the American House of Representatives. Having an enormous majority, they mean to have it effective—to assume the rights and privileges that belong to such a majority. They aim at making parliamentary sessions fruitful. They expect at each adjournment to be able to show results they will not be ashamed of.

* * *

They may not at this moment know precisely what they wish to do with respect to every matter their policy touches upon; but from time to time they expect to introduce perfected legislative measures, and these measures they intend shall be acted upon after they shall have been debated to a reasonable extent. Their measures are not to be talked to death. Their programme for a given legislative session is to be put through, whether the opposition likes it or not.

There is, of course, an alloy of conservatism in their progressive spirit that will keep them from enthroning a Czar in the Speaker's chair and restrain them from advancing to what American parliamentarians would adjudge to be a state of perfect efficiency. But it must be borne in mind that it is a long road from the practice that goes on in the British Parliament to the lightning methods of the popular branch of the American Congress, and that it is possible to make tremendous strides along that road without approaching very near to the end of it.

All parties in the House of Commons seem inclined to join in the movement to restrict debate, and really the only question to consider in projecting the reform is how great the restriction shall be.

Mr. Chamberlain, in the course of some remarks in the House of Commons last Summer, gave it as his judgment that the rules of the House should be changed, so as to permit the majority to legislate without undue interference on the part of the opposition. His own view, he said, was that it would be a good thing for Parliament and a good thing for the country to adopt the principle underlying the practice of the American House of Representatives.

Mr. Chamberlain no doubt feels to-day as he felt last Summer, and there is no reason to doubt he would accept, and persuade his associates to accept, a proposition from Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman to impose a limit on the power of obstruction to be allowed the opposition party. He might, however, have a somewhat more generous idea as to what would be a proper limit to the activities of the opposition than he entertained at a time when he was a member of a Government party.

* * *

John Burns says the jawbone of the ass has had its best days in the House of Commons, and never again will be effective as a weapon against the completion of useful legislation. The chances, however, are the jawbone of the ass will not be banished absolutely from the House, and that the reform in debate that is to be instituted by the Government will still allow measures to be kept under discussion somewhat longer than measures of comparable importance are allowed to take up the time of Mr. Cannon's body of lawmakers.

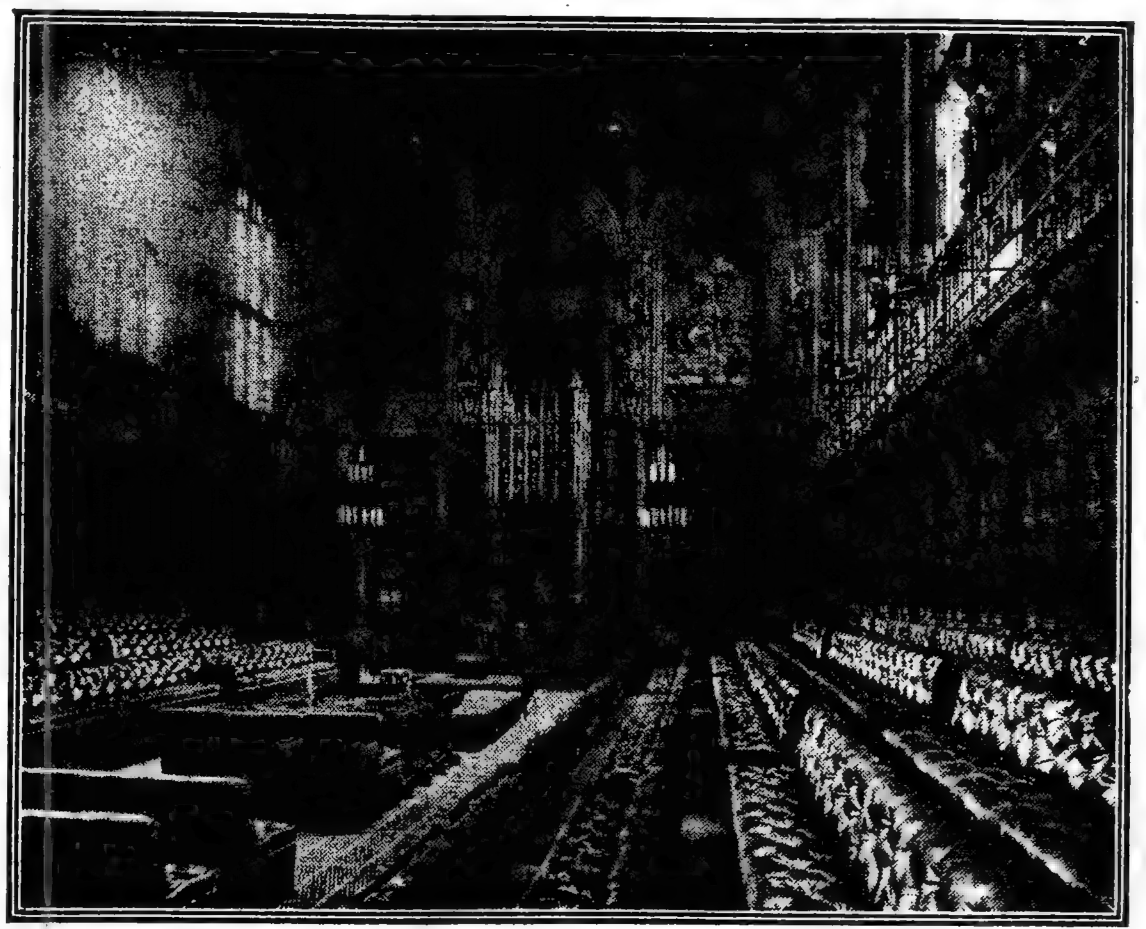
Even the most radical of the Liberals is more or less impressed with the conviction that there must be considerable debate over every measure to which the attention of Parliament is directed. Even Keir Hardie, who speaks of the Parliament Buildings as the "National Gashouse," would revolt against the adoption of the hustling methods of the American House. He does not subscribe to the proposition that once a measure has been brought into such shape that it commands the support of the Parliamentary majority there is no occasion for prolonged debate upon it. So it seems there must be a little gas manufactured in the House of Commons after all.

It is not surprising that many of those who are determined to turn the chamber of the House into a workshop feel that the operatives engaged in the workshop are entitled to remuneration for their services. Lawmakers should be paid for their lawmaking, it is urged, if the lawmaking body is to be fairly representative of the people. Otherwise the House of Commons, after a time, must become what it was before the recent popular upheaval—a body of aristocrats.

It is by no means settled that the Liberals will take up with this project of making members of the House salaried servants of the nation. Doubt that they will do this is based on considerations of economy, for the most part. The number of members is so great that it would require a large sum of money to pay them what would be considered reasonable salaries. If the allowance should be £1,000 a year to each member the Government would have to add £670,000 to its annual budget, and that is a good deal for Great Britain to do in her present financial condition.

* * *

A reduction of the House membership has been suggested in this connection, the argument being that if the House could be cut down to 300 members it would be comparatively easy to pay salaries. But this suggestion can hardly be considered a practical one, nor would any suggestion for a reduction of the membership be practical. There is no constituency in the country which would peaceably assent to the loss of its representative in the House of Commons, no matter who should plead for it, no matter what should be the basis of the plea.



HOUSE OF LORDS.

Everybody knows, of course, that the House is too large, but it does not seem possible it ever can be made smaller. Therefore the question confronting the Government is, whether it shall bring in a measure providing that each of the 670 members shall receive an annual salary, to the end that the democracy of Great Britain, which has assumed direction of the nation's affairs, may not be forced by its impecuniosity into relinquishing it.

Whatever difficulties may stand in the way of an affirmative answer to this question, there is one thing the Government might do that would be sensible, popular, and not enormously expensive—it might furnish a fit chamber for the House of Commons. Anything more ridiculous in the shape of a legislative hall than the wee room now used by the Commons it would be difficult to provide.

* * *

Think of a room 45 by 75 feet serving as the meeting place of a legislative body of 670 members! It does not begin to furnish adequate accommodation. For the 670 members there are altogether 428 seats, and inasmuch as 108 of the number are in the gallery, from which members may not address the Chair, it follows that there are only 320 seats which members may occupy if they wish to enjoy all the rights and privileges of membership.

Heretofore it has been considered more important to preserve the chamber in its original form than to adapt it to the uses to which it is put. It remains to be seen whether the democracy of Great Britain will adhere to this view. It is certain, however, that there is a large body of members who will be strenuous in a demand for the enlargement of the chamber.

"We must enlarge it or meet somewhere else," one of the Liberal members said to me. "My opinion is we might better meet in a big tent than in that little chicken coop. It doesn't interest me in the least to hear of the great men who have sat in that hall in years gone by, nor do I care how many years have gone by since it was built. It's not a good fit for the House of Commons of these days—that's certain. There's a hall that will seat only 320 of the persons who are entitled to seats in it. What need to argue that the arrangement is silly and that it is stupid to stick to it!

* * *

"And while we are about it the best thing we can do is to Americanize our Parliament so that it may come to be known as an institution whose proceedings the people have a right to witness with their own eyes. Let's have a hall large enough to seat every member of the House, and let's have big galleries to it, so that hundreds of visitors may be present at our meetings, instead of the paltry favored few who are admitted nowadays.

"See how the British public is fenced and policed away from their lawmakers! There never was a more absurd practice. We should do as you do in Washington—keep our buildings open to all comers, and make it easy for those inclined to view the parliamentary bodies at work.

"The House of Commons may have been a house of aristocrats in former times, but it isn't that now. It is made up of representatives of the people, and if the people wish to enter the chamber and watch the operations of their representatives and servants, why on earth shouldn't they be allowed to do it?"

But who can tell how long they must wait before they may exercise this privilege? R. W. W.

WONDERFUL SHRINE 4,000 YEARS OLD DISCOVERED IN EGYPT

THE world possesses another archaeological treasure. When, some months ago, in the Valley of the Kings' Tombs at Thebes, there was discovered a tomb, hitherto unviolated, containing a profusion of marvelous furniture, jewelry, vases, and carvings, as fresh as if they had been made yesterday, it was supposed that the Land of the Pharaohs had yielded up ancient objects which could not be surpassed in beauty and in interest. But this discovery, wonderful as it was, has been far surpassed by the latest find in Egypt, the news of which has just been made known by Prof. E. Naville, a French savant, and C. T. Currelly, an Englishman, who are both working under the auspices of the Egypt Exploration Fund.

For the last two years the explorers employed by the fund, Prof. Naville, Mr. Currelly, Mr. Hall, and Mr. Ayrton, have been engaged in excavating the oldest temple that has so far been discovered at Thebes. It was built in the Eleventh Dynasty, in the reign of the King Menthuhetep Neb-helpet-Ra, who lived somewhere about 2000 B. C. It was in the Ninth and Tenth Dynasties that Thebes began to be transformed from an obscure little town on the Upper Nile to the home of the Pharaohs, with magnificent palaces and temples of stupendous size and grandeur.

The temple which Prof. Naville and his associates have been laying bare is built on a platform, to which access is given by a ramp, and it is remarkable because it has in the middle a great block of masonry, the purpose of which is not known, but which, it is thought, was perhaps the base of a pyramid.

* * *

This year the efforts of the explorers have been directed toward the back part of the temple. They wished to see how it ended and how it was connected with the mountain at the end of the amphitheatre of Deir el bahari. Early in the work Mr. Hall discovered the inclosure wall of the temple and found that the inclosure was interrupted by a court or wide avenue, lined on both sides by a single row of columns and directed toward the mountain. The rock had been cut open to make way for the avenue.

On the north side of the court, over the inclosure of the old temple, remains of a shrine of the Eighteenth Dynasty were found. The shrine was built in the reign of the great King Thothmes III. He lived 1,500 years before Christ, about 150 years before the exodus of the Jews to the Promised Land. This was the King who in seventeen campaigns subdued Palestine and Syria; planted a tablet of victory alongside that of his father on the banks of the Euphrates; penetrated northern Mesopotamia; stormed Karkemish, on the Euphrates; planted garrisons and appointed Governors everywhere, and when he died, after a reign of fifty-four years, was regularly receiving tribute from an empire extending from the upper waters of the Euphrates to the fourth cataract of the Nile. He was the greatest conqueror among the Pharaohs and the greatest military genius in the history of Egypt.

It was with the rich booty that Thothmes III. obtained that he embellished the temples of Egypt in a manner unequaled by any of his predecessors, though they had all been great builders. The gigantic Temple of Ammon, at Karnak, was mostly built by him, and under his rule Egyptian art attained its greatest development.

* * *

The shrine discovered was built of big blocks of sandstone and was not very large. The excavators proceeded with their work, in order to discover what the shrine contained. In a communication to The London Times Prof. Naville and Mr. Currelly tell of what they found:

"A first encouragement was a fine statue of a scribe who lived at the end of the Nineteenth Dynasty. As this statue was quite perfect, it seemed to us that it could not be alone.

"In this respect our hopes were deceived; we found no other statues; but suddenly the removal of a few stones revealed to us a chapel covered with sculptures, the colors of which are absolutely fresh. It is about 10 feet long and 5 feet wide. The roof is vaulted, painted in blue with yellow stars. This chapel is dedicated to Hathor, the goddess of the mountain of the West, who generally has the form of a cow.

"The goddess has not left her sanctuary. In the chapel is a beautiful cow of life size, in painted limestone, reddish brown with black spots. The head, horns, and flanks have evidently been overlaid with gold. The neck is adorned with papyrus stems and flowers, as if she were coming out of the water. She is suckling a little boy, who is again represented as a grown man under her neck. The cartouche behind the head is that of Amenophis II., the son of Thothmes III., whose sculptures cover the walls.

"This is the first time that a goddess has been found undisturbed in her sanctuary. Besides, no cow has ever been found of such size and superb workmanship. The modeling of the animal is exquisite, and the distinctive characters of the Egyptian cattle of the present day are reproduced. The statue is uninjured except for a small piece of the right ear.

"The cow wears the special insignia of the goddess, the lunar disk between the horns surmounted by two feathers. There is so much life in her head that she appears as if about to step out of her sanctuary; when one approaches the place the effect is very striking. This is evidently the scene represented on the numerous paintings on linen that have been found in the neighborhood."

* * *

The great goddess whose holy of holies has thus been discovered is one of the most mysterious figures in the always mysterious Egyptian mythological system. It is supposed that Hathor was the original of the Greek Aphrodite, patroness of love and joy. The earliest Egyptian inscriptions that have been discovered refer to her. She was the daughter of Ra and wife of Tum. Among her titles were "Lady of Heaven" and "Eye of Ra." She was represented in many forms, but most often as a cow, as in the case of the figure found at Thebes, or as a woman with the head of a cow. Almost always she bore between her horns the solar or lunar disk.

* * *

Hathor is not only the goddess of love. In Egyptian mythological texts she is sometimes called the "Mother of the Sun," and, as the nocturnal sky, she became the goddess of the dead. The third month of the Egyptian year was named after her. Through another extraordinary correspondence of ideas, the reason for which is now quite lost to us, Hathor was also the patron of sailors and the protector of mines. She was one of the few Egyptian deities served by female attendants, and the universality of her worship is indicated by the columns surmounted by female heads bearing the ears of a cow, found everywhere in old Egypt, which are known as Hathor columns.

The worship of Hathor was kept up until a very late period. The beautiful Temple of Hathor, at Denderah, one of the best-preserved in Egypt, was mostly built in the first century A. D. under the Roman Emperor Tiberius, when Egypt was a Roman province. It is a curious circumstance that the remains at Denderah show that an open court, surrounded by a colonnade, such as the court found at Thebes, was begun there. In the Denderah temple are many Hathor columns and reliefs showing the foreign rulers of Egypt—Augustus, Tiberius, Caligula, Claudius, and Nero—in Egyptian costume, engaged in the ritual of the temple service and assuming the functions of the Pharaohs whom they succeeded.

But in spite of the comparatively undamaged character of the temple at Denderah the shrine there is empty—there is no statue of Hathor. It has been left to Prof. Naville to find the first goddess in her shrine since the excavation of old Egypt was begun.

* * *

The first sentiment of those who found the beautiful statue seems to have been one of alarm lest the treasure should be stolen or damaged. The communication to The London Times says:

"The Government was immediately notified, and the same evening some soldiers arrived, who are on guard night and day. The statue will be removed to Cairo as soon as possible, and the shrine also will probably be taken down and rebuilt in the museum. The value of these things is so enormous, and the difficulties of guarding them so great, that it is felt to be too serious a risk should they be left in the present position, especially as to the chances of pillage is added the possibility of destruction by falling rocks."

Prof. Naville and Mr. Currelly conclude by saying that they had supposed that their work in uncovering the temple at Thebes would be completed this year, but that the finding of the avenue in the direction of the mountain will demand another campaign.

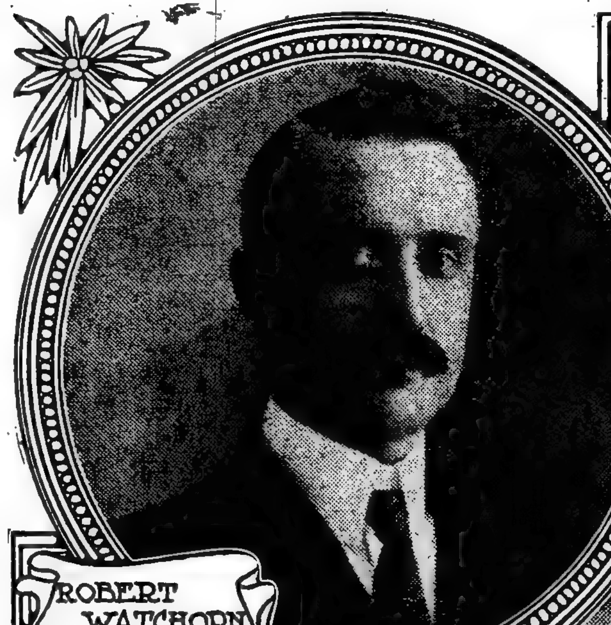
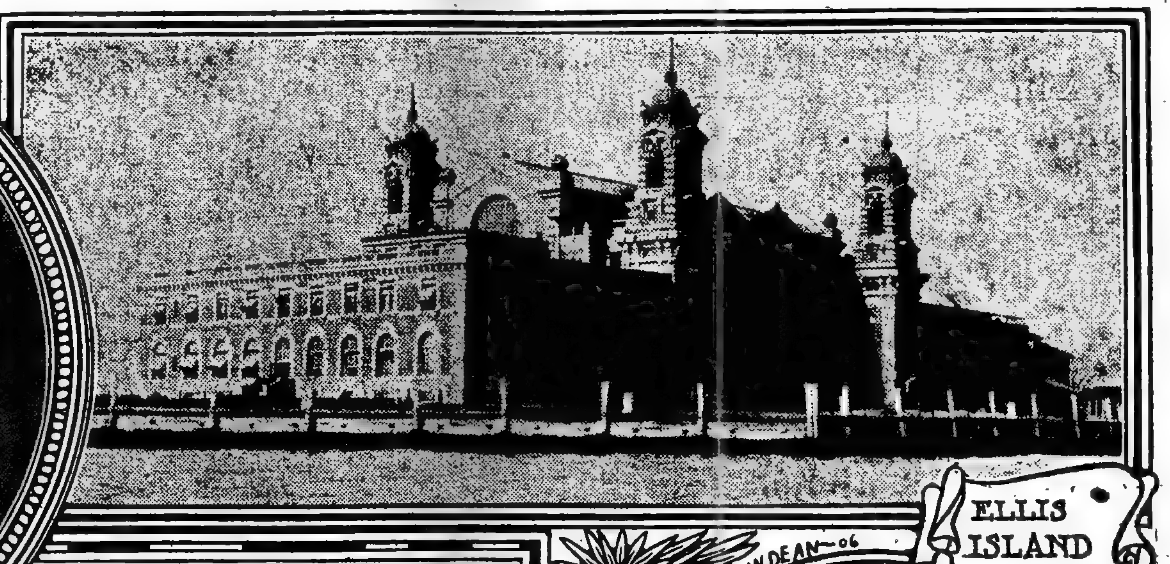
Immigration Record Will Be Broken This Year

Yet Commissioner Watchorn Sees No Grounds for Alarm---Better Class of Foreigners Are Coming to Our Shores---Where Most of Them Are Going.



ROBERT WATCHORN
Commissioner of Immigration Port of New York



JACOB MITHELSTADT AND HIS FAMILY
"Seven Soldiers Lost to the Kaiser"

RUTHENIAN GIRL IMMIGRANT

BASING predictions upon present figures, it may be stated upon the authority of Immigration Commissioner Robert Watchorn that the present fiscal year ending next June will record the greatest immigration in the history of the United States. It will exceed the immigration figures for last year—821,169—by many thousands.

Is this fact a cause for National alarm, or is it a cause for National rejoicing? How shall the immigration problem be solved? As a matter of fact, does it vitally require solution? What is this problem, after all? Is it a bugaboo that we have reared, a sort of a National cry of wolf in which there is no genuine economic basis, no adequate foundation in fact?

These questions and many like unto them may be set down as the result of a strenuous and a delightful morning spent with Commissioner Watchorn in the height of the early Spring immigration rush at Ellis Island, a rush which last week brought more than 25,000 aliens to our shores.

"I have not the time to sit here and talk to you," said the Commissioner, "but if you do not mind running as you read, so to speak, I should be happy to have your company," which, as a matter of fact, was just what the visitor desired. And he ran and he read, and an illuminating summary of what he read may be presented in a series of utterances on the part of the Commissioner which are almost if not quite epigrammatic, and which at all events throw a sane and reasonable light upon this absorbing and timely topic of immigration. Here are some of them:

"We cannot have too much of the right kind of immigration; we cannot have too little of the wrong kind. We are seeing to it that we get the right kind—and we are getting the right kind, of that I am certain. Consequently I believe that increased immigration of the kind we are admitting to our shores makes for the National weal.

"The prime cause of immigration is the letters foreigners in this country write to relatives and friends and to foreign newspapers. These letter writers have thrived, and they spread the news of their success abroad. The result is an influx of bright, ambitious men and women, the brawn and backbone of any country.

"Stop the United States mail to Europe for one year and you would bring foreign immigration to an abrupt, an almost absolute close.

"Aliens arriving through Ellis Island last year brought with them money aggregating $938,660. Shake more than 800,000 Americans together and send them abroad, and I doubt if they would make as good, certainly no better, showing.

"Of the 41,412 immigrants arriving here last January 34,363 were between the ages of 14 and 44 years—formative years of youth and manhood; splendid years. Five thousand two hundred and seventy-two of the January total were under 14 years of age, and only 1,837 were over 44 years of age. So what did we get, therefore? Was it not the youth and strength and vigor and ambition of foreign lands?

"Seventy per cent. of the aliens arriving here go straight out West, out into the open spaces—where they are needed. Eighteen per cent. went to the New England States, and only 12 per cent. stayed in New York City.

"In New York State at the present time there are 12,000 vacant farms. This is the case to a greater or less extent in other States. Why? Because the native-born youth is hurrying to the cities; the foreigners are taking their places out on the farm lands and open spaces. Can you detect anything save an economic advantage in this arrangement? An advantage that cannot but fail to accrue to the National welfare?

"If a steel mill were to start in a Mississippi swamp, paying wages of $2 a day, the news would hum through foreign lands in a month, and that swamp would be a beehive of humanity and industry in an incredibly short space of time.

"American wages are the honey pot that brings the alien flies."

⁂

From all this it would appear that Commissioner Watchorn is a man who has gained something from his work. He impresses you as that sort of a man. He is a man of brawn, a man who knows how to use his hands in both the sporting and industrial sense of the phrase. He grew up with the people; he was a coal miner as a boy and young man. Later he was Chief Factory Inspector in Pennsylvania, and then he drifted into the immigration service, studying the alien problem for this Government at its very sources in foreign lands. At one time he was an under Inspector at Ellis Island, and then from 1901 to 1905 he had charge of the immigration on the Canadian border, the back-door route to the United States. He has been Commissioner at Ellis Island for just one year. All in all, it may be accepted that his experience gives anything he may say with regard to immigration peculiar weight.

And from what he has said, as quoted above, it may be gathered that he views immigration in a light essentially optimistic—and he is a labor man, heart and soul, at that.

⁂

As he talked he stood in the great examination room, through which 5,030 aliens were passing without confusion, without noise, without the slightest disorder of any kind. Of this five thousand-odd, 1,102 came from the steamship Prinz Oskar, 1,230 from the Calabria, 518 from the Caledonia, 1,001 from the Carmania, 1,179 from La Gascogne. The steamship Republic was steaming up the bay with 2,700 more, but—

"We won't get the Republic's 2,700 until to-morrow," said the Commissioner, "although we would not care much if they did come to-day. We often pass 7,000 in a day here; at a pinch, working nine hours, we can examine and pass 9,000 under the system which we have now instituted.

"You see, the water is too shallow for steamships to land the aliens direct at this island, and so they stay on the steamship until after she is docked. Then steamboats and barges bring them here. The steamship companies used to dump their steerage passengers upon us in no order at all, and as a consequence the work of examining and passing them was tedious and dilatory. Now, however, the steamship companies, as a result of a vigorous three months' fight I waged, arrange them in batches of thirty. Each batch of thirty is accounted for on a sheet, which gives statistics and all facts concerning them. Each batch of thirty is lettered, A, B, C, &c., and the sheet which applies to a special batch bears a corresponding letter. In this way you see we are able to proceed with speed and precision.

"So far as the steamship companies are concerned I may say that they are very loath to inaugurate innovations, but sooner or later, for one reason or another, they come to our way of thinking. One very important fact that they have lately digested is that it does not pay for them to ship any old sort of an immigrant to this country. The reason why they have come to know this is that we catch the undesirable aliens at this island and make the company take them back at its own expense, plus also the cost of maintaining them while they are in this port. We sent back so many persons in this way that the steamship companies finally issued letters to their agents all over the world saying that it was absolutely useless for them to send on would-be Americans who were ailing in body or mind, or who were otherwise ineligible to land under the immigration laws of the United States.

"The refusal of steamship companies to carry undesirable immigrants is one of the greatest checks upon pernicious immigration that I know of. Last year, for instance, the various steamship companies refused to bring 20,000 aliens to this country, not through any deep regard for our laws, of course, but simply for their own interests, knowing that we would have sent them back even if they had brought them here. This action on the part of the steamship companies has eliminated much of the distress and suffering we used to see on this island—the tearing apart of wives and husbands and mothers and children and the like. When a husband or mother or child is refused passage at some foreign port the rest of the family usually refuse to sail, too. If the steamship company allows a family passage, ailing member and all, then we have to send the ailing one back. Of course the family cannot go back with this ailing member free of charge, so they go on to their destination, while the undesirable member is deported.

"All this, of course, is pathetically disagreeable all around. But, as I said, the recent stand taken by steamship companies has obviated much of this sort of distress. Here are figures, which I give out for the first time, showing the number of persons rejected by the steamship companies of their own accord in the six months ended Dec. 31 of last year, excepting the number rejected by the North German Lloyd Line, which covers the calendar year of 1905":

Cunard Line	1,156
White Star Line	960
American Line	269
Holland-America Line	712
Red Star Line	664
Anchor Line	233
Hamburg-American Line	270
North German Lloyd	10,292
Rejected at the "control stations"	1,470
Total	16,026

⁂

The Commissioner, having abstracted the above figures from his pocket, swept his glance over the room, leading the reporter's eye finally to the overhead balconies, from either extreme of which depended huge American flags.

"It shows them what the colors are, and what colors we expect them to love hereafter," observed Mr. Watchorn apropos of nothing. "And they do come to love those colors, and in a year they will fight for them as heartily, as bravely, as any native-born son. * * * We have made many improvements in this room. You see, when they land from the barges they are placed in a general reception room down stairs, and thence they are brought up into this examination room.

"As you see, this place is divided by steel fences into twenty-two aisles, each aisle being lettered. As each batch of thirty immigrants comes up they are shunted by ushers into the aisles corresponding in letter to those which the batches bear. A doctor stationed at each aisle examines the aliens, and then they are sent through the aisle to the other end of the room, where they bring up against the desk of an Inspector, one at each aisle, where their financial condition as well as their moral standing in their own country and other important considerations are looked into.

"If they are satisfactory the Inspectors pass them out of this room into various rooms as their destinations suggest—the 'railroad room,' the 'New England room,' the 'New York City room.' Such as are not satisfactory are confined in the detention room, where in good time one or the other of our four boards of inquiry gives them the opportunity to show cause why they should not be deported. Cases held up by the surgeons are placed in another detention room, where they are examined more in detail, or if the results of the superficial examination are borne out they are ordered deported.

"The chief changes in this room of which I spoke a minute ago are the increasing of the number of aisles from fifteen to twenty-two and the widening of them from two feet six inches to four feet six inches, with the installation of seats. Formerly immigrants laden with their bundles had to stand for hours in these narrow spaces; now they have ample room, with the increased advantage of being able to sit down while they wait."

Mr. Watchorn said further that the work in this room, so far as amount was concerned, as well as the present increase in immigration over last year—the greatest immigration year on record—might best be appreciated by the following table, which he compiled for THE NEW YORK TIMES:

	Fiscal Year 1905.		Fiscal Year 1906.
	Admitted.	Debarred.	Admitted.	Debarred.
July	45,487	508	61,509	1,061
August	46,470	370	52,028	913
September	54,793	400	63,055	379
October	57,395	331	69,068	198
November	55,861	384	50,082	331
December	49,930	613	52,082	274
January	46,231	1,321	43,064	222
February	53,176	640	57,033	256
March	105,115	422	....	...
April	112,178	435	....	...
May	104,929	723	....	...
June	89,534	967	....	...

"You will see from this that almost every month of the present year shows an increase in immigration," said Mr. Watchorn, "and the record from now is going to show a still more decided increase, which will continue, no doubt, until a panic or hard times sends foreigners scuttling back home again. Not all of our work here, however, is confined to the steerage. Of the 821,169 aliens who arrived here last year 98,428 came in the cabin. Of this number we took 2,882 passengers to Ellis Island, and after thorough examination deported 102 of them. Of the 722,741 steerage passengers we deported 7,078, and the number of deportations would have been almost twice as great had it not been for the action of the steamship companies in refusing passage to questionable applicants.

"There is another big point that I should like to impress upon you in connection with this immigration question," continued Mr. Watchorn, "and that is that from the immigration figures for any year the alarmist must deduct at least 40 per cent. from the total. I say this, not only because of the deportations, but because of the outflow of aliens to their mother land each year. It is enormous. In five months of 1905, for instance, 19,803 aliens left here in the steerage for British ports, 25,546 aliens for Continental ports, and 16,436 aliens for Mediterranean ports—a five months' record, remember. When we tabulate the total outflow of steerage passengers for 1905 I have no doubt you will find that it exceeds the total for 1904—365,149."

⁂

When Commissioner Watchorn is not too deeply involved in his duties he loves to take advantage of the invitations of labor unions and other bodies to attend their meetings and be wigged for having favorable views with regard to the admission of aliens to our shores.

"You are a carpenter?" he said one night last week at a particularly stormy meeting to a particularly stormy restriction partisan.

"Yes," said the man.

"How long have you been in this country?"

"Twenty-six years."

"What wages did you receive twenty-six years ago?"

"Two and a half dollars a day."

"What do you receive now?"

"Four dollars and a half a day."

"Has immigration hurt you, then?"

"I wasn't thinking about myself."

"So you were thinking about something else of which you knew nothing."

And the Amalgamated Carpenters rose as a man and cheered for Watchorn.

DOES QUEER FOOD MAKE QUEER PEOPLE?---AN HOUR WITH THE VEGETARIANS

A GENTLEMAN living in Red Bank, Ohio, wrote a letter recently which was published in a periodical devoted to strange things, in which he said that he never felt quite well without a dish of fresh grass for breakfast. He was 82 years old, and believed he had attained that age on account of the grass he ate.

This was enough to pique one's interest, and when an old lady told me that her morals had been kept intact because she ate celery every day of her life, I dropped into a vegetarian restaurant on Eighteenth Street to look more closely into the phenomena of food.

Of course we eat too much, and far too fearlessly, but when a prominent vegetarian explained that fish frequently caused sudden death, that entrées were licensed manslaughter, that soup was a nest of germs, and that cooked meat was nothing but dead matter, I clutched the vegetarian bill of fare before me, and read it eagerly again.

This is what it offered:

Nut Chowder.
Nectar.
Ripe Olives.
Stuffed Protose.
Asparagus.
Potatoes.
Bread and Butter.
Fruit Salad.
Dessert and Coffee.

There were besides myself perhaps twenty-five others, ladies and gentlemen, solemnly eating this hygienic meal. Most of its ingredients were prepared in Battle Creek, Mich., and shipped to New York in packages and tins.

⁂

When a man has reached a state of passive melancholy he can be properly described as a vegetable, and it seemed as though a vegetable calm was upon this assembly.

They talked in whispers, they looked hungry, and they sighed much.

A blight was upon their gastronomic consciences and determined meekness in their manner.

The waitress with the Cleo de Merode hair showed that she only "worked" there; that she ate somewhere else. She at least was of the material world; the rest were hoping against hope, eating in defense of their honor. And let it be understood that the honor of a vegetarian is nuts to him or her, just as much as it is to the lost souls who eat elsewhere.

Your true-blue vegetarian looks upon the man who eats fish and meat and entrées and pie as a degenerate, a being morally and physically to be shunned. I know this, because the prominent vegetarian who talked to us from the bottom of his potatoes, after the vegetables, told us so.

Ah! his was a proud, sweet, oily nut that he cracked at the expense of the few million people who knew not the psychology of protose.

He spared no steak-eater his disaster; he revealed the hideous gases lurking in the sparkle of champagne, and he spoke of a hot roll as if it were a baseball.

"Have nothing to do with cream," he said scornfully; "think what deprivations you inflict on the cow."

⁂

There must be latent emotion in nut chowder, for frequently when the speaker lost himself in some vegetable problem he would exclaim, oh! so sadly: "Isn't it pitiful, isn't it pitiful!" and it certainly was.

I asked the waitress à la Cleo de Merode what the nut chowder was made of.

"Nuts," said she.

"And the nectar?" I asked.

"Raspberry juice, lemon, and water," said she.

"And the protose?" I asked.

"Nuts," said she.

"And the butter?"

"Nuts," said she, ("butternuts.")

"And the cream sticks?"

"Cream and nuts," said she.

"And the fruit salad?"

"Bananas, lettuce, and nuts," said she.

When we had finished our vegetables several vegetarians took out notebooks and began to put down little wisdoms that the prominent vegetarian uttered.

"Are you taking this for publication?" he asked one particularly industrious apostle of nuts.

He shook his head vigorously, indignant of the charge.

"Ah! I didn't suppose you would do such a thing," said the speaker, and then he came over to me and explained that the press was always untrustworthy; that it knew nothing about the "food question."

Perhaps there is fundamental truth in the vegetarian's theory that most of us do not eat as we should, but where is the physician who would attempt to strengthen a convalescent on nut broth and raw peas, for instance?

"I knew a man once who lived on two meals a day of three apples and about twenty nuts," said the speaker, and then went on to tell the story of a vegetarian who had fallen from grace, and, having taken to sirloin steak and pie, was at that moment in the hospital ill with typhoid fever.

If he had stuck to raw spinach, raw peas, nuts, and nectar it was inferred that he would have been present enjoying the delicious benefits of protose.

"There is life in raw food and morals in it, too," he continued. "Celery cleanses the mind; the natural man eats raw things. Even the animals understand this."

There were times, said the speaker, when he fervently wished "the cows were all killed."

"Peas are the Summer nut," he said, and when a New England dame asked if peanuts were as good, he replied: "Nothing that grows underground is as vital. I do not entirely indorse potatoes for that reason. Yet I will say that peas and peanuts are own cousins. Peas are absolutely dangerous when cooked; so are beans. Did you ever eat raw beans, Madam?"

"No. I have found raw peas extremely delicious, though," said the lady from New England.

"Ah! but raw beans are exquisite and should never be cooked. Cooked food is only fit for degenerates; the healthy, moral man never touches such food."

"Should we eat bread?" asked another lady yearningly.

"Bread is improperly called the staff of life. Wheat contains all the salts, all the ingredients that make the chemical compound called man. Wheat, uncooked, is good. In fact, a little of it is necessary to health; say, a handful three times a week. Bread I should call the remaker of man, not his staff."

⁂

Oats, the speaker said, were injurious to horses; but what could the poor horse do about it?

"How do you explain that Fletcher of the Yale crew trained entirely on buckwheat cakes and syrup?" asked a philosophic-looking old gentleman solemnly.

"That question has come up before. I explain it partly because he did not have to masticate such food." And when I asked a neighbor to explain he said that vegetarians never chewed their food, the consequence being that their teeth finally dropped out from disuse.

"Then your advice is to Fletcherize our food," persisted the old gentleman seriously.

"Vegetarians do not clean their teeth," said the speaker by way of assent. "They do not have to. No animal cleans its teeth."

And yet the lobster in "Alice in Wonderland" brushed its hair! The logic of this vegetarian debate unconsciously recalled Lewis Carroll's delicious, rambling humor.

"We must Fletcherize, that's it," murmured the old gentleman with a twinkle in his eye, as he turned to some one near him.

"But I make them chew without knowing it. Take nuts, for instance," continued the speaker, picking up the thread of his discourse defiantly.

"You mean almonds?" said a voice of protose meekness.

"Almonds are monkey nuts; they are too hard for human beings. The pecan nuts, the filberts, are excellent; they have so much oil in them."

"Would you advise eating walnuts?" asked a toothless vegetarian.

"No. They have been cultivated and cultivated until there is no spontaneity left in them."

⁂

Too much of the higher education in the walnut!

"Should we eat nuts that come from foreign countries?" urged the toothless one.

"Eat nuts that grow in your own climate, and above all patronize the nut of your own country. Every climate has its own natural food. The torrid zone, for instance, has a Summer food of its own, fit for its climate. Above all things, don't eat bananas away from the climate where they grow."

"Mustn't we eat oranges in New York?" some one inquired.

"Well, I wouldn't advise eating oranges if I was living in Canada," said the speaker, ingeniously avoiding the thrust.

From Canada we skipped to Japan.

"The Japanese are said to be vegetarians; is that why they are so small of stature?" asked the philosophic old gentleman again.

"Now you pain me, you get [illegible]," said the speaker, a flush on his nut-brow[illegible] "The Japanese are not vegetarians. They eat abominably. They eat fish and drink tea with it. Isn't it pitiful?"

⁂

After a discussion upon international troubles that had nothing to do with vegetarian doctrines, some one, inspired by this talking trip around the world, asked about dates.

"Nature, probably realizing that man would have to do some traveling in his lifetime, I fancy, invented dates as a traveling food, something that would keep," said the speaker blandly.

"What about prunes?" asked the toothless one again.

"Prune, as I am sure you must know, is French for plum. It isn't generally known, of course, therefore I tell you. I went into a big restaurant the other day, and the only thing I could find to eat there was dry prunes. Just think of it! Isn't it pitiful?"

This ended the debate, and as the philosophic old gentleman passed out he was heard saying to himself:

"Fletcherize your prunes, say I. Fletcherize them."

EDISON'S ADVANTAGE.

THE late Marshall Field of Chicago paid Thomas Edison a neat tribute. While the great merchant was walking along State Street in conversation with a business associate a stirring military march was wafted from the great horn of a phonograph.

"That's a pretty fair piece of music," observed Mr. Field, appreciatively, "brimful of melody and free from harshness."

"Yes," assented his companion, and then added reminiscently, "Isn't that man Edison a genius? Just think of it, at one time he didn't own a dollar, and now the revenues from his inventions are enormous."

"And how modest he is," commented Mr. Field as a tooting automobile blocked the men's progress at a street corner, "why, Edison is the only man on record who doesn't have to go around blowing his own horn in public."

Maxim Gorky Tells of the Progress of the Russian Revolution---Francis Kossuth on the Austro-Hungarian Crisis---King Edward and the Kaiser--The Hermit Czar.

Gorky Returns to St. Petersburg.

When Woman's Intuition Counts.

A Council of Three.

THE BRAINS OF THE RUSSIAN REVOLUTION.

A Year of Revolution in Dakest Russia.

By Maxim Gorky.

THE progress that has been made during the past year to free Russia from autocratic rule has opened a much larger vista of work to be done than seemed possible at the beginning of 1905. The great danger at present to be faced is that the people, exhausted as they are, may relax their efforts. Only last October they had practically forced autocracy to abdicate. Unfortunately, too pleased with their success, they momentarily relaxed their efforts and gave autocracy the opportunity to issue a manifesto limiting its own power. That was a grave mistake.

The revolutionary movement as it now stands is obliged to take into account those persons who have in the meantime been won over to the Government by minor reforms and promises of larger ones, which, in the very nature of things, cannot be carried out. The Douma, for which elections are being held, can never meet. Certain people, believing that it will meet, confine their revolutionary efforts to the preparation of concessions to be drawn from it. It will never be allowed to meet, for its first expression of opinion against autocracy would be so overwhelming that the Government could no longer resist the demand for legislation based entirely upon the will of the people.

What is this Douma? It is a limited franchise through which the Czar graciously asks the people to aid him—according to his will—in getting rid of the old order of things. Now we do not wish to aid the Czar in burying the old régime. We desire to attend to the burying ourselves. The resurrection of the new Russia must be in our hands—not his; for so long as he can suggest legislation to the Douma, just so long the Douma will be obliged to do his bidding. Still, as I have stated, the Douma will never come together.

What we demand is a constituent assembly, which shall be the rightful voice of the nation, inherently empowered to decide incontestably what the nation needs and desires. This constituent assembly should be absolute—a microcosm of the nation—and in drawing up the new constitution of Russia it and it alone should decide what limitations shall be placed on the action of the various governing bodies. If it leaves in existence any of the old authority it must make with that authority a pact of which it can force the observance. It should be elected by direct, not, as is the present Douma, by indirect, voting. It would therefore represent the mandate of every individual man in the empire. It should have complete power, retrospective as well as prospective, and this would prevent the bureaucrats from violating the law and engineering the elections in their own interests, as is done in Germany. Moreover, its promulgation would insure the subsidence of the revolutionary movement and complete peace. For that reason alone electioneering would be practicable.

In spite of the fact that autocracy, as I have said, would like to assist at its own funeral, and although its specious arguments for so doing have appealed to many—particularly to the peasant class, which is still firmly devoted to the idea that it should be grateful for any concession which Czardom in its supreme right and power may feel disposed to grant—the progress against autocracy made during the past year has been much greater than foreigners may imagine. There have been two general strikes and numberless armed outbreaks which the Government has been powerless to put down. In all these demonstrations there have been significant signs not discernible on the surface. Only in those districts where the Government is in full control have Jew-baiting disorders occurred; never in those where the revolutionists were in authority. In more than one town the workingmen, temporarily triumphant, have never consciously harmed a single individual other than soldiers or policemen. Where in other countries mutinous soldiers are the most dangerous enemies of civil order, in Russia they place themselves under revolutionary leaders and refrain from plunder and outrage. There are two conclusions to be drawn from this: The revolutionists are glad to have the Jews make common cause with them in their fight against autocracy. This is a right, an obligation which the Jews do not ignore. Jew-baiting is part of the Government's policy in a vain attempt to bring the revolutionists into the contempt of the world. The Government could end it to-morrow by punishing negligent or criminal officials under whose jurisdiction alone, as I have stated, the outrages continue to occur.

In spite of the half successes which the Government's specious policy of limited and supervised liberalism has achieved, in spite of the recent attempts at reaction, the hand of revolution has been strengthened morally and materially. We revolutionists have become better acquainted with one another and with one another's needs and desires, and we are bent upon molding all personal and class distinctions into a relentless force for the common cause. By the very means now resorted to by the authorities to coerce us we recognize the fact that they know their cause to be hopeless. The Government is actually becoming kinder and more humane. It is not so ready as it once was to disperse peaceful gatherings by the knout or rifle. True, a great many persons are constantly being arrested, but the Government no longer dares to keep men permanently in prison or exile them without trial.

With every week the ranks of the anti-Governmental party of all phases are augmenting. A year hence I predict—and my prediction is based upon the events of the past year—Russia will be as free as the United States.

Is the King of Italy Stingy?

ROMANS have one criticism to make of their King, Victor Emmanuel III. It is that he does not live like a King. His wife's democratic manners form a strange contrast to the etiquette which still surrounds her mother-in-law, Queen Margherita, while the King himself, when he appears in public, usually does so with a lack of ostentation which causes the admirers of his father, the late King Humbert, to shake their heads in mournful prophecy.

As a matter of fact, Queen Helena learned the severe lesson of economy at the frugal Court of her father, Nicholas of Montenegro, while the King had too many shocking examples of prodigality left him by his father and grandfather ever to feel inclined to follow in their footsteps.

Just now, King Victor Emmanuel is being blamed by the Romans for having shirked the first of the two Court balls, which he annually holds, at the Quirinal. The censure is unjust, for the Court went into mourning on account of the death of King Christian, and the King was not to blame if the first ball had to be postponed. It was later given, but with less than the usual ceremony. The second ball also took place as usual on the last day of the Carnival, but the voices of pessimists continue to be heard.

The Hermit Czar of Tsarskoe-Selo.

HOW the Czar of all the Russias is bearing up under the burden of ruling and reigning over a disrupted and revolutionary empire is related in a private letter written by an officer of the Imperial Bodyguard who has been attached for the past two years to the entourage of Nicholas II. The letter, with certain necessary excisions, runs as follows:

"Ever since the anniversary of 'Red Sunday' the Czar's existence has been one unending series of anxieties . . . which have told heavily upon him. Only among his family does he apparently forget the menace of the revolution, threatening news of which reaches him with the merciless regularity of the ticking of a clock. These are, indeed, his only moments of happiness and relaxation from the worries and cares of state, with perhaps the rare exception of a walk or a ride in the park, which, however, has become a very rare occurrence of late. . . .

"His Majesty invariably spends almost the entire day and night in his private cabinet, either in consultation with his councillors, whom he often summons to his presence at any hour of the night in order to ask their advice, or in work upon projected measures of reform. He writes often for hours at a stretch.

"At other times, the sentries placed at his door hear him pacing restlessly up and down the room till the early hours of the morning, waiting anxiously for reports from his representatives in the provinces. At intervals he will dispatch a message, and then suddenly throwing open the windows gaze out upon the quietness of the night through which his millions of subjects slumber while their unfortunate ruler is still at work. . . .

"His Majesty was never a lover of social functions, but now he appears to abhor society more than ever.

"The Czar himself seems to be the only person at Court who actually realizes the dangers of the present situation, and it is to this fact that the misunderstandings between his Majesty and the Grand Dukes owe their cause. The Czar alone recognizes that a genuine revolution is agitating Russia, and the more closely he notes the symptoms and compares them with those of the French Revolution, the more his anxiety appears to increase, and the more often are his noble eyes dimmed with the mists of sorrow."

Recrudescence of the Dreyfus Case.

WHILE the Cour de Cassation or the Supreme Court of Appeal in France continues to occupy itself with the revision of the Dreyfus case—of which progress little is known except to the initiated—an important question has come up as an echo of the famous "cause" which may at any moment be forced into great prominence.

Commandant Cuignet, who, it may be recalled, discovered the Henry forgery while he was examining the Dreyfus documents during M. Cavaignac's tenure of the Ministry of War, has brought a serious charge against Gen. André, who was Minister of War in the last years of the late M. Waldeck-Rousseau's administration, and for a brief period under Dr. Combes, the late Premier. The trouble has arisen through the fact that a letter addressed by the Commandant to Dr. Combes, in December, 1904, has been published by a Nationalist newspaper. The Commandant, for causing this publication, was placed under arrest.

In the letter in question the writer expressed his regret that he could not give certain evidence in a law court, adding that, as he had missed such an opportunity, he felt bound to state what he would have said if he had had the chance. He then alleged that Gen. André had made or had caused to be made an alteration in an important document of the Dreyfus dossier. But this is not all.

Unabashed by his arrest, the Commandant has published another letter in the Eclair. It is addressed to the present Minister of Justice, M. Charmié. In it the writer goes into further particulars. He states that during the investigation which the Cour de Cassation is now carrying on in connection with the revision of the Dreyfus case, he noticed in May, 1904, during one of his depositions to the Criminal Chamber, that a document of the secret dossier, called "Pièce du télémètre," had been altered since the secret dossier had been in his hands. A date had been added, and another document, known as the "Pièce des chemins de fer." So, holding Gen. André responsible for this alleged alteration, the writer winds up by saying that he had the honor to lodge a complaint against Gen. André, specifying his accusation and adding some very strong language.

Officers are not allowed to communicate directly or indirectly with the press on matters connected with the service, while all letters that they may wish to address to members of the Government are expected to be transmitted through their own superiors. What Commandant Cuignet is understood to desire is a judicial investigation into his position. He has brought a terrible accusation against Gen. André, and he is believed to wish to be prosecuted so that he may have an opportunity of stating his case and of repeating his charge in court.

In the meantime the "affaire Cuignet-André" is being used by the Nationalists and their allies in the Chamber as a stick with which to beat the Government.

Why Edward VII. Continues to Ignore His Nephew.

BY inviting M. Delcassé, former French Minister of Foreign Affairs, to dine with him in Paris, King Edward VII. has rather disturbed the prophecies made in the German press a fortnight ago to the effect that the relations between the King and the German Emperor were so far improved that the two sovereigns were likely to meet next Summer. The excuse that was formally given for inviting M. Delcassé was that the King desired to recognize this gentleman's efforts in bringing about the Anglo-French era of good feeling. But it is not forgotten that M. Delcassé was forced to resign the Foreign Portfolio a year ago solely on account of the pressure brought by the Kaiser to bear upon the Quai d'Orsay.

The estrangement noticed for several years between uncle and nephew has usually been attributed to personal reasons, the principal one of which is that King Edward espouses the claim of his cousin, the Duke of Cumberland, to the throne of Hanover, (the Duchess of Cumberland is the youngest sister of Queen Alexandra.) Yet those who know King Edward personally declare that he is too much a man of the world to entertain personal animosity, and that his continued and persistent avoidance of his nephew is due to the fact that he does not approve of the methods employed by the German Kaiser in "preserving the peace of the world."

King Edward has for many months past refrained from saying anything which, if repeated to his august nephew's ear, might perpetuate the estrangement. He is known, however, to hold precise ideas on the subject, which a gentleman who is very close to the King's person has interpreted as follows:

"There is not the slightest doubt that the King deplores the meddling propensity of his nephew, who, believing himself a diplomatist, has no skill to perceive whither his ill-considered actions will lead him. Overjoyed at what he deems the isolation of France, whose ally, to use Bismarck's phrase, is bleeding to death, he has put a definite and useless affront upon the French Republic. By so doing, he has immeasurably tightened the bonds which unite France and England. He persistently misinterpreted the interest and comment which his very remarkable personality naturally arouses throughout the world. And, so long as the world chatters about him, he will cheerfully outrage all the laws of diplomacy and be content to ruin his empire in the sacred name of egotism."

The quarrel between the Kaiser and the Duke of Cumberland is historic. The Kingdom of Hanover passed by virtue of the Salic law, when the late Queen Victoria ascended the throne of Great Britain in 1837, to Ernest, Duke of Cumberland, the eldest surviving son of George III. of England. In 1866 his son George sided with Austria in the Austro-Prussian war, and so lost his kingdom. After the death of the ex-King, his son, the present Duke of Cumberland, claimed the throne of Hanover, but this claim the Kaiser has always rejected.

For the first time in his life he met the Duke of Cumberland the other day at the funeral of the late King Christian in Copenhagen, and it was generally remarked by those present that the greeting exchanged was most formal.

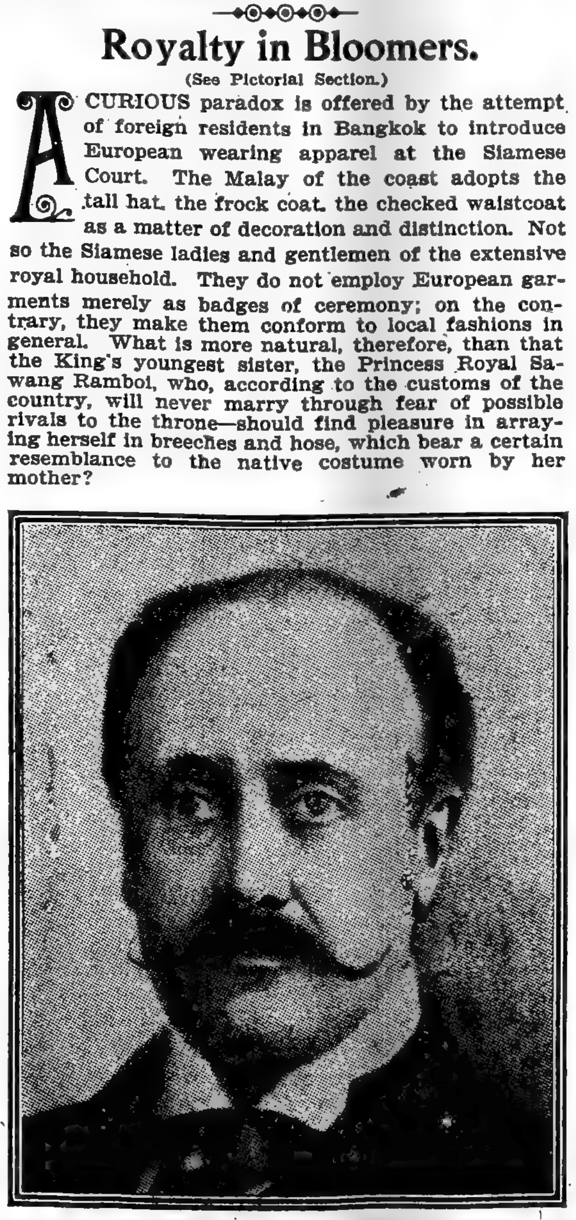
Royalty in Bloomers.

(See Pictorial Section.)

A CURIOUS paradox is offered by the attempt of foreign residents in Bangkok to introduce European wearing apparel at the Siamese Court. The Malay of the coast adopts the tall hat, the frock coat, the checked waistcoat as a matter of decoration and distinction. Not so the Siamese ladies and gentlemen of the extensive royal household. They do not employ European garments merely as badges of ceremony; on the contrary, they make them conform to local fashions in general. What is more natural, therefore, than that the King's youngest sister, the Princess Royal Sawang Rambol, who, according to the customs of the country, will never marry through fear of possible rivals to the throne—should find pleasure in arraying herself in breeches and hose, which bear a certain resemblance to the native costume worn by her mother?



Francis Kossuth, Leader of Hungarian Independents, Son of the Magyar Patriot, Louis Kossuth.

An Italian Sidelight on the Moorish Imbroglio.

THE Rome correspondent of Le Temps in Paris, who constantly shows by the nature of his dispatches that he is persona grata with the Italian Government, has sent the following message to his paper:

"In official circles here there is no attempt to conceal the painful impression produced by Germany's uncompromising attitude at Algeciras. It was firmly hoped at the Foreign Office that Italy, whose claims in the Mediterranean are hardly second to those of France, Spain, and Great Britain, would be able to play the rôle of peacemaker between the former and Germany. But it was not long before the advices from the Marchese Visconti Venosta, the Italian envoy, destroyed this general and perfectly natural delusion.

"Moreover, the pressure of every kind brought to bear by Germany on the Italian Ministry to obtain the support of the Italian delegates at Algeciras has created a feeling of uneasiness, which is perfectly obvious when it is remembered that Italy's hands are bound by the Mediterranean agreements she has entered into with France and England.

"Whoever the statesmen in power may be, they are obliged to reckon with the deep uneasiness of public opinion, which is justly alarmed by the progressive revelations of Germany's designs on Morocco. Only two years ago these designs were regarded as merely the aspirations of Pan-Germanism officially and categorically disavowed by the Imperial Chancellery in Berlin. The unblushing nakedness in which these plans are now revealed increases the apprehensions Italians entertain regarding the designs of Austria on Albania, designs which complete the plan of simultaneous Germanic intrusion in the Mediterranean, the Adriatic, and the Balkans.

"The present instructions to the Italian delegates at Algeciras are to avoid placing themselves in such a position as would compel them formally to decide between France and Germany.

"By putting Italy in this painful and humiliating position, the Berlin Government has shown even those Italians who were least prejudiced against the Triple Alliance that that combination is against their interests as a Mediterranean power, and tends to force upon Italy obligations which were in no way foreseen at the time of the renewal of the treaty, and which are contrary to her friendly relations with France and Great Britain."

Vienna Outdoes Boston.

BOSTONIANS who bewail the "closing time" of their own modern Athens may find in Vienna a different system of "closing time" in vogue which trespasses even more remorselessly on individual rights. It is a direful custom maintained by law combined of the "Sperrstunde" and the "Sperrgeld"—closing time and entrance money—originated in the parlous time of 1848, when the Government used the janitors of apartment houses very much as the Russian police make use of the "dvornik" to-day for the purpose of spying upon the occupants of their houses.

It is quite natural that the Viennese have become tired of paying ten kreuzer, or four cents, to get into or come out of their own houses after 10 P. M., and many good citizens are agitating for an extension of the "closing time" until 11 o'clock. The custom is peculiar to Vienna; for in other Austrian cities where it once obtained the polite janitors have provided their tenants with house keys, and the "Sperrgeld" has lost its identity under the guise of various tips. Only in Vienna must those who are out after 10 o'clock ring up the janitor and pay four cents before they can get to their own apartments. Similarly, too, anybody wanting to leave the house between that time and 6 o'clock the next morning, be he visitor or tenant, must pay the same toll, which is the perquisite of the janitor.

An Example for France.

ALTHOUGH great size for battleships was already a feature of the new French naval programme, questions of armament, speed, and thickness of armor are to receive supplementary attention at the meeting of the French Superior Council of Marine next week.

Le Temps thinks that in all probability the example set in high speed, heavy gun power, and armor by the new battleship Dreadnought will be followed. But this paper points out that no naval programmes have been modified since the battle of Tsu-shima, and quotes a Japanese officer to show that there was nothing extraordinary in that battle. It had been won, the officer said, by the combination of the strength and energy of the whole fleet, which knew well how to utilize not only the best material but also that which was out of date and even antique. "The characteristics of the Dreadnought and the Aki do not come from Tsu-shima. They would have been the same, battle or no battle."

The Paris paper clinches its argument by pointing out that Japan, Great Britain, Germany, and France had laid down, even before the battle, keels for warships of from 18,000 to 19,000 tons, while the armament, armor, and speed of these vessels were to be left to future experiments. There is a popular desire in France, aside from official opinion, to have French warships of the future copies of the British Dreadnought, which has no intermediary battery.

Hungary's Great Struggle Against Austrian Absolutism.

By Francis Kossuth.

IT is a somewhat remarkable fact that certain important foreign newspapers persist in siding with Emperor Francis Joseph in the conflict between him and the nation of Hungary—especially as this conflict long since degenerated into a struggle between Parliamentarism and royal prerogative.

In the typical land of constitutional freedom, when other countries are concerned, the same measure is not applied in the same case, and there are many men living under a free Government who, ignoring the fact that the charter of Hungarian freedom is as old as the English Magna Charta, are not sympathetic with the present Hungarian struggle because they are traditionally attached to a myth—the balance of power in Central Europe must be maintained by Austria.

These good men do not see that if there is one thing that threatens the balance of power in Central Europe it is precisely the state of affairs in Austria, which—owing to its abnormal condition—can only make for war, as it actually did all through the latter half of the last century, and can by no means be a guarantee of European peace.

How, indeed, could such an empire be a guarantee of peace in which the normal state of affairs must necessarily be a reversion of the proper order? The German element, which constitutes scarcely one-third of the population of Austria, wishes permanently to domineer over the two-thirds of non-Germans, and the German hegemony is kept up in the Hungarian Army, although only 11 per cent. of it consists of Germans.

A monarchy which must necessarily be, and is, continually in a state of ebullition is the worst element of peace that can be imagined, especially when the Germans of Austria yield, as they do, to the natural law of attraction toward the large body of other Germans, those forming the powerful German Fatherland.

* * *

For a long time the Emperor-King was disposed to govern in a constitutional manner, because ever since he agreed to give up the outward signs of autocracy (since 1867) the same political party had permanently been in power in Hungary—a party whose principle it was to have no will except the King's. It became the absolute rule that in every single question, even regarding the smallest detail, the Governments which succeeded each other accepted the royal commands, and no bill was ever introduced into Parliament, no Government policy ever adopted, and no act of Government ever performed without first receiving precise orders and instructions from the King.

What is autocracy? Nothing but this, that in all the affairs of the State the monarch's will is omnipotent, his orders are taken and obeyed in every single particular.

That was the case in Hungary without exception. And during the whole period which has elapsed since 1867 the majority in Parliament only once expressed its will, and at first the measure in question was not approved of by the King, but subsequently was allowed to pass; that was the Civil Marriage bill.

The very first time the majority in Parliament dared to have an opinion of its own it was at once prevented from forming a Government on the basis of its programme; nay, it was ordered to come into power with the programme dictated by the King, or if it would not do that Parliament has permanently been prorogued and prevented from sitting and the whole country governed "extra legem," with the violation of every single constitutional privilege and the clearest prescriptions of written law.

And now, although the majority offered to vote the budget, grant the recruits, and even the formidable outlay for new artillery, &c., and only asked for the right to prepare a new franchise law on a broader basis of suffrage (at present only one-fifth of the adults have a vote,) and then to ask the nation whether it wishes to continue the constitutional fight with the autocracy or give it up for the present, this offer of the Parliamentary majority was also rejected, and the King's wish is that Parliament should simply obey.

* * *

No Parliament that has any life in it can submit to that, and so ours was dissolved on Feb. 19, and some form of mild or severe absolutism is to replace the system according to which Hungary has been ruled since 1867, but which was nothing but a sham, a pretense of constitutionalism serving as a convenient though costly medium of absolute autocracy, in which there was only one will—the King's.

The majority of Parliament wished the official language of the Hungarian State to be used in the Hungarian army and also for the Hungarian flag.

It must be noted that the Austro-Hungarian monarchy is a dual monarchy, in which Austria and Hungary are supposed by law to be absolutely equal in every particular.

Clearly it was an abuse of power to impose upon Hungary the German language and the imperial eagle of Austria.

The Hungarian Parliament had had enough of it, and wished the King of Hungary to command the Hungarian army in Hungarian. When that was refused we felt about as English people would feel if the English army were commanded in French or German.

No one can tell what will be the issue of the very serious complications which will now arise, except that Austria-Hungary has ceased to be one of the great powers of Europe, and will not again become one until internal peace has been re-established, not the apparent peace produced by oppression, but the peace produced by the assured feeling that constitutional liberties are safe and that law is respected.

Scheme to Turn Out Traitors.

THE anti-militarist movement in Paris has presented a new phase. In a recent number of the Voix du Peuple there is an article on "Le Sou du Soldat," ("The Soldier's Pittance,") which explains that the labor organizations have opened funds for sending money to all soldiers serving their time who are members of the union. The article reminds soldiers that the labor exchanges are "very hospitable to soldiers. Their libraries, reading rooms, and classes are largely open to them, and there are some of the exchanges which provide writing paper and stamps free to soldiers."

As this article followed one in which young soldiers were advised, if war should break out, to desert and fraternize with the enemy, the Voix du Peuple, with its Socialist circulation, which has suddenly risen from 10,000 to 75,000, has been seized by the Government.

The French Minister of Justice has announced his intention to prosecute the 2,300 persons who signed the recent anti-military appeal which called upon soldiers to desert.

IN a large, well-ventilated house, handsome inside and out, in private apartments of their own, live, and have been living for the last four or five years, a couple whose domestic relations are worthy of notice.

The house is the Lion House in the New York Zoological Park, the apartments are the large, roomy cages, and the couple of whom I speak are Sultan, a fine, full-grown Barbary lion, and Bedouin Maid, his wife. They had never met each other until their arrival in the Park as residents in the new Lion House, and both being strangers and foreigners, were only too glad to make one another's acquaintance. The acquaintance developed into friendship and finally into pleasant and happy relationship.

Sultan came from Carl Hagenbeck's establishment in Germany, and for a time was anything but pleased and contented with America. No doubt he longed for his native home and his freedom, but after awhile, especially when he had found a congenial companion, he became quiet and contented and is now one of the best-tempered lions in captivity. At the sight of his keeper he will get up, spring over to the wire netting, and rub himself against it just like an old tame cat, often purring loudly at the same time. Unlike most lions, who seldom care for frivolity—lionesses are always inclined to frolic—he is also playful at times, and at a few friendly touches and words from his keeper will roll over on his back, wave his paws in the air, and enjoy it as much as any young kitten.

His life has not been particularly eventful since his residence here, each day is much the same as another, and when he is not pacing up and down waiting for his dinner, he is generally sleeping peacefully. When sleeping, outside things, such as noises or visitors, are absolutely indifferent to him, and he sleeps peacefully through all attempts to attract his attention, not even taking the trouble to open an eye to see what it is.

* * *

But one day, when Sultan was sleeping as usual in this calm, placid manner, Mr. Hagenbeck came into the Lion House, and standing in front of the cage said quietly:

"Why, there's my old friend, Sultan!"

The sound of that voice was as an electric shock to the lion. In an instant his sleepiness disappeared as if by magic, and with a bound and curious little guttural purr he was up and over at the bars rubbing himself, purring his loudest, and doing all in his power to show his delight and pleasure at seeing Mr. Hagenbeck again. The two old friends shook hands warmly, metaphorically, and it was doubtful who was the more pleased. This incident seems a pretty good proof that animals have memories of past events, although they probably never think of them unless reminded by some such instance as this. Pleased and excited as Sultan was to meet an old friend, he appeared absolutely to forget the incident as soon as it was closed, and almost before Mr. Hagenbeck had got through the doorway, settled down contentedly, licked his paws, rested his huge head comfortably on them, and calmly finished his nap.

Bedouin Maid, his wife, has not met any friends or had any adventures, but, like most mothers, she has had her troubles. About four years ago there came an eventful morning when no less than five small cubs arrived, and Bedouin Maid was the very proudest mother that ever walked the earth, or the floor of a cage. She seemed surprised herself at having such a large family, two or three being the general number, and was bewildered, restless, and nervous for some time. The little cubs were fine, healthy little specimens who looked about and around the world from the moment they were born—lion cubs are always born with their eyes wide open—mewed like little kittens and were certainly the prettiest little animals ever seen.

Their little soft, tawny bodies were covered with faint dark spots, they were well formed, had neat, nicely rounded heads, and looked as though they had all just awakened from a refreshing nap. For the first few days after she became a mother Bedouin Maid scarcely took her eyes off her family, and the greatest care had to be exercised to keep her quiet, for lionesses have often been known to destroy their young through sheer nervousness, and even to eat them. But the cubs grew and thrived, and the lioness soon became quiet and more than contented.

* * *

After awhile one of the cubs developed a sort of rickets, and instead of standing up defiantly, as his brothers and sisters did, he never seemed quite sure which of his feeble young legs would suddenly give way and let him stumble in the most undignified manner. He played and romped with the others just the same, and it may have been that the exercise was good for him, for in time the rickety symptoms disappeared and he became just as strong and vigorous as the others.

Then one day a terrible thing happened. The cubs were particularly lively; they had had a good meal, were feeling well and playful, and careered around the cage, jumping over one another, pawing their mother playfully in the face, on her tail, or anywhere just to have a little fun. Then one of the cubs ran to a corner where a post holds up a shelf. This wooden post is a short distance from the wall, and it was evidently the cub's intention to run through that little opening and around the post, but in some way or another it got caught, there was a yelp of pain, and it was found on examination that one sturdy little leg had been badly broken.

The examination came after the cub was gotten out of the cage, but about the getting of it out Bedouin Maid had a good deal to say. Furious at the attempts to touch her cub, and distressed and worried at the cub's repeated cries of pain, the poor lioness worked herself up to such a pitch of nervous excitement that fears were entertained for the safety of the other cubs.

Finally, however, the cub was safely outside the cage, and was quickly carried away. Poor Bedouin Maid gave a low, moaning cry in a breathless manner, held her head in the air for some moments listening intently, gave another moan in answer to a faint cry in the distance, and then turned her attention to her other cubs. Once or twice after this she would listen, always in the direction where the little cub had disappeared, give a little whimper, and then lick her remaining children.

In a very short time she had evidently forgotten all about it, and was playing with her remaining cubs as though she enjoyed it as much as they did. There being nothing to be done with a cub having a broken leg, it was decided to put it out of its pain as soon as possible, and for this purpose a dose of chloroform was used, which quickly put it to sleep.

* * *

There was more trouble when teething time came, for this is one of the most critical times in a cub's existence, and a great many die from it. It is not generally known that lions have two sets of teeth—the milk teeth, and then the permanent ones. When the cubs of Sultan and Bedouin Maid were about three months old they had passed the worst of their troubles, and are now no longer cubs, but half-grown, strong, vigorous specimens of young lions, scrawny and leggy like all young animals, but intensely interesting, on account of the various developments as they grow.

Already there are young growths of the mane, the bodies are just beginning to fill out, and in another year or two they will be fine young lions, able to take their places among the collection of wild animals, being doubly interesting from having been born in captivity and having been studied and watched carefully all through the various stages and developments.

I cannot say whether Sultan proved himself a good father or not. He probably was not allowed the opportunity, for I doubt whether he has ever even seen his children. He has been in close proximity to them, but there is no chance of getting even a peep when there are walls between. It has not troubled him in any way; he is perfectly content, and now that her family is reared and nearly grown up Bedouin Maid is once more his companion.

* * *

It is specially interesting to study this wild family; to take notice of the various characteristics of the father and mother; the shape, color, size, &c.; then to trace the little resemblances in each cub; strong and distinctive in some, faint and almost invisible in others; to watch all the little varieties in the dispositions and tempers, with a hundred and one other items which perhaps only those deeply interested in wild animals would ever notice, but which when noticed teach so much in so many ways.

* * *

Notwithstanding her past troubles and all the anxieties of a large family, Bedouin Maid is now just as playful as ever; she is, in fact, one of the most playful lionesses I have ever seen in captivity. There are times when she is even disposed to be frivolous and to welcome any or every visitor who will just condescend to speak to or notice her. Sultan, as I said before, is also playful, but I never noticed that he cares to play when his wife is present. It seems to me that then he puts on a grave, dignified air and looks at his wife rather reprovingly.

But for a real happy, congenial couple, who give the impression that life is worth living, take Sultan and his wife, Bedouin Maid.

ELLEN VELVIN, F. Z. S.

BRANDER MATTHEWS DISCUSSES THE AMERICAN MILLIONAIRE

PROF. BRANDER MATTHEWS is so patriotic an American that he has recently declared that the Stars and Stripes is now older than the tricolor of France, older than the Union Jack of Great Britain, older than "those newcomers" among the nations, Italy and Germany. Usually Brander Matthews is more conservatively literary.

In the March number of The Columbia University Quarterly appears an address made before the Phi Beta Kappa at Columbia University by Prof. Matthews on "American Character," in which he traces our intellectual and moral ancestry to European origin, and so arrives at the conclusions above noted. The impulse of this address was based upon the statement made by a French writer that the Americans were the least worthy of all nations in point of ideals.

* * *

This Frenchman had been talking with Tolstoy, it seems, and when asked by the great Russian philosopher why he thought so ill of Americans, he replied that as a people we were "terribly practical, avid of pleasure, systematically hostile to all idealism."

This invective, the Professor believed, was so common an impression in France and Germany, and for that matter all over Europe, that it had its value as a corrective of conceit, even though it was positively untrue.

Burke declared once that it was impossible to draw an indictment against a whole nation, and yet something of the sort had been accomplished by this interesting Frenchman, who was "not a person of consequence."

Prof. Matthews devoted his address to contradicting this "national indictment," showing that the three principal charges made were fundamentally false.

There was no truth, the Professor said, in the allegation that "we are chiefly for making money," that "we are hostile to art and to all forms of beauty," and that "we are devoid of ideals."

Taking the oft-repeated accusation that we are a Nation of money-makers, Prof. Matthews argued upon the question uppermost just now, the question of individual wealth.

* * *

He said:

"In his talk with Tolstoy our French critic revealed an unexpected insight when he asserted that the passion of American life was not so much the use of money as a delight in the conquest of it. Many an American man of affairs would admit without hesitation that he would rather make half a million dollars than inherit a million. It is the process he enjoys, rather than the result; it is the tough tussle in the open market which gives him the keenest pleasure, and not the idle contemplation of wealth safely stored away. He girds himself for battle and fights for his own hand; he is the son and the grandson of the stalwart adventurers who came from the Old World to face the chances of the New. This is why he is unwilling to retire as men are wont to do in Europe when their fortunes are made. Merely to have money does not greatly delight him, although he would regret not having it; but what does delight him unceasingly is the fun of making it.

"The money itself often he does not know what to do with; and he can find no more selfish use for it than to give it away. He seems to recognize that his making it was in some measure due to the unconscious assistance of the community as a whole; and he feels it his duty to do something for the people among whom he lives. It must be noted that the people themselves also expect this from him; they expect him sooner or later to pay his footing. As a result of this pressure of public opinion and of his own lack of interest in money itself, he gives freely. In time he comes to find pleasure in this as well, and he applies his business sagacity to his benefactions. Nothing is more characteristic of modern American life than this pouring out of private wealth for public service. Nothing remotely resembling it is to be seen now in any country of the Old World; and not even in Athens in its noblest days was there a larger-handed lavishness of the individual for the benefit of the community.

"In no country of the Old World again is the prestige of wealth less powerful than it is here. This, of course, the foreigner fails to perceive; he does not discover that it is not the man who happens to possess money that we regard with admiration, but the man who is making money, and thereby proving his efficiency and indirectly benefiting the community. To many it may sound like an insufferable paradox to assert that nowhere in the civilized world to-day is money itself of less weight than here in the United States; but the broader his opportunity the more likely is an honest observer to come to this strange conclusion. Fortunes are made in a day almost, and they may fade away in a night; as the Yankee proverb put it pithily, 'It's only three generations from shirtsleeves to shirtsleeves.' Wealth is likely to lack something of its glamour in a land where well-being is widely diffused and where a large proportion of the population have either had a fortune and lost it, or else expect to gain one in the immediate future.

"Probably also there is no country which now contains more men who do not greatly care for large gains and who have gladly given up money-making for some other occupation they found more profitable for themselves. These are the men like Thoreau, in whose 'Walden,' now half a century old, we can find an emphatic declaration of all the latest doctrines of the simple life. We have all heard of Agassiz—best of Americans, even though he was born in another republic—how he repelled the proffer of large terms for a series of lectures, with the answer that he had no time to make money. Closely akin was the reply of a famous machinist in response to an inquiry as to what he had been doing, to the effect that he had accomplished nothing of late, 'we've just been building engines and making money, and I'm about tired of it.' And a few years ago a college professor of known ability declined the Presidency of a trust company, which offered him a salary of at least five times what he was receiving. There are not a few men to-day in these United States who hold with Ben Jonson that 'money never made any man rich—but his mind.'

* * *

"But while this is true, while there are some men among us who care little for money, and while there are many who care chiefly for the making of it, ready to share it when made with their fellow-citizens, candor compels the admission that there are also not a few who are greedy and grasping, selfish and shameless, and who stand forward, conspicuous and unscrupulous, as if to justify to the full the aspersions which foreigners cast upon us. Although these men now manage for the most part to keep within the letter of the law, their morality is that of the wrecker and of the pirate. It is a symptom of health in the body politic that the proposal has been made to inflict social ostracism upon the criminal rich. We need to stiffen our consciences and to set up a loftier standard of social intercourse, refusing to fellowship with the men who make their money by overriding the law or undermining it—just as we should have declined the friendship of Captain Kidd before he had buried his stolen treasure.

"In the immediate future these men will be made to feel that they are under the ban of public opinion. One sign of an acuter sensitiveness is the recent outcry against the acceptance of tainted money for the support of good works. Although it is well always to give a good deed the credit of a good motive, yet it is impossible sometimes not to suspect that certain large gifts have an aspect of conscience money, seeming to be the result of a desire to divert public attention from the evil way in which the money was made to the nobler manner in which it is spent. They appear to be the attempt of an outlaw to buy his peace with the community. Apparently there is many a rich man among us, who, having sold his honor for a price, would now gladly give up half of his fortune to get it back.

* * *

"Candor compels the admission also that by the side of the criminal rich there exists the less noxious but more offensive class of the idle rich, who lead lives of wasteful luxury and of empty excitement. When the French reporter who talked with Tolstoy called us Americans 'avid of pleasure' it must have been this little group that he had in mind, as he may have seen the members of it, splurging about Paris, squandering and self-advertising. Although these idle rich exhibit themselves openly and to least advantage in the capitals of Europe, their foolish doings are recorded superabundantly in our own newspapers; and thus their demoralizing influence is spread abroad. The snobbish reports of their misguided attempts at amusement may even be a source of danger in that they seem to recognize a false standard of social success or in that they may excite a miserable ambition to emulate these pitiful frivolities. But there is no need of delaying longer over the idle rich; they are only a few; and they have doomed themselves to destruction, since it is an inexorable fact that those who break the laws of nature can have no hope of executive clemency.

Years are long on the clock of fate."

Famous "Coon-Dog" Marriage Ceremony Invented by Squire Maxwell

BEFORE the march of progress and commercialism swept it away there stood in the little Southern City of Charlotte, N. C., an old "fo' de war" Court House which contained the office of Col. David Guy Maxwell, known widely in the country about as "Squire," Justice of the Peace, and United States Commissioner. Squire Maxwell was as much a part of the old Court House as one of the huge white pillars supporting the roof of the porch, and he could tell many a tale of ante-bellum days concerning which the worn flagstones and stained walls preserved eternal silence.

Every day after noon, during the hot Summer months, the Squire could be found in a chair propped back against a wall of the cool corridor within, sleeping peacefully, with a red bandanna handkerchief thrown over his face to keep off the pestering flies. The Squire always awoke from his after-dinner nap refreshed, and ready to join old cronies who sat out on the ground in front and talked of the price of cotton, the boll weevil, "chinches" in the corn, the ruin of "craps" by hail, and "old times." It was on these occasions that the Squire looked the typical Southern gentleman of the old school—white linen suit, broad, white lawn tie, broad-brimmed straw hat, white socks, and low-cut shoes, with wide toes and flexible soles. In the Winter the Squire stayed closely by his office stove, spat contemplatively from time to time into the glowing grate, and spoke an occasional word to "Adjutant" Scroggins.

No outsider ever knew who Adjutant Scroggins was, except that he was the Squire's ally, counselor, and faithful companion by the office stove in Winter. The Squire always referred to him and introduced him to the casual caller as "My private secretary, Suh, Colonel Scroggins." All the long hours of a gray Winter day the Squire and the Colonel would sit together in silence, while they chewed reflectively and spat thoughtfully into the glowing coals of the open stove.

But now there is a knock at the door, and at the Squire's stentorian "Come in!" it opens, and two dusky figures walk apprehensively in. One is dressed in a black felt hat of wide and drooping brim, a glistening celluloid collar, ready-made tie of brilliant green, rusty black suit, the abbreviated trousers showing a couple of in[illegible] of scarlet socks—and brogan shoes. The other i[illegible]ired in a green skirt with a purple shirtwaist, and a black straw bonnet with ostrich plumes of red and yellow. They state that they wuks on Cunnel Gaston's fahm, dey has just got a lisunse, an' des thought dey would step 'roun' an' git ma'led, ef'n de Squiyer 'ud be so kin's toe puffohm de say'mony, Sah.

A file of spectators slips in at the door and arranges itself along the walls of the office, for the word has gone forth that a negro couple has just entered the Squire's office, and there is an anticipatory grin on every face.

The Justice arises majestically, places his eyeglasses upon his nose with exact precision, asks a few questions, and transacts the necessary preliminaries. Then drawing himself to his full height with an expression of the most portentous solemnity upon his face, he contemplates the couple for a moment over the top of his glasses, clears his throat with funereal gravity, and begins:

"We have assembled here together, my friends, upon this historic spot, where

No digger's spade
Shall e'er invade
This classic shade, it shan't,
And no coonie b'ar
Shall roam up thar,
Nor anywhar, it can't,

to celebrate the nuptial ties of the couple present. And as they launch their boat off into the ocean of connubial bliss, we will bid them 'olive oil' and fling an old shoe and a handful of rice forninst them; and may they have smooth sailing and fair winds over the matrimonial sea; and may their hull be free from the barnacles of life, and be never subject to squalls nor cries of 'Ship, ahoy!'"

The Justice here pauses to interject the usual questions required by law, then raising his voice, he continues sonorously:

"By the authority vested in me by the Commonwealth of North Carolina, which is sometimes called the Tar Heel State of this Confederation of Fusion, and by the County of Mecklenburg, known as the Cradle of American Liberty; by the smoking tar kilns and the bleeding sentinels of our turpentine fields; by the old flea-bitten coon dog, whose basso-profundo voice is heard in the gloaming; by recollection of the fat baked opossum, with sides lined with sop, sweet potatoes, and hoe cake, to say nothing of the sweet and luscious watermillion; by the free silver fake of 16 to 1, which some think is the panacea of all National ills; by the Dingley Tariff bill, which is to bring forth the long-wished-for wave of prosperity; by the song of the goldbug, which some say is the dirge of the people and the glorification of trusts and monopolies; by the loud and clarion notes of the old Shanghai chanticleer, heard in the early morn calling upon his comrades to shake off their lethargy; by the old aromatic gourd vine, whose clinging tendrils will shade the pickaninnies around your cabin door, and last, but not least, by the memory of the Decklenburg Mecklapendence of Injuration, I pronounce you Coon and Coonie. Whomsoever that the laws of North Carolina have jined together, let no coon put asunder! Salute your bride—and may the Lord have mercy upon your souls!"

During the ceremony the [illegible] of the bride and bridegroom have held expressions of mingled awe and delight, until at the words "Salute your bride". there is a loud and resounding smack. After the matter of a fee, as is usual, the grinning bridegroom leads out the simpering bride, there is a murmur of appreciation and praise from the spectators, and the Justice sinks back into his chair with a slight gleam and twinkle in his eyes.

This is the famous "coon-dog" ceremony originated by Squire Maxwell expressly for the tying of colored couples, and is given exactly as he has uttered it hundreds of times. Its high-sounding phrases and allusions to well-known objects give huge delight to the average negro pair. They always depart with an air of intense satisfaction, and the Squire is sought out by would-be colored brides and bridegrooms from miles around.

The Squire is still hale and hearty, but the office in the old white Court House has disappeared with the building itself to make room for a modern new hotel, and he now occupies an office upstairs in a regular office building, where the atmosphere is not quite the same.

The Squire and the Colonel are still sitting by the old office stove. Their feeling for each other is too intimate to make conversation necessary, and so they sit together in silence, spit accurately into the open stove door, and wait for litigants at law and couples desiring to be made "Coon and Coonie."

MAX REGER AND HIS MUSIC

New York Has a Chance to Study an Apparently Self-Contradictory Personality in Modern Composition.

NEW YORK had its first real experience this last week with the music of Max Reger, who is at present hotly contesting with his contemporaries in Germany the utterance of the latest word in "modernity." His "Serenade" for flute, violin, and viola was played by Prof. Willy Hess, and his cantata, "O Haupt voll Blut und Wunden," was given by the Musical Art Society. Earlier in the Winter the Flonzaley Quartet had played a scherzo from his string quartet, Op. 74, and Mme. Sembrich sang one of his songs from the collection called "Schlichte Weisen." No doubt these pieces do not give anything like a comprehensive suggestion of Reger's art; but they have afforded a glimpse of a curious and apparently self-contradictory personality in modern music.

⁂

It seems a little difficult to justify at this distance the fierce controversies that are going on in Germany about young Mr. Reger's music. It has occasioned disturbances in concert halls between his partisans and opponents that almost called for police interference. If it has not broken up families, it has been the cause of the dissolution of string quartets—for it was a dispute over Reger's music that resulted in Henri Marteau's quartet parting company. There are "Reger evenings" given in German concert halls; there must be "Regervereins" somewhere in Germany.

Mr. Reger lives in Munich, and works there as Professor of Counterpoint; so local pride in Munich runs high for Reger. The other evening after a performance of one of his pieces a deputation of enthusiastic university students visited his home and celebrated his triumph with the tooting of horns; which fact led a soured critic of the opposition to remark next day upon the appropriateness of serenading the composer with his own kind of discords. The Müncheners' attitude, indeed, is expressed by one mirthful writer in an adaptation of the verse from Lortzing's opera: "Reger composes splendidly, inimitably, most beautifully—too bad we can't understand it!"

Reger has started out upon a new path, certainly, and one that leads him in a different direction from that which most of his contemporaries are traveling. They have gone on piling up the orchestral effects, the colors, the combinations, the sonorities higher and higher, demanding more instruments, reviving old ones, adopting new ones. They are trying to out-Baireuth Wagner in music drama, or out-Weimar Liszt in symphonic tone poems and realistic effects; or they are putting new and acrid yeasty wine into the old bottles of the symphony, so that the bottles burst occasionally, with loud noises. But Max Reger has made no concessions to the modern taste for sumptuous orchestration. He has only just published his first orchestral work; and at that it is only a "simfonietta" for small orchestra. Thus, in one respect at least, he resembles Johannes Brahms, who wrote songs, choruses, piano pieces, and many chamber works for twenty years before he ventured to publish his first symphony.

Not that Reger is at all reticent in his musical utterance—he is 33 years old and has reached 90 in his opus numbers. He has written violin and 'cello sonatas, many organ works, which make the stoutest performers quail to look at, so black are they with notes. He has written songs of which the voice part is made up of declamatory phrases and the accompaniment of an almost impossible complication of difficulties; and others of the simple naïveté of the one Mme. Sembrich sang. His string quartet has movements of the wildest extravagance and burlesque humor, and this extravagance and capriciousness crop out in many of his piano pieces, under the titles of "burlesques" and "caprices." He has written church cantatas of the utmost seriousness, on subjects that Bach chose before him, and has arranged Bach's organ pieces for the piano, his clavier pieces for the organ. He is said to have announced his purpose of rewriting the more important works of Bach, which in itself shows a certain lack of the sense of humor. While his admirers call him the Bach of Bavaria, some, who are not his admirers, have suggested that Bach should be called the Reger of Saxony.

⁂

At all events, Reger has an adept command of counterpoint of a subtler kind than that which prevails among the orchestral writers of the present day in Germany. His serenade heard last Wednesday evening is charmingly written, showing a remarkable freedom and facility, and a sure touch in gaining the light and graceful effects he intended. There are good tunes in it, and a certain amiability. Yet of striking originality, even in the vein of persiflage he adopted, there was not much trace on a first hearing. His cantata given on Thursday evening is at the opposite pole of feeling and expression. It is tremendously serious in its treatment of the theme that so profoundly appealed to Bach and that the great cantor used so wonderfully; and it is most elaborately wrought out. The composer justifies to the full his contrapuntal calling; and with all this skill, or perhaps in spite of it, he has managed to convey the Good Friday feeling of gloom and suspense and personal sorrow that belongs to a cantata on this subject.

It is impossible to make even a provisional estimate of Reger from the few works that have been heard here. The difficulty of many of them stands in the way of the speedy disclosure of more. Players and conductors may well be pardoned for hesitating to attack the labor of mastering that of which the success is problematical and in many instances more than problematical. But it is an interesting career to watch, even at a distance; and, as propaganda is at present making for it, an amusing one.

⁂

It is all very well for the Philharmonic Society to engage a noted conductor "for one, two, or three years," and to provide for his salary by an appeal to rich and public-spirited music lovers. But unless there is something else to go with it, the engagement of Mr. Safonoff will be a very expensive sensation and a comparatively small contribution to the artistic pleasure of the community. The Philharmonic needs a conductor; but it needs even more the stern discipline of frequent rehearsals and the utmost care in preparation, without which no orchestra and no conductor can offer really fine and distinguished performances. It needs also a thorough and unpitying overhauling of its personnel; but there is little to be gained, apparently, by reopening this painful subject. There is little hope that the necessary reforms in this direction will be accomplished under the present circumstances, which have been so often discussed and lamented.

An expensive conductor will be of little use to the Philharmonic Society or its audiences unless he is given absolute authority at least in the matter of obtaining all the rehearsals and the kind of rehearsals he needs. If, as the Philharmonic players are at present situated, they cannot afford the time and attention that are necessary, this would be quite as worthy an object as a conductor's salary for the wealthy music lovers to contribute another large sum for. Our orchestral players are very skillful readers and very adaptable in meeting the wishes of a conductor in regard to the general outlines of his interpretation. They can get up a very plausible sort of performance for any "star" conductor at short notice. But a truly fine orchestral achievement goes much beyond and above this sort of thing. It is attainable only by the most careful sort of preparation, the expenditure of time and trouble. There will be not much gained by the employment of a very expensive conductor unless he is given a free hand as to having all he requires in this way—and also, it may be added, unless he himself requires all that is really necessary in this direction.

⁂

The contemplation of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is well calculated to give the members of the Philharmonic a shudder, every time they recur to it, and think of what its performances have meant, in the careful selection of men and the amount of work devoted to preparing each concert and the rigid discipline undergone. But if the Philharmonic really desires to do what its place in our musical life requires it to do, it must "think on these things." And its thinking must be followed by action. It is not enough to secure a noted conductor—largely at somebody else's expense. They must drop the bad old way that has been good enough to bring them down to the present. If they cannot afford to give the needed time for rehearsals, they would be quite as justified in providing it also at somebody else's expense, and in opening another subscription for that less spectacular purpose. There are undoubtedly some men of wealth who would be willing to contribute to it.

⁂

It was a charming thing to see the reductio ad absurdum of the Italian tenor's attitude toward accepting applause as a personal tribute whenever and wherever it comes to him. It was still more charming to see the audience's risibilities touched by the absurdity, last Monday night at "Carmen." Mr. Caruso himself furnished it. It is one thing for him to go through a second time all the agonies of Canio's jealousy at the end of the first act of "Pagliacci," or to pump up afresh all the by no means furtive tears that flow through his singing of "Una furtiva Lagrima" in "L'Elisir d'Amore." But the same audience that indulges him in this, or rather demands it of him, found the situation in the second act of "Carmen" a little too much. Don José had just sung, beautifully, and thrice beautifully, the song "La Fleur que tu m'avais jetée," and had knelt to weep upon the scheming heroine's neck. The audience burst into delighted applause; and it was deserved. The emotional situation was tense; the public enthusiasm irresistibly seductive. Should any Italian tenor consider the dramatic verities of more importance than this sweet morsel of admiration? Don José left for a moment that alluring refuge of his anguished soul, disentangling himself as well as at the moment was possible from the fringe of Carmen's shawl, bowed politely to the assembled multitude, and returned to his knees, to continue the weeping upon her charming shoulder blade.

Not a bit more ridiculous than other things Mr. Caruso had done a hundred times before, in situations as critical, and no more destructive of the dramatic illusion. But the absurdity of it all was a little too grotesquely obvious, this time, and a wave of laughter swept through the houseful of admirers. The moral was obvious, but there is not the slightest danger of its "teaching a lesson."

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The last pair of Boston Symphony concerts of the present season will be given this week on Thursday evening and Saturday afternoon. They will bring to an end the most successful season the orchestra has ever had in this city, for despite the multiplicity of other orchestral concerts which have made the Winter so notable, the Boston organization has more than held its own in the question of patronage, not only in subscription but also in the sales for the individual concerts.

The coming concerts will mark the farewell appearances in New York of Mr. Gericke as conductor of the orchestra. On Thursday evening the soloist will be Henri Marteau, who will introduce to musical connoisseurs here a violin concerto by Emil Jacques-Dalcröze, a Viennese by birth, but for the last fourteen years the Professor of Harmony in the Conservatory of Geneva, where Marteau came to know him. The orchestral numbers will be Bach's Suite in D major, which the orchestra is playing on this trip for the first time in eleven years; Debussy's tone-picture, "L'Apres-Midi d'un Faun," and Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony.

The soloist on Saturday afternoon will be David Bispham. His first number will be a ballade for baritone and orchestra by Frederick Converse, the young Boston composer. The text used is Keats's "La Belle Dame sans Merci." Mr. Converse is one of the most promising of the younger American composers. Lately his one-act opera, "The Pipe of Desire," was performed in Boston and received most favorable notices. Mr. Bispham will also sing the aria "An jenem Tag," from Marschner's "Hans Heiling."

The orchestral numbers will be Weber's "Der Freischütz" overture, Goldmark's "Sakuntala" overture, and Schubert's symphony in C major. The two programmes in full are as follows:

THURSDAY EVENING.
Suite in D major, No. 3	Bach
Concerto for violin (first time)	Jacques-Dalcroze
"L'Apres-Midi d'un Faun"	Debussy
Symphony No. 3, Eroica, in E flat major, Op. 55	Beethoven
Solo artist, Mr. Henri Marteau.
SATURDAY AFTERNOON.
Overture, "Der Freischuetz"	Weber
Balade for baritone and orchestra (first time)	Converse
Overture, "Sakuntala"	Goldmark
Aria, "An jenem Tag," from "Hans Heiling"	Marschner
Symphony No. 7, in C major	Schubert
Solo artist, Mr. David Bispham.

THE RUSSIAN SYMPHONY.

The Russian Symphony Orchestra will play on Saturday evening, March 17, at Carnegie Hall the first symphony of a composer by some deemed one of the most promising of Russia's younger musicians, Reinhold Glière. His liberal use of folk tunes in this symphony marks him as essentially national in feeling. The rich heritage of popular and traditional music of the Russian people has been drawn upon by the best contemporary Slavic composers, from Tschaikowsky down. Glière derives from these sources, whether by direct quotation or a reproduction of their spirit in his own terms, no fewer than half a dozen of his principal ideas.

Another of the promising novelties is a Cossack dance by Seroff, whose title, literally translated, reads: "Dance of the Zaporozszew, a musical sketch to the second part of Gogol's poem, 'Taras Bulba.'" Instead of the Sokoloff serenade, at first announced, Mr. Altschuler will perform an intermezzo for strings by Napravnik, entitled "Night," from the opera, "Dubrowsky," which is popular in Rssuia. Cesar Cui's Valse, still another novelty, is of the aristocratic style of the Russian Court. The programme will also contain a new concerto for violin, by Milnarski, to be played by Alexander Saslavsky, concert master of the orchestra, and "Tsar-Sultan," a fairy tale, by Rimsky-Korsakoff.

"SAMSON AND DELILAH."

"Samson and Delilah," which the Oratorio Society will sing at Carnegie Hall under Frank Damrosch's direction on Tuesday evening, April 3, has for the last dozen years been a standard and popular work at the Paris Opera. But Saint-Säens's masterpiece had to wait nearly two decades after its completion for recognition there.

The composer began work in 1860 on Ferdinand Lemaire's three-act text, which follows in general the Biblical story of Samson, the "Hebrew Hercules." Saint-Säens had already written his dainty opera comique, "La Princesse Janne" (produced in 1872) and "Le Timbre d'Argent."

Progress toward a complete stage performance was irritatingly slow. In 1875, Act I. of this "opéra-biblique" was sung at a Colonne concert in Paris, but the Opera management was still callous to its merits.

Finally, Franz Liszt used his influence with Eduard Lassen, conductor of the opera at Weimar, and so "Samson and Delilah" had its première on German soil, under Lassen's direction, Dec. 2, 1877, with Ferenczy as Samson, Mlle. von Müller as Delilah, and Mille as the High Priest.

The opera was done at Brussels April 6, 1878, under direction of its composer, and in Hamburg in 1883, with Rosa Sucher. In 1890 Talazac and Mme. Rosine Bloch sang the opera at Rouen for the first time in France, and in the same year they performed it at the Eden Theatre, Paris. Lyons, Marseilles, and Aix-les-Bains heard "Samson and Delilah" in 1891, and the next year it was presented at Florence, Monte Carlo, Geneva, and half a dozen French provincial towns, finally reaching the Paris Opéra some twenty years after the composer had finished his score. It has remained firmly fixed in the repertory ever since. London has not seen it, owing to the strict law against the transfer of Biblical personages to the acted drama.

ORCHESTRA WILL TOUR SOUTH.

Wealth of That Section Calls for Better Artistic Conditions.

Announcement is made that in Easter week the New York Symphony Orchestra will start on an invasion of the South for a series of symphony concerts and musical festivals. This will be a new venture of the orchestra, and its progress will be watched with much interest by many persons interested in the development of the Southern field.

Music has been a luxury in many parts of the South since the civil war. The people have not had sufficient wealth to be able to support orchestras or even to have them make visits on tour. Some of the traveling artists have found the field a good one, but their visits had to be timed so that there was little conflict of dates and so that more money could be accumulated between concerts.

In recent years, however, the industrial development of the South has brought about a different condition. There is a great deal of money in many of the Southern cities, and with its acquisition has come the desire for better music. The result is that in several of the cities in which it has been possible only to have the concerts of the artists on tour, musical festivals are being given, and there has been a call for orchestras. An instance of this awakening is given in Spartansburg, S. C., which, though not a large city, will soon have a musical festival lasting three days with five concerts.

The tour of the orchestra will extend as far West as Memphis and as far South as South Carolina. It will open up a new territory to the organization that will be of great benefit.

The Board of Directors of the orchestra has decided to give a subscription series of concerts next season on Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons, instead of Sunday afternoons and Tuesday evenings, as heretofore. The change to Saturday evenings was decided on at the request of many subscribers.

A Talk With Josef Lhevinne

* * *

Russian Music, Rubinstein, America, and What He Thinks of Them All.

I TELL my friends that I am the only pianist who never composed," laughed Josef Lhévinne.

The Russian pianist, who was one of the favorites of Anton Rubinstein, and who has been regarded by some persons in America as the legitimate successor of Rubinstein, was telling about himself and his work. This young man has none of the dreamer about him. He is a vigorous outdoor sort of a person, an accomplished athlete, and one would not pick him out as an artist, but rather as a keen, aggressive master of men in a workaday world, and he admits that he has little of the dreamer in him. He is one who would seek mastery of some kind in some field, and the music in his composition, inherited from music-loving ancestors, has led him to the task of mastering the piano.

"It will be sufficient if I am a great pianist," he said. "If I could be like Rubinstein that would be all I would wish. As for composition, one must know so much now if one is to speak to the world in music. So much has been said."

He thought a moment.

"If one could say something new that would be worth while," he said. "But I would not care for it unless it could be something new."

He is, however, intensely interested in others who are composing music in Russia and in the development of their work.

"There are ten or twelve young composers in Russia now who are writing what we call the modern music," he explained. "Little of it has been heard in America. They are too modest to let their works go out, or rather I should say that they are determined first to gain precisely the effects they want before they will give their productions to the world. They have arisen in the last five years.

"In their works very little of the National spirit is shown. The older Russian school based its themes upon the old folk music, but the new one has been affected by the development of music elsewhere throughout Europe, and the themes are no longer distinctly Russian. Where this will tend of course cannot be seen yet."

* * *

When he mentioned the name of Rubinstein Mr. Lhévinne did it always with reverence, and he was asked how he had met the great pianist, who did so much for him.

"Rubinstein is my ideal," he said. "In whatever I have done I have always thought, 'Would Rubinstein do it so?' and would want nothing better than to be likened to him.

"I had worshipped Rubinstein before my first meeting with him. That was just before I was 15. He came to a students' matinée at the Moscow Conservatory one day in 1886, when he was playing a series of recitals, and heard me play. Afterward I was overjoyed when he embraced me and told me I would have a brilliant future. Then he sat down and played, and I can remember it all so well as I watched him. The hall became dark while he sat at the piano, but he would not let them turn up the lights.

"Whenever he came to the conservatory after that he showed interest in me and would have me play for him. Then when I was 15 he conducted the orchestra himself while I played the Beethoven fifth concerto in E flat at a concert in Moscow. That was the most remarkable moment of my life. When it was over he embraced me on the stage and told me I had satisfied him.

"He was always very kind to me. In 1892, after I had finished some of my concerts, I spent much of the Summer with him. It always seemed a pleasure for him to hear me play, and it always did me a lot of good because he was so enthusiastic. I think the highest compliment I ever had was when he said one day:

"'Damn it, he does play fine.'

"I used to please him also because I was interested in sports, and he called me a 'fine fellow,' and that I thought another great compliment

"His interest was an inspiration to me and helped me more than anything could. And it is of great assistance to me to think that he believed I represented his thoughts of music. He did not like tricks, and I was taught not to depend on tricks, and I was greatly pleased recently when I met Mr. Pugno and he said I was an honest pianist."

Mr. Lhévinne was asked what he meant by tricks. He smiled.

"I do not care to speak much of that," he replied. "There are tricks—with fingers and pedals when something is too difficult. Let those who wish to use them use them. I think it is better to be honest, and if I cannot do a thing honestly not to try it."

* * *

Some one laughingly asked the old question that used to be asked of most foreigners in the days before the United States realized how big a factor it is in world affairs:

"How do you like America?"

But Mr. Lhévinne did not laugh.

"America?" he said explosively. "America?" Then "Oh" with eyes and hands uplifted, as though words could not express his feelings. "It is the greatest country in the world. If I did not have my home in Russia I would have it here. It is greater and better than any country of Europe. I have only seen a little so far, but each thing I see and hear I love it more.

"Since I was a boy one of my great wishes had been to come to America. When I could first read I devoured books of Mayne Reid—his wonderful stories of the American frontier. Afterward I read other American books, and as I became older I studied American history and political institutions. It was all so wonderful that I wanted to see for myself. I cannot tell you how I felt when our troubles in Moscow came at the time when I had made all ready to carry out my desire.

"In the midst of those troubles I waited day by day for the message that I was to start. But the postal service and telegraph service were not working and I heard nothing. Then one day my old nurse said she had dreamed that two letters for me from America were at the conservatory where I teach. I went there, and sure enough, two letters from America were there telling me all had been made ready for my coming. That night I left Moscow, and now you see I am here, and I am not disappointed."

"How did it happen that you waited so long when with Rubinstein's aid you might have come years ago as other young men have come?"

"One cannot always govern one's self," he said. "When I had got ready to go out in concert work I had to go into the army, as every young man in Russia must. Then when I left the army I had to begin all over again. When I had begun to make my way again I was riding a bicycle one day in London and had a bad fall that broke my leg. That kept me from my work for a long time, and when I started again I had to make up for lost time. So it happened that I was held back."

One thing Mr. Lhévinne regrets is that he is unable to go fishing in America. That is his favorite diversion aside from tennis, which he plays constantly to keep down his weight and to give diversion to the muscles of his arms. When he becomes tired of his playing he likes to get out in a boat, and one time near Moscow he made a record of staying out eighteen hours because the fish were biting so well, and disdaining food in the presence of such sport.

Trained in this fashion he sits down at the piano generally for five hours a day, and during his practice does not get up for anything. Some visitors he has had in New York have learned of this determined practicing through their inability to interrupt him until he had got the effects he wanted. At one time he practiced ten hours a day for three weeks in this fashion.

* * *

The little finger on his right hand that gave trouble to Mr. Lhévinne immediately after his arrival in this country is still troubling him. He has played all his concerts with it in such condition that at times it would send sharp pains up his arm as he struck a note.

This trouble is one of old standing. Several years ago he broke the skin at the point of the little finger. It seemed to heal over and he was able to use it again soon. The skin broke again after a time and the trouble has so come on every now and then. The wound never becomes bad, but it is very painful, and Mr. Lhévinne at times has to rest to let it get well.

The finger seemed to be cured when he came to America, as he had been forced to give it a rest from exercise on the piano during the days of terror in Moscow and the time of his travel from that city to New York. But after his arrival here he was so anxious to practice for his concerts that he overdid it a bit one day and the wound was opened again. Since then he has not been able to let it heal.

Mr. Lhévinne now has a device for the protection of his fingers that he says he never knew another pianist to use. Before a concert he covers the tips of his fingers with collodion, and over that spreads a thin layer of cotton. This prevents jarring at times when he puts on his full power on the keys. Until he adopted this device he found much trouble from exerting his great strength upon the ends of his fingers. At some of his concerts persons up close in the audience have wondered what he was doing with his fingers, as he would seem to be paying all his attention to them between movements instead of to the orchestra or the audience. Had they been closer they would have seen the pianist busily at work with a small pair of scissors smoothing out the cotton where it had become wrinkled in his playing.

NOTES OF THE STUDIOS.

Miner Walden Gallup, a pupil of Mrs. A. M. Virgil, is to give a piano recital in Mendelssohn Hall on Wednesday evening. He will be assisted by Miss Jennie Quinn and Miss Laura Race.

Mme. Hervor Torpadie will give a reception and musicale in her studio in Carnegie Hall this afternoon in honor of Miss Ellen Beach Yaw. Mrs. A. K. Haskell, contralto, will sing several solos, and will be assisted by Miss Martina Johnstone, violin. Max Liebling will appear at the piano, and Miss Yaw also is expected to take part in the musicale.

At the College Hall of the New York College of Music, at 128 East Fifty-eighth Street, to-morrow evening, a chamber music concert is to be given by members of the Faculty. Those who will take part in a programme of Rubinstein compositions are Mme. Josepha Middecke and August Fraemcke, Michael Banner, and William Ebann.

THE ONLY WOMAN FELLOW.

Mrs. McKellar Is Entitled to Write "F. A. G. O." After Her Name.

There is to be a series of organ recitals given soon at the Thirteenth Street Presbyterian Church, where Mrs. Gertrude Elizabeth McKellar, F. A. G. O., is organist and choir director. These recitals will be interesting, for Mrs. McKellar stands high in her profession. She is a comparatively young woman, but the long line of letters after her name means that she has a certain standing musically. Mrs. McKellar is a Fellow of the American Guild of Organists, and the only woman who has that distinction.

It means that she has passed a stiff examination in music which comparatively few men have taken, and not all of those who have tried it have gone through successfully. It is equivalent to a similar examination given by the Royal College of Organists in England. To pass it the candidate must play one of Bach's larger works as well as one of a modern composer, read at sight, harmonize melodies, improvise on given themes, "write out the exposition of a four-voiced fugue on a given theme of subject and show a canonical stretto," and orchestrate an excerpt from some standard work. That is a part of the examination work required, all results being heard or examined by a committee of the best musicians in the country, who do not know at the time the candidate whose work they pass upon. To have become a F. A. G. O. means years of study and hard work.

Who will give a recital today

Gertrude Elizabeth McKellar, Only Woman Fellow of the American Guild of Organists.

Mrs. McKellar came from Bradford, Penn., where she was organist of the First Presbyterian Church, six years ago to study in New York. She has taken a regular and post-graduate course at the Guilmant Organ School, studied composition with Mr. Homer Norris and Mr. Clement R. Gale, and piano with Dr. William Mason. For the past two years she has been the organist of the Thirteenth Street Church, directing the quartet choir. In this are Miss Ada Humbert, soprano; Miss Elise J. Luhrs, contralto; W. H. Stevens, tenor; Leon H. Rouse, bass. The organist and singers have recently taken part in special services at the Welsh Congregational Church and the Young Men's Christian Association.

The musical part of the service at the Thirteenth Street Church was rearranged when Mrs. McKellar began her work, and includes several anthems each Sunday. The organist in her preludes and postludes has a predilection for Bach and Guilmant, and the former composer is heard at least once every Sunday, in his "Fugue in G minor," perhaps in the "Prelude and Fugue in A minor," or there may be Guilmant's "First Symphony in D minor." On the 14th of this month Mrs. McKellar is to play at Carnegie Hall.

IN THE ORGAN LOFT.

The second of the series of organ recitals by Walter C. Gale, organist of the Broadway Tabernacle, (Broadway, corner of Fifty-sixth Street,) at that church will take place on Tuesday afternoon at 4 o'clock with the following programme:

Sonata, No. 3, in A major........Mendelssohn
(German, 1809-1847.)
(a) Con Moto Maestoso.
(b) Andante Tranquillo.
Offertoire, in B flat..................King Hall

Five Wedding Pieces...............Th. Dubois
(French.)
(a) Entree du Cortege.
(b) Benediction Nuptiale.
(c) Offertoire.
(d) Invocation.
(e) Laus Deo, (Sortie.)
Prelude and Fugue, in A minor.....J. S. Bach
(German, 1685-1750.)
Overture to "Oberon"......C. M. Von Weber
(German, 1786-1826.)

Will C. MacFarlane, organist of St. Thomas's Church, will give the recital on the following Tuesday.

* * *

Rossini's "Stabat Mater" is to be given at All Saints' Church, (Madison Avenue and 129th Street,) Dr. F. S. Palmer, organist and choir Director, this evening. It will be rendered by the regular choir of the church, assisted by Mr. Rhys Thomas, tenor. Mr. Thomas will sing the tenor solo, "Cujus Animam." In the solo quartet of the church are Miss Clara Smith, soprano; Miss Marie E. Martin, contralto; M. F. Donovan, tenor, and Arthur Seaton, bass. In the chorus, in addition to the quartet, are five sopranos, four contraltos, two tenors, and three basses. On Sunday evening, March 25, Dr. Palmer will give an organ recital, assisted by Mrs. Constance King, contralto.

* * *

At the First Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn, R. Huntington Woodward, organist and choirmaster, there are to be changes in the soloists this year, but the selections for the new singers have not yet been made. Miss Margaret Stephens, contralto, and Royal Stone Smith, baritone, will remain.

* * *

Gregorian chants are being used at St. Bartholomew's Church to some extent just now—in the morning service to-day in the Venite, and at evening prayer. At the psalter will be given the Gregorian plain song. Mr. Stokovski's prelude in the morning will be an "Aria," by Giovanni Pergolesi, and at evening prayer the "Andantino in moto di Canzona," from the fourth symphony of Tschaikowsky.

* * *

Prof. Parkhurst at the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church finds his new chorus giving increasing satisfaction, and to-day the programme will be:

Organ prelude..............................Lemmens
Lord of Our Life..................................Field
Grant Me Thy Peace....................Mendelssohn
Agnus Dei..Gounod
8 P. M.
Organ prelude, on "Sicilian Hymn"....
Parkhurst
Judge Me, O God. Double chorus..Mendelssohn
Once Again the Day Hath Flown, (ladies' trio)..Abt
103d Psalm, antiphonal for choir and congregation..................................Parkhurst
Draw Nigh to Me, Ye Weary.................Lassen
Thine Forever, Sicilian Hymn.

A little misunderstanding has been caused by the statement in THE TIMES that Miss Lucy Isabelle Marsh had been engaged as one of the solo sopranos at the Temple Beth-El. Friends of the present first solo soprano of the Temple, Mrs. Lora Lamport McGuane, understood from the statement that she was to leave. That is not so. Mrs. McGuane still holds the position she has occupied for the past two years, although Miss Marsh, as stated, has been engaged as a solo soprano.

* * *

Dr. H. Silverman, Cantor of the Temple Beth-El, is making preparations for the music for the Passover services on April 10, when a highly interesting programme is promised.

* * *

To-day at the Old First Presbyterian Church, Fifth Avenue and Twelfth Street, at the 4:30 special Lenten service, the subject will be the "Anthems of the Apostles," and the music will include Guilmant's "Gloria in Excelsis," from the mass in E flat; and Myles B. Foster's "Magnificat" in D, (introducing Luther's hymn;) "At Eventide," Bruce Steane; and Handel's "Largo."

On Tuesday, March 20, William C. Carl, organist of the church, begins a series of concerts to be continued on three following Tuesdays at 8:15 o'clock. Special artists will assist. Mr. Carl has just returned from an organ concert tour in the South.

* * *

People who are not familiar with the work of the organists in the big New York churches have no idea of the arduousness of their duties, the infinite amount of time and patience required in the training of a choir, particularly the boy choir, with its many voices, and many organists in addition to this do a large amount of work in composition aside from teaching. Homer Norris, organist and choir director of St. George's Church, has just had published a Te Deum in A, brought out by Arthur Schmidt, who is about to issue setting of full chorus and solos of the hymn "Ten Thousand Times Ten Thousand," by Mr. Norris. Easter carols and teaching pieces for the piano just out, are more of his work, and he is now preparing a setting of the Te Deum for unison chorus, something of the kind for seasons of the year when the choirs are necessarily small being a musical need in the churches.

* * *

One of the churches where there will be no changes in the choir this year is the Collegiate Church, Lexington Avenue and 123d Street, Frank J. Smith, organist. Miss Edith Chapman, soprano; Miss Corinne Welch, contralto; John Young, tenor, and Claude Cunningham, bass, will renew their contracts. For the next special musical service of the church, April 1, Stainer's "Crucifixion" will probably be given.

* * *

A series of three organ recitals will be begun on Wednesday of this week by Leopold Stokorski of St. Bartholomew's, at that Church, Madison Avenue and Forty-fourth Street, at 8:30 P. M. Following is the programme:

1. Vorspiel, "Lohengrin"..............Wagner
2. (a) Chorus a capella..................Arcadelt
"Give ear unto my prayer, O Lord my God."
(b) Chorus a capella..............Mendelssohn
"Judge me, O God."
3. Fugue in G minor..........................Bach
4. Chorus a capella.................Tschaikowsky
"How blest are they whom Thou hast chosen."
5. Adagia Lamentoso...............Tschaikowsky
(From the "Symphonie Pathetique.")
6. Chorus a capella.........................Sullivan
"O Gladsome Light of the Father Immortal."
7. (a) Serenade ....Schubert
(b) "O du mein holder Abendstern".Wagner
8. Toccata ....Widor

CONCERTS OF THE WEEK.

Jean Gerardy, 'cellist, and Miss Blanche Duffield, soprano, will be the soloists at Victor Herbert's concert at the Hippodrome to-night—the first of a series to be given weekly in the big playhouse. The programme will be made up of popular and classic music interpreted by an enlarged orchestra, with the addition of prominent soloists as a feature. Popular prices will prevail.

* * *

A concert will be given at the Waldorf-Astoria to-morrow afternoon for the benefit of the Seamen's Benefit Society. The money raised is to be used for the expenses of the mission boat Sentinel. The artists will be Mme. Rappold of the Metropolitan Opera House, M. Gilibert, the French baritone, both favorably known here, and Mr. Tibaldi. He is a new comer, a young violinist. He is a cousin of Amherst Webber, who will play the accompaniments.

* * *

The Mendelssohn Trio Club will play at the Hotel Majestic on Tuesday afternoon Mendelssohn's trio in C minor, Opus 66, and Rubinstein's in G minor, Opus 15. Miss Lillia Snelling and Mr. Spross will be the soloists.

* * *

The next set of People's Symphony Concerts will take place Thursday evening at Cooper Union, March 15, and at Grand Central Palace, Friday evening, March 16. The programme will include the following numbers:

Liszt's "Tasso," Mendelssohn's "Ruy Blas," Saint-Saëns's "Rondo Capricco," for violin and orchestra, (H. Edouard Deither, violinist;) MacDowell's suite Op. 42 and an aria by Verdi, to be sung by Mme. Marian Van Duyn, contralto.

AN INVASION BY CREATORE.

Why Oscar Hammerstein Will Smile at His Appearance Abroad.

Creatore's Band has invaded London. It began a series of concerts in Queen's Hall last Monday night, and cable reports say that the strenuous leader had almost as warm a reception there as he had in New York when he first appeared.

Oscar Hammerstein must smile when he thinks of this organization invading Europe. The true story of Creatore's Band has never been told in print, but it deserves to rank with Barnum's white elephant in the matter of the hoax on the New York public.

It had been a dull Summer on the roof garden of Mr. Hammerstein four years ago. The manager was several thousand dollars behind his expenses on the season and was wondering what could be done to awaken the interest of New Yorkers.

It happened that Manager Decker of the Primrose and Dockstader minstrel troupe was in the roof garden one night trying to shake Mr. Hammersten out of his blue mood. In the course of this process he told the story of a little orchestra he had seen touring the ten, twenty, and thirty cent theatres somewhere out in Pennsylvania. He described the antics of the conductor, which, he said, provided great amusement for the miners, and soon had the others present laughing.

Mr. Hammerstein still sat thinking. But next day he was on a train going in search of that funny conductor. Within a week he was telling of a great attraction he was soon to put on at the roof garden. Within two weeks after that Creatore and his "Italian Military Band" were filling the roof garden so full that, as one man put it, "they were hanging from the rafters." Nobody asked on what steamer the band had arrived, and the roof garden that season made large profits.

Mr. Hammerstein simply had found the conductor who had so greatly amused Mr. Decked. Creatore was playing in a little town in Pennsylvania. He had been a trombone player in the Banda Rossa that had come to America and disbanded for lack of business, even though it was boomed lustily. With a few players Creatore had gone to Atlantic City and played for a time in a resort there. It was then that he developed his strenuous leadership. When he was engaged to come to New York he gathered up his orchestra from every available place around, getting some of the members of the unfortunate Banda Rossa, and, some friends of Mr. Hammerstein used to say, raiding the brickyards of Philadelphia. New York took a more serious view of him than the Pennsylvania miners, and so Creatore made a success.

MUSICAL NOTES.

Mr. Victor Beigel's programme for his second and last concert in Mendelssohn Hall on Wednesday evening, March 21, will be made up of many novelties, the most important of which are two songs by Max Reger, "Mude" and "Mei Bua." Schubert is also represented on the programme with two songs, while three songs by Rubinstein are to be heard. The Brahm songs with viola obbligato, to be played by Olive Meade, are "Gestillte Sehnsucht" and "Geistliches Wiegenlied." Bungert, César Franck, Fauré, Debussy, Chansarel, Duparc, Reger, and Quilter are represented. Two songs of Mr. Beigel's are also included in the programme.

* * *

Albert von Doenhoff, pianist, will give a concert in Mendelssohn Hall on Wednesday evening, April 4.

* * *

Joseph Hollman, the Dutch 'cellist, has made a contract for a tour of this country next season. He had his introduction this year with Mme. Eames, and played several concerts at the end of her tour. He also visited President Roosevelt.

* * *

Alexander Petschnikoff, the Russian violinist, will be one of the visiting artists next season. He made his last tour here eight years ago. Of late years he has confined himself chiefly to Germany, Austria, and Russia.

* * *

Even though she has announced her intention of living hereafter in America, Mme. Schumann-Heink has enjoyed almost a welcome home on her return to Germany in the last few weeks. She had such a warm greeting at her first concert with the Hamburg Philharmonic Orchestra that the management did the unusual thing of engaging her for the succeeding concert. A similar occurrence came in Paris, where she sang with the Colonne Orchestra. She has sent cablegrams to this city expressing her great pleasure at finding the Fatherland so pleasant.

* * *

The Flonzaley Quartet will give a concert with this attractive programme in Mendelssohn Hall on Wednesday evening, March 28: Quartet in G minor, Opus 27, Grieg; Variations from third quartet, Tanéiew; Quartet in A minor, Opus 29, Schubert. This will be the last opportunity to hear the quartet in public this season. The concert will be given for the benefit of Stony Wold Sanatorium, Auxiliary No. 16.

* * *

The New Music Society of America has engaged for its second concert, on Monday evening, April 2, Miss Maud Powell, violinist. Miss Powell will play a violin concerto by an American composer, not yet performed in public, and the programme will contain serious orchestral works of native musicians. Novelties will, however, predominate, whereas a large share of the opening concert was devoted to MacDowell's "Indian" suite and his D minor piano concerto.

* * *

The second concert of the Leo Schulz Quartet will be given at Knabe Hall on March 19. A string quartet by Juon, a string trio by Schubert, and a piano quartet by Josef Suk will be played.

* * *

Mme. Kitty Berger will give a harp-zither concert at Delmonico's on Tuesday afternoon.

Creditable Achievements of Players Not Stars.

The Value of Intelligent Co-operation as Exemplified in Some Current Successes.

IT is not an unusual thing for the first-night reviewer to pick out for special commendation some lesser light of a company whose acting has merited a word of praise, but neither the critic nor the general public is inclined, as a rule, to recognize to its full extent the value of intelligent co-operation on the part of the minor players. This lack of appreciation of acting, as acting, is another result of the general system of exploiting stars.

The effort of the player, projected with a large amount of preliminary booming, frequently takes on a quality of importance in the general mind which nothing short of actual genius ought to justify. And, on the other hand, we occasionally have an exhibit of rare and unusual talent going almost unnoticed because no particular effort has been made to give it prominence. In fact, such are the peculiar conditions of the player's calling that the very persons are denied publicity to whom it might mean most as regards future opportunity and advancement. More than one capable player has been obliged to seek new employment because his "notices" were too frequent and too laudatory to please the star. And such a condition is possible largely because, except in rare and unusual cases, the general audience at a theatrical representation knows little, and cares less, about any of the individual members of a cast other than the star and an occasional well-advertised name.

⁂

The people who attend premier performances in New York, and who form the major part of the audiences for the first few nights of a success, are possibly a little better informed as to the identities of the actors, but thereafter the general run of people out front, though they may scan the list of characters in the left-hand column of the playbill, seldom give any great consideration to the names of the men and women who comprise the cast.

Occasionally an actor or actress by some unusually powerful or colorful bit of acting enforces a brief attention, but, unless the effort is supplemented by a judicious and skillful use of printer's ink, it will not be sufficient to stamp the player's individuality on the general mind.

Two facts conspire to rob the actor of the fruit of his labor. To begin with, as has been suggested, he is the victim of the ordinary professional usage and etiquette, frequently emphasized by actual written contract, which denies to any but the star the exploitation of an achievement; secondly, there is the peculiar disadvantage which comes from the common habit of associating an actor with his rôle.

Call to the mind of the average playgoer some particularly effective bit of characterization in a last season's play—not to go back any further—and he will probably remember it distinctly enough. But ask for the name of the player responsible for the result, and it will not be forthcoming.

Beyond a doubt one of the most charming and artistic performances which New York has been privileged to enjoy for some time is that of George Fawcett in Edwin Milton Royle's "The Squaw Man." Nine-tenths of the ordinary playgoers have no idea who George Fawcett is, as George Fawcett. Ask them if they remember Big Bill, the cowboy who hasn't lost his temper for twenty years, and they are enthusiastic at once. And yet this same sincere and capable actor has been playing parts sincerely and capably for the last goodness-knows-how-long. He is a man well known to every actor and manager in the country, and his work is so far above the average that one wonders at the lack of perception which is the cause of his seldom or never being exploited in anything more than "bit-parts," which he invariably builds up, by the way, to an importance which reflects his capacity for more extended achievement.

His playing of the cowboy is in so absolutely the right key, with so sure a touch and so little evidence of mechanics of any kind, that it gives a delightful sense of reality which amounts to perfection. His every effect is gained with a quiet knowledge of its precise value, and a happy avoidance of any appearance of effort, which gives evidence, to the greatest possible advantage, of his experience and technical skill. His Big Bill is really deserving of an unstinted measure of praise, the more decidedly because those of us who know Mr. Fawcett's previous work recognize that his success with his present rôle is not the result of one of those more or less felicitous "accidents" by which an actor, temperamentally fitted for it, sometimes hits upon a highly illuminative portrayal of a part, and thereafter is unable again to reach his own standard.

We need just such men as Mr. Fawcett, need them in a hundred different parts which they are never permitted to play. When the day of awakening comes, however, the value of such experience as his, combined with such conscientious care for detail, will be of paramount importance in the theatrical structure we all write reams about, and no one dares to inaugurate.

While considering "The Squaw Man" it would be unfair to forego a complimentary word or two concerning W. S. Hart's Cash Hawkins. Hawkins might so easily have been played as the ordinary bad man of melodrama that one feels especially indebted to Mr. Hart for the originality, wild virility, and intensity with which he interprets the part. When one stops to think that Mr. Hart is on the stage only about fifteen or twenty minutes altogether, in the second act, the strength of his characterization (which is a sort of splash of vivid coloring which spreads itself over the entire play) becomes apparent as something of an achievement. But the truth about George Fawcett is the truth about W. S. Hart—they are known primarily as Big Bill and Cash Hawkins—all for the lack of a little judicious advertising, without which no actor arrives at any prominence in the eye of the public at large. One seldom, it might be said never, sees a photograph of either of these actors in the magazines, in which every other electro-plated, puny figurehead of a popular extravaganza tenor or sextet show girl has a full-page place.

⁂

There is an Englishman, speaking of small parts well done—William Hawtrey in "Gallops"—who is making a groom of the sentimentally-faithful attached-to-the-family type so real and so reasonable that he is deserving of much better opportunities and wider scope. His work is charmingly unaffected, and he is able to suggest the insignificance of the servant, while rising above it to command the interest and attention of the audience.

The ability to play successfully the part of a man whose outward action is nearly always weak, a son afraid of his father, and at the same time to fulfill the intent of the character and give him sufficient innate lovableness and nobility to account for a strong woman's otherwise unaccountable love for him, is a task which is brilliantly carried through by Richard Bennett in Charles Klein's "The Lion and the Mouse." Mr. Bennett's performance is by long odds the most efficient in the play, for he has had much less to work upon than either Miss Elliston or Mr. Breese. Mr. Bennett, unlike Mr. Fawcett and Mr. Hart, has enjoyed a certain prominence in the public eye, which is by way of being an exceptional case to prove the rule. His work in "The Lion and the Mouse" is another illustration of what a good actor can do with a comparatively small rôle, and an added justification for a query as to why we cannot make more use of the few instances of excellent talent which we have at hand.

An example of much grace and native histrionic instinct is to be found in little Miss Mildred Morris, who plays Wendy so exquisitely in the ever-lovely "Peter Pan." At the age bordering on womanhood, in which most young misses are beginning to spread the pinions of their feminine importance, too young to look back on childhood with a woman's understanding mind, and yet too old to be in herself the Wendy-child's own age, it is remarkable the extent to which little Miss Morris gives us the sweet simplicity of the "mothering" girl, with a spirituality which shines through her big eyes and sounds through her voice, and is everywhere apparent in her work throughout the ineffably lovely fairy tale.

It is devoutly to be hoped that she will not be lost sight of when "Peter Pan" has been put by for something else.

THIS WEEK'S OFFERINGS

DE WOLF HOPPER IN "HAPPYLAND," at the Casino Theatre to-morrow evening.

"HUMPTY DUMPTY,"
at the New York Theatre to-morrow evening.

DE WOLF HOPPER is coming back to the city in "Happyland," opening at the Casino to-morrow evening. The engagement, however, is for four weeks only. The story of the comic opera, it will be remembered, has to do with the efforts of King Ecstaticus to pass off his daughter, Sylvia, as the crown prince of Elysia. The popular musical numbers of the piece are "How I Love Flowers," "Mimette, My Human Mermaid," "Hail, Gentle Eros," "'Twas the Rose," and "Cupid's Garden."

The cast is the same that supported Mr. Hopper during his engagement at the Lyric Theatre earlier in the season. It includes Marguerite Clark, William Wolff, Joseph Phillips, William Danforth, John Dunsmuir, Estelle Wentworth, Bertha Shalek, and Ada Deaves.

⁂

At the New York Theatre to-morrow evening Klaw & Erlanger will make a revival of their Drury Lane spectacle, "Humpty Dumpty," which was played for several months at the New Amsterdam Theatre last season. They will present it with all the elaborate scenery and costumes utilized during its long run at the latter house, with the original ballets and with practically the same cast. Frank Moulan and William C. Schrode, who made hits here last year in the rôles of Little Mary and the Clown, continue to play these parts. Other important members of the cast are John McVeigh, George Schiller, Maude Lillian Berri, Nellie Daly, Diamond Donner, John G. Schrode, Joseph C. Smith, Madeline Seville, William Fables, David Abrams, Hilarion Cebellos, Clinton Caly, and Eugene Everett. A newcomer to the cast is Augusta Greenleaf, a California girl, who will make her début on the professional stage as the Fairy Queen.

AT OTHER THEATRES.

Kellar, the magician, comes to the Fourteenth Street Theatre to-morrow evening.

"Bedford's Hope," with the sensational automobile race, will be the attraction at the American.

Fiske O'Hara, in "Mr. Blarney of Ireland," comes to the West End to-morrow night.

At the Murray Hill, "The Show Girl" is announced by the management as the week's offering.

Henry Clay Blaney, in "The Boy Behind the Gun," will appear at the New Star.

At the Harlem Opera House, James K. Hackett and Mary Mannering will be seen throughout the week in "The Walls of Jericho."

"The College Widow" will begin its second and last week at the Grand Opera House to-morrow evening.

William J. Kelly and his stock company will present the comedy drama, "Robert Emmet," at the Yorkville this week.

"Custer's Last Fight," a melodrama, by Hal Reid, will be the attraction at the Metropolis.

"Lutti," the German version of Pierre Ueber's comedy, will be seen throughout the week at the Irving Place Theatre.

The Proctor 125th Street Theatre stock company will appear in Shakespeare's "As You Like It" this week.

James J. Corbett will appear in a revival of "Mr. Smooth" at the Fifth Avenue Theatre. Mr. Corbett will be supported by the Proctor all-star company. Amelia Bingham will appear in the principal female rôle.

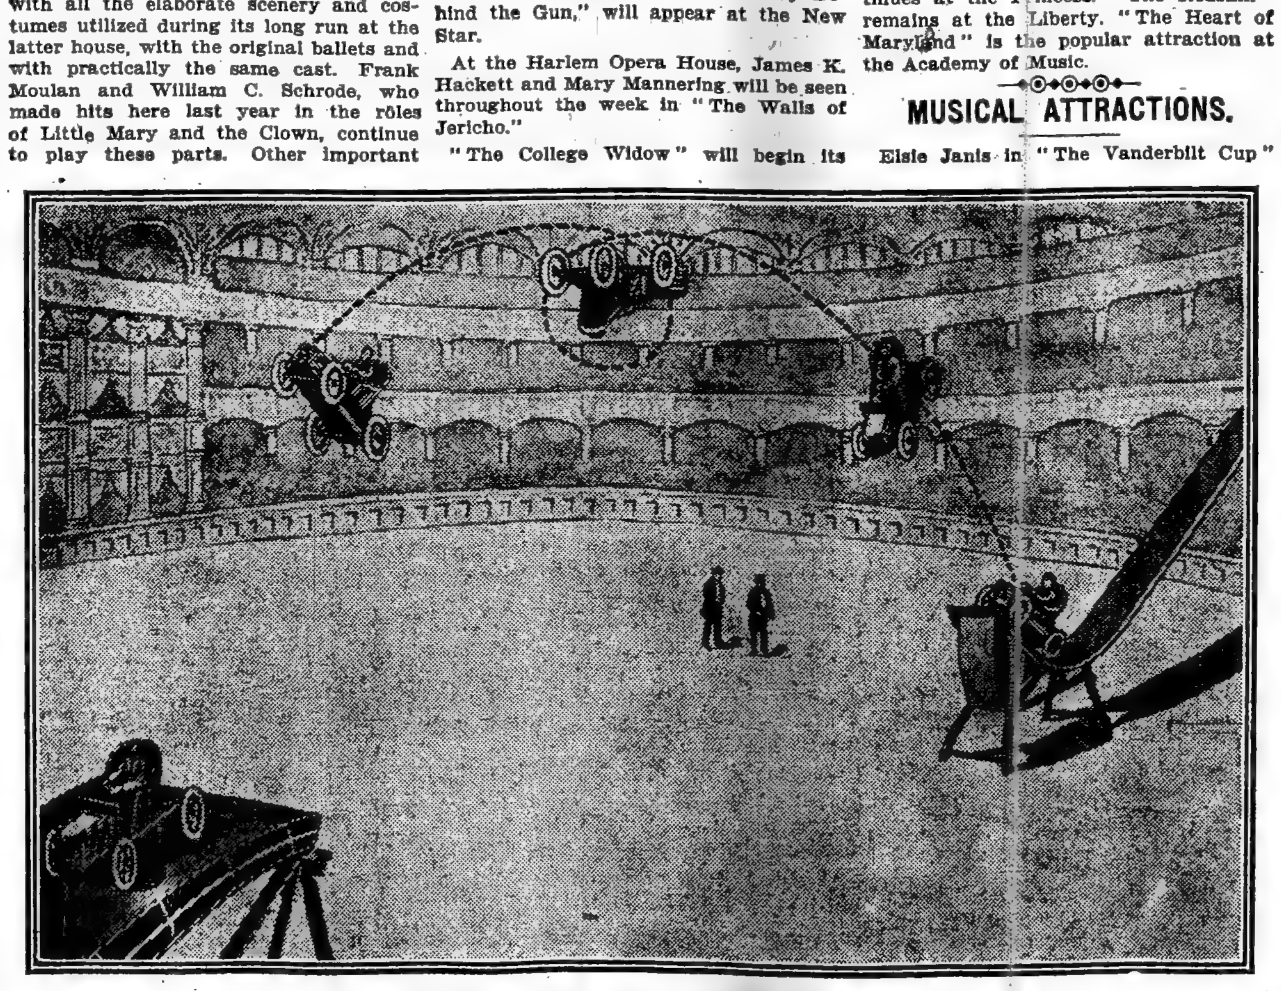
PLAYS THAT HOLD.

The plays that remain indefinitely in the city are Maude Adams in "Peter Pan" at the Empire, Blanche Bates in "The Girl of the Golden West" at the Belasco, David Warfield in "The Music Master" at the Bijou, William Faversham in "The Squaw Man" at Wallack's, Raymond Hitchcock in "The Galloper" at the Garden, Otis Skinner in "The Duel" at the Hudson, "The Lion and the Mouse" at the Lyceum, "Gallops" at the Garrick, and "Mr. Hopkinson" at the Savoy.

This is the second week of Francis Wilson in "The Mountain Climber" at the Criterion, and of Lawrance D'Orsay in "The Embassy Ball" at Daly's. Henry Woodruff in "Brown of Harvard" continues at the Princess. "The Redskin" remains at the Liberty. "The Heart of Maryland" is the popular attraction at the Academy of Music.

MUSICAL ATTRACTIONS.

Elsie Janis in "The Vanderbilt Cup" at the Broadway, Fritzi Scheff in "Mlle. Modiste" at the Knickerbocker, George M. Cohan in "George Washington, Jr.," at the Herald Square; "Twiddle-Twaddle" and "The Squaw Man's Girl of the Golden West" at the Weber Music Hall, and "Mexicana" at the Lyric, are the permanent musical attractions in the city. This is the last week of Fay Templeton in "45 Minutes from Broadway" at the New Amsterdam, and of Williams and Walker in "Abyssinia" at the Majestic.



NEW "THRILLER" FOR THE "BIG SHOW."

The American liner Philadelphia, which reached New York yesterday from Southampton, brought over the heavy apparatus for the new Barnum & Bailey "thriller," which, under the name of "The Limit," will be made known to the American public at the Madison Square Garden engagement, beginning Thursday, March 22. The Philadelphia also brought [illegible] Ercole, who introduced the act in Paris, the engineer who built the apparatus and under whose direction it [illegible] in the Garden, and Mlle. Octavie La Tour, the young Frenchwoman who will risk her neck twice a day demo[illegible] easy it is to turn a somersault in an automobile—if you only know how.

MME. GUILBERT AT LYCEUM.

Mme. Guilbert returns to the Lyceum this evening, and will sing delightful songs which she groups in "Chansons Pompadour" and "Chansons Crinoline." Her programme will be different from that of last Sunday evening.

OUT-OF-TOWN STARS.

This week Viola Allen will be seen in Pittsburg, Margaret Anglin in St. Louis, Ethel Barrymore in Philadelphia, Kyrle Bellew in Minneapolis, John Drew in Chicago, Bertha Galland in Chicago, William Gillette in Atlantic City, and Robert Loraine in Philadelphia.

Mrs. Fiske has the week in one-night stands at Cincinnati, Frankfort, Portsmouth, Parkersburg, and Oil City. Grace George will be seen at Terre Haute, Evansville, Louisville, and Crawfordsville. Olga Nethersole plays at Lexington and Columbus. Blanche Walsh will appear at Plainfield, Trenton, Lancaster, Harrisburg, and Altoona.

VAUDEVILLE.

KEITH'S—McMahon's Watermelon Girls, Carleton Macy and Maude Hall in "A Timely Awakening," Herzog Sisters, Dusselldorf, Howard and North, Crane Brothers, Tim McMahon and Edith Chapelle, Caprice, Lynn and Faye, Americus Comedy Four, Aerial Smiths, Martin Brothers, Gorman and West, Adams and Mack, and the kinetograph.

PROCTOR'S TWENTY-THIRD STREET THEATRE — Fred Walton in "Cissie's Dream," Leslie and Dailey in "A Jolly Bit of Tomfoolery," Picchiani Family, Wilfred Clarke and Theodore Carew, Stuart Barnes, Hoey and Lee, Frank Lynne, Delton Brothers, Gilroy, Haines and Montgomery, and the moving pictures.

VICTORIA—Henri de Vries in "A Case of Arson," Mme. Renz, James Thornton, Collins and Hart, Charles F. Semon, the Johnsons, Herbert Brooks, May Belfort, and the moving pictures.

HURTIG AND SEAMON'S—Timothy J. Cronin in "The Sheridan," the Zancigs, Barney Fagin and Henrietta Byron, Louis Wesley, Hugh Stanton, Walters and Prouty, St. John and Le Fevre, Mallory Brothers, and moving pictures.

PROCTOR'S FIFTY-EIGHTH STREET THEATRE — William Courtleigh in "Under the Third Degree," Junie McCree, W. H. Murphy and Blanche Nichols in "From Zaza to Uncle Tom," Vassar Girls, Bard Brothers, Carlisle's dogs and ponies, and moving pictures.

COLONIAL—"The Kilties," Gordon's Highland Band; Tuller Golden, Rice and Prevost, "The Globe of Death," Edmund Day and company in "The Sheriff," Mayme Remington and her "Buster Brownies," Melville Ellis, Milani Trio, Harry Brown, and the vitagraph.

ALHAMBRA.—Charles E. Evans in "It's Up to You, William," Empire City Quartet, Mr. and Mrs. Gardner Crane, Cole and Johnson, Glinseretti troupe, Melville and Stetson, De Witt, Burns, and Torrance, McGrath Brothers, Mr. and Mrs. Allison, and the vitagraph.

EDEN MUSEE—Group in wax illustrative of the marriage of Alice Roosevelt, Hungarian Orchestra, and the cinematograph.

"The Conspirators."

THE undergraduates of Columbia University will to-morrow night appear in "The Conspirators" at Carnegie Lyceum. The production, a musical comedy in two acts, marks the annual début of Columbia into the theatrical world and is booked for a week's run. Kenneth Webb is the author of the book and lyrics, and the music is by Louis J. Ehret. Those who have seen the dress rehearsals say that the show is one of the best that has been given in a number of years.

Manager Walter J. Brennan has arranged for special scenery, and the costumes are very elaborate. The proceeds—that is, if there is anything left over after the debts are paid—will go to the athletic teams of the university. Up to several years ago the shows did not pay any large amount—in fact, often went decidedly behind, but in the last three years the accumulated debt has been paid off. It is hoped this season to clear a considerable sum, and from present indications this will be realized.

Even the students themselves would not claim more than fair acting at one of the performances, but that there is plenty of chance for laughter cannot be denied. The picture of a college athlete decked out in feminine garb is not one that is calculated to produce anything but hilarity. True, if the feelings of the embryo actor were consulted he would probably not think it a laughing matter, for laced tight in corsets and wearing shoes that pinch unmercifully, he is really an object to be somewhat pitied. The make-up, a handsome blonde wig, French heels, and a long-trained dress appear on superficial examination to mask the real article, but the deep bass voice uttering terms of endearment absolutely destroys the illusion. Combined with a sailor-like walk it maks a picture bordering on the absurd. But it is the absurd that an audience at a college play expects and comes prepared to enjoy.

This year Columbia will have in the play several men who have before been in dramatics at the Morningside University. Louis J. Ehret and Walter A. Kelley, "the conspirators," are the two men who made probably the greatest hit last season. Both have parts that are especially adapted to their style of acting, and if the part is any indication of the future, they will call forth many a laugh.

Richard Conried, son of Heinrich Conried, Director of the Metropolitan Opera House, has also a prominent part in the play. He, too, is a veteran of several 'Varsity shows. E. Dunwoodie, as Cecilia Van Twiller, takes the leading feminine part. His make-up is said to be perfect, except for that unchangeable feature, his voice. A. T. Hopping is made up as an attractive Indian maiden, and the students say he or she is just a little bit more attractive than any Indian maid they have ever seen.

The plot of the play hinges about the discovery of Prof. Oglethorp that he can turn people to stone with a magic electric battery that he has. With Hans Blauderblatz, he turns to stone a large party of guests who have leased Central Park for the day. They proceed to replenish their funds by exhibiting them in towns up the river.

The battery, however, is stolen, and then the conspirators are crazed with the fear that they will not be able to bring the people to life again. The battery is at length discovered, and in the struggle for possession of it, it is dropped. As it strikes the ground it flashes and brings the people to life. The cast:

Senator M. Underwood Van Twiller	J. G. Glenn
Ferdinand Van Twiller	R. V. Kehrlein
Lord Percival Fitzthistle	Richard Conried
White Eagle	K. Webb
Hans Blauderblatz	L. J. Ehret
Prof. Horace Oglethorp	W. A. Kelley
O'Hara	G. Raeney
Willie Blunn	R. M. Richter
The Unknown	J. O. Hauser
Doris Van Twiller	A. T. Hopping
Madge Fairmont	R. K. Wuppermann
Cecelia Van Twiller	E. Dunwoodie
Miss Perkins	F. D. Fackenthall
Lizette	R. Cauchois

THE HIPPODROME.

"A Society Circus" continues to be the popular attraction at the Hippodrome. Capt. Woodward's educated seals are the features of the circus events.

Victor Herbert's orchestra will be heard in concert to-night, the first of a series to be given at the Hipprodrome by this popular conductor.

BROOKLYN AMUSEMENTS.

"The Earl and the Girl," with Eddie Foy, comes to the Shubert Theatre to-morrow evening.

May Irwin comes to the New Montauk in "Mrs. [illegible]"

[illegible] at the Orpheum [illegible], Rigo, Vesta [illegible]

Looking Forward to a Belated Honeymoon

Richard Mansfield, Anxious to Lay Down the Wander-Staff, Discusses His Life's Work and Future Plans.

"NEVER in my life was I more sincere than I am in my announced determination to retire from the activities of my professional life after the next three brief seasons, which have been mapped out for me," said Richard Mansfield last week in Boston.

A cordial how-d'-y'-do, a few polite conventionalities, and then a direct question brought him to his feet. He was interested, and one could fairly see the nerves begin to vibrate. Scarcely a moment while he talked was he quiet. His teeth clenched a small briar pipe, he moved about the room, and his hands and eyes talked as eloquently as his tongue.

This artist, at the zenith of his career, still on the youthful side of 50, has the courage to say that he is going to step aside from the hard, beaten path of publicity and seek the quieter recreative by-paths of leisure and diversion. It is unusual. But, by the grace of that same expletive, it is Mansfieldian.

"All my life I have looked forward to the day when I could lay down my wander-staff and exchange the excitement and strenuous work of my profession for the more deliberate and natural pleasures which are all about us, but are abandoned for the money-rush.

"You have no idea of the demands of my work. Summer and Winter, day and night, for twenty-five years I have devoted myself heart and soul to the stage; now if I have earned any privilege, surely it is to rest. To me acting is all absorbing. I must dispose myself temperamentally for the part. It is a species of self-hypnosis. I am what I affect to be. When I act Richard the King I become Richard the King. When I act Ivan, or Don Carlos, or Shylock, I am the Czar, the Prince, and the Jew. And when I come out of that exalted state, which to me is necessary to create an illusion and convince an audience, I return to my dressing room exhausted. It seems for the time being as if years had been cut off my life.

"In an address before the Faculty and students of the University of Pennsylvania I amused myself elaborating Shakespeare's lines in which he says, 'All the world's a stage and every man must play his part.' When Shakespeare said it it was accepted without cavil. But when I repeated it it seemed to raise a lively discussion. It is true, however. Consciously or unconsciously, every man is acting. This may not be apparent to the layman, but to an actor it is obvious. Human nature as expressed in my fellow-men has always been my study. A lifetime of observation and experience, study and comparison, has in every instance emphasized this. And some men are bad actors and some are good.

"You will understand that after acting so long, after being thirty or forty other people besides myself, and acting all there is in me out in every conceivable expression, I am sometimes glad not to act. But people believe I act most when I am most natural. It is extraordinary. But it is absolutely necessary to relax and be natural. It is my tonic, my salvation, and yet it is too often the undoing of the reputation any man covets for the kindness which is in his own heart.

"When I am on the stage I am, as you would say, 'up in the air.' Inspiration is permitted full sway, and the mind is in an exalted state. When I leave the stage I cease to act. I relax. I permit myself to be absolutely natural. So, when thoughtless people about me do things that they should not, things that mar the artistic effect, things which, in a word, rob the audience of that degree of perfection which is their purchased right, I do not act an indifference, but express the disappointment and chagrin which is natural to the situation. If we must act off the stage it would be too much. No real actor ever did act off the stage. They have always been perfectly natural, and their reputation has been eccentricity. But I will say this, that never have I deliberately and with malice offended any one. If sometimes, in a frame of mind over which I had no control, I have said things which have given offense, it has hurt me quite as much as the other.

"If we are to move forward, to perfect the stage, and not sit idly on the sacks of indifference and contentment, then there has got to be a pioneer, a teacher, a corrector, in a word, a critic. Great heights are only reached with blistered feet and bleeding hands."

This he said with feeling. But his alert mentality was soon off on another tack, and still another, until we were soon far out at sea, from the shores where it had been the purpose of this interview to wander. A question or two brought him back.

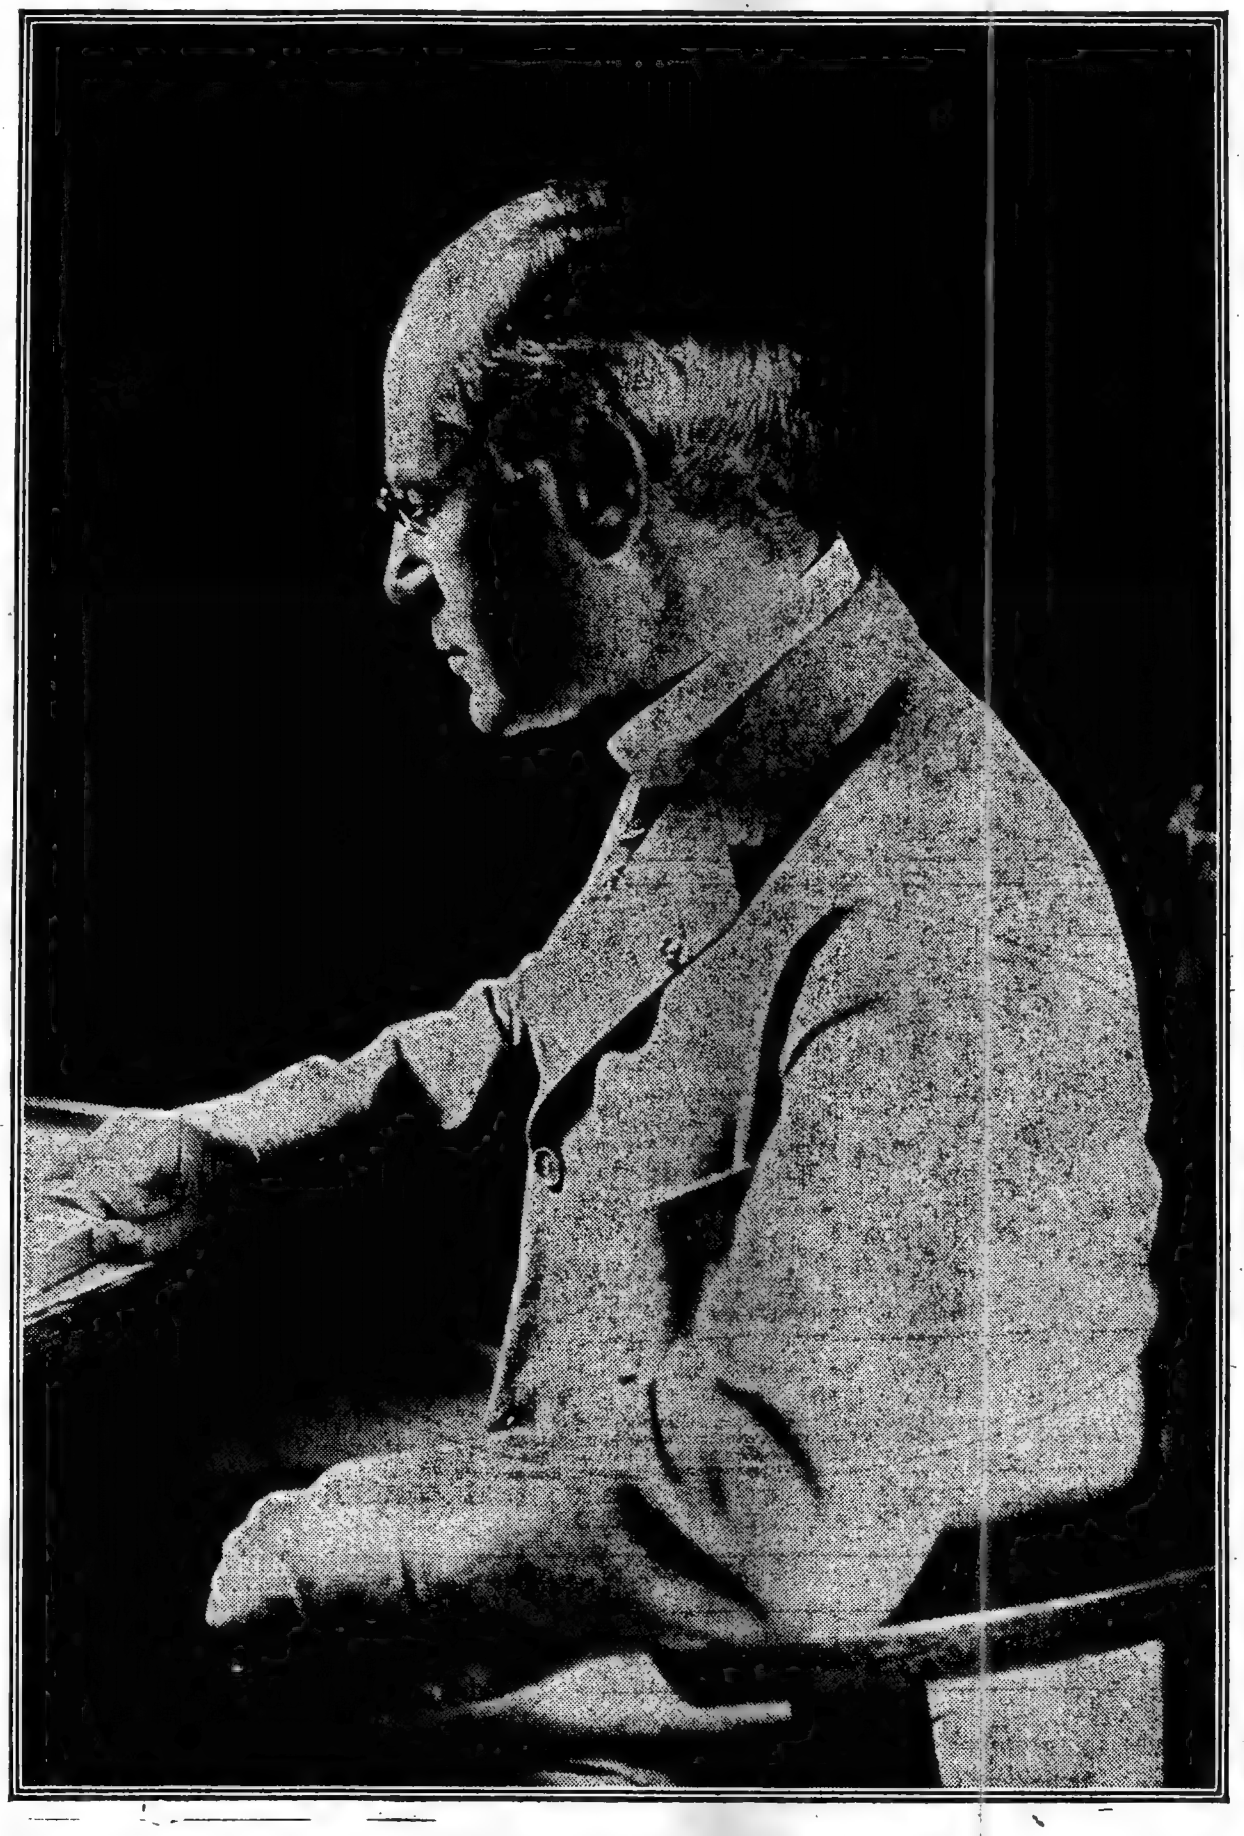
* * *

"What shall I do when I give up the stage? Be sure of one thing, I shall not be idle. But I shall so order my time that there will be some welcome in it for the pleasures of life. What shall I do? What, rather, shall I not do?

"Do you remember the boarding school days when you chalked off the days until vacation? That's my frame of mind. It seems as if there could not be years enough for all the jolly times we have planned. For one thing, Mrs. Mansfield and I are going on our honeymoon. We never had a honeymoon. It is going to extend around the world and is going to be indefinite."

"Will you act in any foreign countries?"

"It would be great fun, wouldn't it? The thing to do would be to charter a vessel large enough to hold our productions, take along our leading artists, and cruise away in the good old fashion. There would be no route, no contracts, no shackles of any kind. If, when we touched in a port, there was a desire to see us, why we would play for the good people. If they wanted more they should have it, and if they didn't, then unfurl the sails, up with the anchor, and off we'd go. I fancy we should have a fine time. How would you like to go along?



A New Photograph of Richard Mansfield.

"In some port, where we would steal in unannounced, instead of 'Richard Mansfield' we could announce some other actor, but I would act, and it would be interesting to see if the critics would discover me. If we got far enough away from the waters policed by the powers we might run up the black flag and turn pirates. That would appeal to my little boy. There's a lot that is good and beautiful and simple in life—I don't mean piracy—beckoning us all the time. While I have strength and health I want a share of it.

"Please don't construe this into a jeremiad. If I were not fortified by years of cordial encouragement from the generous press and the great, kind, faithful public I should not leave the stage. But I am grateful to say that has been my portion, and after the few years intervening it will go with me into retirement a priceless possession. An artist cannot be indifferent to popular applause and approval. It is his inspiration and his meat. In America it is the only crown on an artist's career and the only shrine for his memory is in the hearts of his public."

"Of course you have some plans for your three farewell tours?"

* * *

"In a large, indefinite way. There will be no receding from present standards and no giving over of hard work. The present répertoire will be retained in full. It has not been decided what will be revived from my former successes except 'Cyrano de Bergerac.' There are two Shakespearean characters which have long been within the ken of my ambition. They are Macbeth and Falstaff. These will be added to the répertoire."

"And your season in Paris?"

"That all depends on the business arrangements. It could be made highly profitable and the experience would be delightful. There is in Paris a wealthy English speaking population of many, many thousands literally starving for English spoken drama. A large proportion of the wealthy French understand English, or at least are familiar with our classics and would follow the plays with interest. But the same is true of Berlin, Vienna, Budapesth, Milan, Venice, Rome, Florence, and other European cities, as well as Alexandria, Cairo, and other points," added Mr. Mansfield, glancing significantly out of the corners of his eyes.

The manuscript of "Don Carlos" lay on the table at his elbow. It was the only one of his plays in sight. And he confessed that sympathetic as he found his latest creation and much as he loved the role of Carlos, with its perplexing enigmas and its problematic subtleties, he never goes to the theatre to act Don Carlos without first glancing through the play, if only for five minutes.

As a simple memory feat Richard Mansfield's répertoire of characters is an astonishing achievement. He has at his command a large group of the longest roles in the acted dramas. There are in all some 200,000 words. But remembering a part really includes double this number, for the actor has to remember his "cues" or the group of words immediately preceding his turn to speak. Sometimes his line is one word and the cue is four words. The longest role Mansfield has ever memorized is Don Carlos. Cyrano de Bergerac had almost as many words. Richard III. deserves a place in this group. Molière's comedy, "The Misanthrope," is not a long play, but the words trip out so fast that the rôle of Alceste has more words than Shylock, and that part has more than Baron Chevrial, though less than Beau Brummell.

"Some parts which I have learned I have never forgotten," said Mr. Mansfield. "I could go on and play them to-night. Perhaps at this moment the words would not all come, but, under the influence of the scene, the train of the story and the cues, every word would come back and fit into its own proper place. I never forget a word of Shakespeare. He is of all dramatists the easiest to memorize. That is because his diction is so perfect and beyond criticism is his choice of words and his discretion in using none which are superfluous.

"Speaking of memorizing," Mansfield said, "there is no test of the style of a writer like committing his words. If the mind takes them readily, be sure they are well chosen and there is fluency and potency. If, on the contrary, the mind rejects them, it is because the right words are not in the right place. Bending over an author's text always suggests the way to memorize the part, and I scarcely ever memorize twice the same way. Sometimes the words come simply by reading the part a few times. In another case, I get a group of words and repeat them until they stick in my mind, or what I call my mind. Several rôles were learned by having them read over and over again aloud within hearing. Another method employed has been to begin rehearsals, fix the business, and by reading and reading fix the words. But sometimes all this fails; then we abandon the theatre, go off for a cruise on the yacht and neither see nor speak to a human being till the undiverted memory has seized and retained the part.

"It is my belief that only a mediocre intellect is a quick study, for a keen intelligence and an alert imagination will not accept words for their face value, but will go behind them, play with them, invent readings and business, and in a thousand vivacious ways refuse to be subdued to the slavery of memorizing. The exception is lines which are unalloyedly fine, as Shakespeare's. He finished what he wrote. No mind since could improve."

And this was the gist of a delightful two hours. The actor bade good-bye with an iron grip of the hand. In a few minutes he was out in the cold, but without an overcoat, on his daily walk of five or six miles. Mr. Mansfield said he could not do his work without his constitutional.

Dramatic Criticism from the Managers' Point of View.

Differences of Opinion Revealed in the Expressions of Play Producers.

FROM the stage of the Liberty Theatre William A. Brady, theatrical manager, a week ago launched a series of nightly philippics against what he calls the "funny men" of New York newspapers. Mr. Brady claims not only that a conspiracy exists among certain journals to ridicule his plays, but that much of the tone of theatrical criticism in this city is frivolous, ill-natured, and written solely to raise a laugh.

A discussion of the matter with some prominent theatrical managers has brought out the fact that in this, as in most matters, there exists a very healthy difference of opinion.

* * *

GEORGE TYLER'S VIEWS.

"There are certainly grave defects in New York dramatic criticism," said George Tyler of Liebler & Co., "though I feel there might be better time, place, and method for dealing with them.

"Flippant criticism should be once and for all condemned. I feel, however, that it is not so much the reporter or critic who is to blame, as the proprietor of the paper, who often deliberately orders his critic to write 'funny stuff that people will read.' With a certain class of newspapers there is a definite understanding of this sort with the dramatic staff.

"I had one personal experience in point. At the time I produced 'The Royal Box' at the Fifth Avenue Theatre some years ago, a friend who was a critic on one of the big papers met me between the acts on the first night of the piece and remarked, 'Well, old man, I'm going to do a queer thing. I like this piece and I propose to handle it quietly, if I lose my job.' Next morning he turned out a sober, though not entirely favorable notice. It may have been coincidence, but within twenty-four hours he was discharged.

"Holding women up to ridicule, caricaturing tired, conscientious actors may be turned into 'bright stuff,' but it is the kind of 'bright stuff' that breaks hearts. When I see, as I have seen in the past, one of the greatest of actresses ridiculed in the coarsest manner on the score of her age, and that in a supposedly reputable criticism, I am as indignant as any man could be.

"One critic is fond of advancing the old argument that any really good play will survive all criticism. I cannot agree. Any play appealing to the simpler emotions and passions will, if it entertains, survive all newspaper disapproval. But a play which appeals primarily to the intellect will not hold out against damning criticism.

"A man's attitude as he enters the theatre is more or less influenced by what he has read about the play in the newspapers. If they said it was tiresome, unless the play makes some direct human appeal, the man will yawn at the end of the first act and flatter himself upon agreeing with the critic. On the other hand, the play that reaches the heart interests him in spite of himself, and he forgets all about the newspapers.

"'The Christian,' for example, which was damned by every critic in New York, went on playing to packed houses because of its broad human interest. 'The Children of the Ghetto,' on the other hand, was condemned out of existence because its hold was mainly on the intellect. Yet the latter was much the better play.

"I do not believe in conspiracies. There is not enough agreement either among newspapers or among theatrical managers to support anything of the kind.

"I am never likely to undervalue dignified criticism. When I have spent $40,000 and six months' effort on a production if a man will show me where I am wrong he will save me money and disappointment, whether I take the piece off or succeed in improving it.

"Just the same, there is an element of vulgarity in much American criticism, which tends to hurt the drama and to hurt it seriously. Something should be done to relieve the situation—just what I can't say. The right man with skill and tact to handle the problem is yet to be found."

GILMORE IS SATISFIED.

"They may be a little 'funny' now and then—these critics," said E. J. Gilmore, "but they've always treated me fairly. I think it foolish to make remarks in public about any class of men whatever you may fancy they have done to you. This idea of conspiracy is absurd. As for the effect of flippant criticism on the public I think the public very quickly learns just what to expect from the various newspaper writers; and to enjoy their jokes about plays and players without allowing themselves to be too much influenced one way or another. For my part, I am quite content."

FAULTFINDING USEFUL, SAYS BELASCO.

"I have no quarrel with New York critics," said David Belasco serenely, as he sat in the lobby of his theatre. "I sympathize with them. It is no easy task to sit through a long evening at a play and then hurry away to discuss it conscientiously on paper in the brief hour or so before a big newspaper goes to press. Under such circumstances I wonder they can be as fair as they are. I have had my share of praise and blame, but I have never taken undue credit for the former nor allowed myself to complain about the latter. I have found faultfinding most useful, and many a time have I deliberately set to work to profit by it. A good many men in different parts of the country disapprove of much that I do. I am glad to learn something from their disapproval, and I hope some time to make them think better of me.

"Managers who find fault with adverse criticism are usually the ones who look through seventeen columns of report, fastening on one unfavorable adjective and completely ignoring the column of praise in which it forms a single remonstrative note. The criticism may contain paragraph after paragraph of clear commendation; then comes a sentence asking whether such and such a feature might not be bettered—and instantly the manager is up in arms because every word and phrase fails to ring with acclaim. The moment he does this he loses his dignity and makes himself fair game for ridicule.

"Suppose in his heart of hearts such a manager knew his play to be weak. Suppose all the critics praised it. Do you think he would be honest enough to admit that it could be improved?

"As for all this talk about funny criticism, I can only say that it seems to me normal difference in style is by no means peculiar to dramatic critics. In every kind of literature we find mingled with the solid, ponderous writers, who argue slowly, men whose phrases are lighter, cleverer, and inclined to satire. Who shall say that the motives of the two classes are so utterly at variance? The same differences hold true in ordinary conversation.

"I believe this notion of a conspiracy on the part of newspaper critics to down any one play is all nonsense. I refuse to think that an intelligent man sent by his paper to report a play will deliberately either extol or malign it, whether in serious or frivolous phrase, unless he has some honest conviction back of what he says. If he values the dignity and reputation of his paper he wouldn't dare to do it. More than that, I believe newspaper men have too much consideration for a manager to whom the space of time between the rise and fall of his curtain may mean thousands of dollars to treat him with anything but sincerity. I have no patience with managers who exclude critics from their theatres because of unfavorable notices.

"I keep in constant touch with theatrical criticism throughout the world, and I can say frankly that I find New York critics the most open-minded, honest, and readable in the world, not even excepting those of London and Paris. Their kindness and charity often lead them into friendliness that has to give way to their better judgment. I am quite satisfied with them as they stand—excepting no one."

MR. SHUBERT'S OBJECTIONS.

Said Lee Shubert: "It is time something was done.

"We invite these critics into our theatres night after night to criticise plays that we have done our best to make worth something. They sit through an act or two and then stroll out into the lobbies to smoke cigarettes and crack smart jokes about it all. The leader of the band blows a wreath of smoke and inquires languidly, 'Well, what do we think of it?' And then they all go away to their offices to write a funny story that will amuse their readers at the expense of a piece they haven't even seen.

"I know positively that one New York critic never stays beyond the first act of an opening night. How can a man judge fairly of a play from less than its first half? Would any man be justified in pronouncing a whole dinner bad because the soup happened to be poorly seasoned and he didn't take the trouble to stay for another course? Or should an orator's speech be ridiculed because his opening words came hard? I claim no critic has a right to print a final judgment until he has sat through the whole piece.

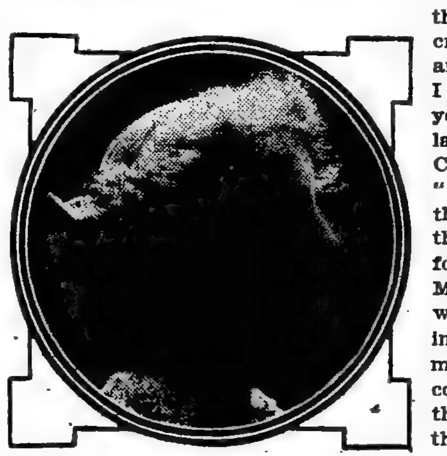
"We have too many men who are not critics but 'smart Alecs,' and managers have borne with them too long. Mr. Brady is quite right, and I have yet to see any better way than his of getting the question fairly before the public."

NO JUSTICE HERE, SAYS FISKE.

"The critics? There are good men and true among them—men who know and men who are conscientious," says Harrison Grey Fiske. "But there are also men who feel it is the proper thing, because they write for metropolitan journals, to strangle sympathy, desert the judicial attitude, and substitute flippancy or blasé phlegm. The spirit of encouragement so necessary to the nourishment of worthy ideals is sadly missing from among them. On the contrary, there is a tacit understanding that new talent and unheralded genius shall be smothered as effectually as Othello pillows his fair spouse in the tragedy, while meritorious pretense and charlatanism shall be acclaimed. And then there are those among them who are honest and well-meaning, but prejudiced and narrow and wholly out of joint with the spirit of the age—blind and bigoted where there is deviation from obsolete and artificial dramatic standards. These gentlemen have the power to butcher a production that deserves and demands their support, and they are not loath to exercise that power, while on the other hand, they can give commercial value to the artistically worthless. It is generally recognized by playwrights and managers that for just and intelligent criticism they must look to cities like Rochester, Pittsburg, St. Louis, Chicago, Indianapolis, Providence, and others that might be named. They have ceased either to expect or to find it in New York."

Personal Paragraphs About Players

A SMALL slip, cleverly covered, amused the audience at "The Duel" one night last week. During the first act, at the close of the scene between the two unsympathetic brothers, the Abbe receives the 1,000-franc note which his brother bestows upon his charities, and quietly withdraws. As Mr. Skinner left the stage the piece of paper slipped from his hand, and as he closed the door, fluttered rather conspicuously back into the room. Realizing that the loss was so obvious as to be rather funny, Mr. Skinner instantly opened the door and appeared again, bowing gravely to the surprised Mr. Standing. "My dear brother," he said simply, "I have dropped your note," whereupon he quietly picked it up and withdrew, followed by an appreciative ripple of applause.



Laura Hope Crews.

* * *

Laura Hope Crews, who plays the heroine in "Brown of Harvard," is at a loss to know just where she stands in the matter of apparent age. "One critic says I am too old for the part, and another that I am too young. So I don't know whether to go on wearing youthful pink or meekly to put on the lavender of middle age," laughed Miss Crews, the second night of the piece. "Just now, when we went out to take the call, Mr. Woodruff drew my arm through his and led me on, until I felt for all the world like an interesting Mrs. Gilbert. I really don't know which is worse, to be depressed by being told you are getting too old, or to be mortified by being called too young. One comfort about opposing criticisms is that after all they leave you just where they find you. I shall keep on with the pink gowns and medium youth until the scales tip one way or the other."

* * *

Edith Wynne Matthison, the English actress whose work with the Greet players in "Everyman," and the Shakespeare plays, introduced her to America a few seasons ago, has been appearing in Prof. Gilbert Murray's translation of the "Electra" of Euripides at the Court Theatre in London. It is more than probable that Miss Matthison will come to this country next Fall under Charles Frohman's management.

* * *

Ivy Troutman of "The College Widow" company will be remembered as the fashionable Miss Sigsbee of much worldly wisdom but sound heart in "The Climbers" some seasons ago. Since then Miss Trautman was for several months in Boston with the Castle Square Stock Company. Just now she is the athletic girl in George Ade's comedy who remarks ruefully, as she appears in evening gown, after a day in the wind and sun, conscious that she is a study in brown and white, "I wish I had either stayed out of the sun or taken off a few more things."

Ivy Troutman.

ROCKEFELLER IN "HAPPYLAND"?

Not exactly—neither he nor any other millionaire. Mere money does not always mean content. The man in "Happyland" is and to-morrow night he brings the comic opera de luxe by Frederick Ranken and Reginald De Koven back to the Casino Theatre. You will remember that "Happyland" opened this season at the Lyric Theatre and was voted the most charming performance in New York. Its run was twice extended before Mr. Hopper was crowded out to make room for Sarah Bernhardt. Now he comes back for four weeks only, bringing Marguerite Clark and the original supporting company. The Casino is at 39th St. & Broadway. $1 Matinees are given there Thursdays and Saturdays at 2:15. Evening performances at 8:15. Telephone 1646 Bryant.

DE WOLF HOPPER

TO MEXICO FOR $1.00.

Don't go to a railway station. Get your tickets at the box office of the Lyric Theatre, 42nd St., West of Broadway, or telephone 1646 Bryant. Best seats in the house on Wednesday and Saturday afternoons are $1.00, and there is an evening performance every night at 8:15. It is not really Mexico you will see, but a comic opera entitled

"MEXICANA"

Everybody in town is whistling tunes from the piece and laughing at recollections of its comedy. "Mexicana" is a great deal better than the country after which it is named. All the girls are not pretty in Mexico.

EVER SEE A SHAD ROE?

No? Or a lobster? There was one in the Harvard Crew, but Brown took his place and saved the day for his Alma Mater. If you want to see this exciting race and imbibe a whole lot of college spirit, get seats for

"BROWN OF HARVARD"

Henry Woodruff is in the cast at the Princess Theatre, 29th Street and Broadway, where matinees are given Tuesdays and Thursdays at $1.00 and Saturdays at the regular prices. Evening performances are given at 8:15 and afternoons at 2:15. The telephone number is 2848 Mad.

SPRING MILLINERY OPENING

Every evening at 8:15 at the shop of

"JULIE BONBON"

at Fields Theatre. The address is 42d St., West of Broadway, and the telephone number is 44 Bryant. $1.00 Matinees are given Wednesdays and Saturdays at 2:15, and the evening performances are at 8:15. Louis Mann and Clara Lipman are the stars of the performance, which is quite the jolliest comedy to be seen in New York.

AN ENIGMATICAL COMEDY.

"The Alabaster Staircase" Has London Guessing.

CAPT. MURSHALL'S new play, "The Alabaster Staircase," produced by John Hare at the Comedy, has occasioned some guessing on the part of the London reviewers as to the author's intentions. One critic asks if it was intended as a joke, another suggests that its subject cries aloud for treatment in the key of whimsical extravaganza, and all seem agreed that its last act left the audience in a state of complete mystification. Viewed at this distance the play seems to qualify as a more or less serious and satirical discussion in Socialism.

This is the story of the play:

Sir John Abbotsford is the Tory Prime Minister of England, and being a rich man, he has had an alabaster staircase fitted into his house in Grosvenor Square at a cost of £15,000.

His daughter Alice is a young woman with radical ideas, and she thinks that her father ought to have spent the money in improving the cottages of his tenants. And Nemesis is of the same mind as Alice.

For Sir John, while explaining his political situation to his medical adviser, slips on the alabaster staircase and falls down on the back of his head.

He is not seriously hurt, but his whole political outlook is changed. Instead of holding high Tory ideas about class and property, he becomes immensely interested in the welfare of the poor, and accepts the theories of one Mr. Edward Pickford, M. P., a young man, who, although he has inherited considerable wealth, lives in Chelsea and devotes most of his money to philanthropy.

The dramatist explains Sir John's aversion for his class by the introduction of the Duchess of Ranelagh and her sons—presumably as types of the British aristocracy. The Duchess thinks of nothing but eating and her son thinks of nothing but polo and a young woman who performs in a tank at a music hall and is known as the Diving Duck.

Alice was originally engaged to this young man, but he gives her up, and she accepts Mr. Pickford, M. P., whom she really loves, and who has made love to her in a peculiarly stilted way.

And that is all that happens, except that Sir John calls his Cabinet together and tells it that he no longer believes in party government, and explains that England never will be happy until the constituencies elect the best men without bothering about party, and the House of Commons nominates the Government. Then he shakes hands all round, and down comes the curtain.

This curtain, according to the reviewers, left the audience in a state of bewilderment, and many men found difficulty in persuading their wives that the play was really over.

NEW PLAY FOR ELEANOR ROBSON.

LOUIS N. PARKER has finished the play which he was commissioned to write for Miss Eleanor Robson, who is to be seen in it both in London and in New York, although the date of each event must still remain indefinite. Mr. Parker will shortly leave London for Rome, where he goes with the view of writing a new piece of which he has already sketched out the full scenario.

A PLAY-READING COMMITTEE.

Comedie Francaise to Again Have Such a Body.

THE Comédie Française is once more to have a "Comité de Lecture," says a correspondent of The London Standard. A reading committee of a kind existed when the theatre was Molière's. That was in 1865 or thereabout, when Molière enjoyed the protection of the "Great Monarch," and captained a stock company known first as the "Troupe de Monsieur" and afterward as the "King's Troupe." The committee then was no formal body, nor were its readings formal ceremonies, although Louis Quatorze sometimes attended them himself. The Official Reading Committee dated from only fifty years ago. It was not, therefore, an old tradition that was done away with when M. Georges Leygues suppressed the committee in 1901. Nevertheless, it carried away with it several memories. In 1875 Narcisse Fournier and Pierre Lafitte were members, and Vertueil, the secretary, and Davenne, the manager of the theatre, succeeded them. Members later were Lavoix, the friend of Dumas fils and Edouard Cadol, while Dumas himself had read "Francillon" to the committee.

The committee had to be composed of men who knew the value of a play. Yet dramatic authors and critics were not very desirable, because official connection with the Comédie Française so easily upset the balance of their judgment. Thus, when it last existed, the committee was almost wholly composed of actors. Mounet-Sully, Coquelin cadet, Silvain, De Feraudy, and Le Bargy were of the number, as well as M. Jules Claretie himself. But the actors only listened with half an ear when the committee sat in state. Some scribbled letters, some made paper boats, some made caricatures, and some even slept. M. Leygues, then Minister of Education—there was no Secretary of Fine Arts in those days—would not allow that Samson, the great comedian, was right when he said that sleep is an opinion, and he suppressed the committee.

To Settle the Controversy.

Some years ago a particularly bad performance of "Hamlet" was given in Edinburgh. Next morning a critic in one of the newspapers commented on the affair as follows:

"Our 'Hamlet' of last night affords an admirable opportunity to settle once and for all the Shakespeare-Bacon controversy. Let us proceed to exhume both gentlemen and find out which one turned over."

UNCLE SAM'S WASTE PAPER BASKET.

ECONOMY is said to consist in the care of trifles, and of this the Waste Paper Department of the United States Government's Stationery Office affords an excellent example.

An official of this department while in New York recently gave an interesting account of the system.

"No less than $30,000 is saved annually by the Government waste paper basket," he said. "It was not so very long ago that the waste paper of the Government offices was an unrecognized perquisite of the heads of departments and many of the minor officials, with the result that no small quantity of good stationery was thrown away, and in some cases large amounts of Government property were systematically misappropriated. Not only was this the case, but papers of an important and confidential character found their way into the hands of outsiders, sometimes with very unpleasant consequences.

"A visit to the waste paper department would forcibly illustrate to you the enormous amount of correspondence and clerical work with which the various Government offices have to deal.

"To the department—it is really a [illegible] warehouse—come 3,000 tons of waste [illegible] every year, the average day's receipts varying from ten to twenty tons. How vast is this amount will be better realized from the fact that if a single week's waste paper from the Government offices was thrown into Washington Square it would come pretty near burying the Washington Monument. Vast as the present quantity is, it is steadily increasing at the rate of about twenty tons every year.

"The paper received is of the most miscellaneous character, consisting of old letters, State documents, printed matter, old account books, and the like. On receipt it is at once handed over to the sorters, who classify it under twelve heads, and pack it separately in large sacks. The sacks are then shipped to a pulp mill. Confidential documents receive careful and effectual treatment. They are thoroughly sliced up by a cutting machine. When papers of an especially secret character are dealt with the middle section of each pile is taken out and placed in a separate receptacle from the rest. The cut fragments are then placed in a sealed sack, and are conveyed in charge of an officer to the pulp mill, and there reduced to pulp under his eye.

"Another section of the waste paper department contains the used ribbon from the Morse telegraphic instruments. This pours in at the rate of about fifteen hundredweight per week, measuring approximately 900 miles."

HATS AND GOWNS

IN millinery flowers promise to be more worn this Summer than in several years; but for Spring plumes, especially ostrich plumes, will be in the lead, and this not only for the great class who have money to buy what they like but no special claims to fashion, but also for the women of the exclusive and fashionable sets.

Ostrich plumes of contrasting colors to the hats or their trimmings as well as those matching either, or both, as the case may be, will be smart. What the dealers purchase the public must wear, whether ultra-fashionable or not, because no one can make certain plumes, colors, or hat materials at a moment's notice in order to emphasize differences of caste in fashion's votaries.

In hat materials almost everything is used from the Leghorn, Yeddo, Milan, and crinoline or horsehair, to frames covered as well as trimmed with tulle or lace or embroideries.

The hats worn by the Misses Margaret Beaman and Kathryn Fisher as attendants at the wedding of Miss Alice Gifford Agnew to Henry Fisher were fetching examples of one of the latest forms of the crinoline hat. These hats were round as to brims and crowns, the latter perhaps an inch and a half high. They were set on bandeaus and were tilted slightly to the front and quite a bit to the right, rising high at the left side, but not excessively so. Folds of blue tulle the color of the hats were fastened inside of the brims, and under the brims at the left, drooping over the hair, were two small ostrich plumes, also blue, rising along the side of the crown, also at the left, and drooping forward and slightly over the front brim on each hat was a single ostrich tip. Soft folds of blue liberty satin ribbon were wound around the crowns and formed on each hat a single large chou at the left, where the tips started.

These hats topped charming dull blue robes, apparently of chiffon over white. These robes had narrow shirrings or cords —the light in the church was not strong enough to enable one to distinguish which —heading deep the Spanish flounces of the skirts, and these cord effects also appeared around the tops of the bodices and on the sleeves.

The matron of honor, Mrs. Edgar Auchincloss, wore a larger hat of white crinoline and lace trimmed with a long white ostrich plume, her costume being a combination of white chiffon, crossed by very wide sections of white chiffon, having large sprays of flowers in dull blue on them. Narrow bands to match were used on the bodices and across the sleeve puffs.

⁂

The shapes in hats for the coming year are far more artistic and better suited to all faces and coiffures than those of 1905, which reveled in fantastic and trying millinery effects.

Sizes also vary. Large hats are so much easier to trim, and smartly at that, than the small ones. They are also more universally favorites, being much more softening to the face than the small hat, the latter emphasizing angularity of face and prominence of features. The small hat to look well must be smart. Large hats, no matter how handsome and how artistic, never have the smartness of the well-built small chapeaus.

Most of the crowns are higher than in 1905; some are decidedly high. But as the very high crown suits no one, they are not likely to make much headway, and a slight increase in them is not to be deplored.

Black hats will certainly be much in evidence, and as the all-black hat is most unattractive unless it has distinction in shape and materials it is very apt to degenerate into a hopelessly commonplace affair in the hands of the average milliner and worn by the average woman. In hats as in everything else that is black, the materials and trimmings should be of the best quality possible to the purse, and unless the purse is prepared to meet the demand for this result, some other color should be selected. There will be many colors that can be trimmed with a great mixture of other colorings that will be handsome and fashionable as well, and the woman with a moderate purse need not fear to purchase them. One hat that sets one off to advantage is worth a dozen that do not.

In flowers all varieties and colors are seen, and the pansy in all its varied colorings—and many with which nature never painted them—are seen everywhere.

Ferns are rather a novelty, not that they have not been used before, but that they are now shown in variety and in both the artificial and the natural forms in quantities. They make an especially graceful trimming.

While ostrich plumes in all shades and sizes are to be extremely fashionable, whole birds of any sort are quite in the background, but quills both artistic and wonderful are shown and are the trimming best suited to hats for ordinary wear.

Tulle in quantities will be used on Summer hats, and as it is very light it renders the hat much easier on the head. It is not, however, durable, and it is well to match it and keep several yards on hand so that when it loses its freshness it may be renewed, either by the maid or by a milliner. The latter will do this sort of renewing very cheaply.

Much of the trimming is to be massed on the crown, and for certain hats this mode is ideal, but on others everything should from the artistic point of view be laid on the brim.

The right-side trimming of hats is increasing in vogue, although from the very first a few daring souls adopted it on certain hats, these hats usually being from Paris.

A French hat recently received by a New York woman is of medium size. The crown is Yeddo straw in pale mauve. It is trimmed high at the right side with a cluster of tiny, pale yellow roses with a feathery spray of fern at one side next the crown. The brim is of mauve-covered wire covered with fine plaitings of mauve malines, and the outermost wire of all is outlined with tiny, shaded Parma violets. There is a bandeau, high at the back, that tips the hat well to the fore. This bandeau is covered with three shades of mauve tulle chous. The hearts of the chous are of the deeper shades, and the outer ones of the palest. A large spray—not bunch—of violets is caught in these chous to the left of the centre back.

Another hat, imported also for another young matron, is a light yellow Tuscan straw having a dome-shaped crown set in a wreath of shaded yellow roses with tiny sprays of white lilacs showing irregularly here and there. This hat is lifted at the right side and is filled in there and at the back with yellow tulle and white lilacs.

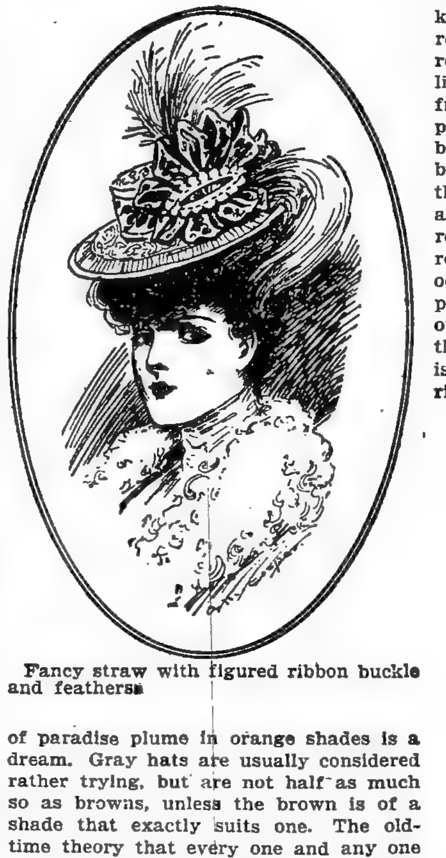
Still another model is a black crinoline with a rather broad brim and moderately high crown. The brim curves over very slightly all around. The corded wire underneath is covered with silver gauze. A scarf of point applique lace—white, of course—is draped over the brim, in some places coming to the edge of the brim, at others just dropping over it, and in others drawn back a bit to show the brim. At the back the ends are draped so that they do not fall much below the ordinary cachepeigne. Under the brim at the left and back are sprays of white moss roses. Around the crown is a wreath of fine ferns with loose clusters of small pink moss rosebuds shading from a deep rose to the palest possible shade, and rising at the left side, but not very high, is a single scrap of pure white moss rosebuds and several maidenhair ferns.

Point d'esprit in black, white, and colors is being used in millinery, and ribbons of all colors and many patterns are also seen. Messaline, liberty satin, Dresden, and the ribbons in broché patterns, as well as many others, are noted.

Maline or tulle box plaited is still much in evidence for trimmings, and the many ways in which it may be arranged and flowers inserted in or veiled under it make it desirable. Often the tulle ruchings are combined with loops of faille or other rich and rather heavy ribbons and with good effect. One such hat in white crinoline had a deep boxplaiting of tulle around the crown, in which lilies of the valley are caught with now and then a sprig of forget-me-nots fastened in it. Rich, stiff loops of faille ribbon in forget-me-not shades are fastened at one side with a mother-of-pearl buckle. The cachepeigne is also boxplaited tulle and forget-me-nots.

A smart, small hat in tulle and fancy straw has a low but dome-shaped crown of plaited tulle. The rolled brim matches, but around the edge of the brim is a rim an inch and a half wide of satin-finished straw in a honeycomb design. At the left side and also partially over the crown are masses of shaded, single violets drooping loosely; below these and covering a part of the broadside of the hat are crushed white cowslips. Further to the front and holding the up-turned brim is an odd bow formed of seven loops of wide messaline ribbon in four shades of mauve. This ribbon is wide, but before being bowed is twisted loosely until it is narrow but has body. In several loops the finest flexible wire is inserted. The ribbon is then arranged in several loops of irregular length against the brim. A soft knot is placed in the centre, and from this four short ends, notched at the ends, are placed. Each end varies from the others in length, and there is one of each shade. These slant toward the back and extend over the coiffure a bit. The hat's brim does not roll on the right or left side, but goes straight around close to the crown.

One of the most beautiful colors in hats is ash-gray. This trims most effectively with silver lace and gray tips or bird of paradise plumes. A gray hat trimmed with silver lace and a long, shaded bird of paradise plume in orange shades is a dream. Gray hats are usually considered rather trying, but are not half as much so as browns, unless the brown is of a shade that exactly suits one. The old-time theory that every one and any one could wear brown is exploded. If one does select brown one should be most careful not to take a shade that kills the particular shade of brown in one's hair, for brown hair is almost universal.



Fancy straw with figured ribbon buckle and feathers

A novelty in the Parisian hats shows the aigrette or spray of flowers jutting outward and upward from the hat at the rear, just above the cachepeigne. These have the same incline as the hat. They are more odd than artistic.

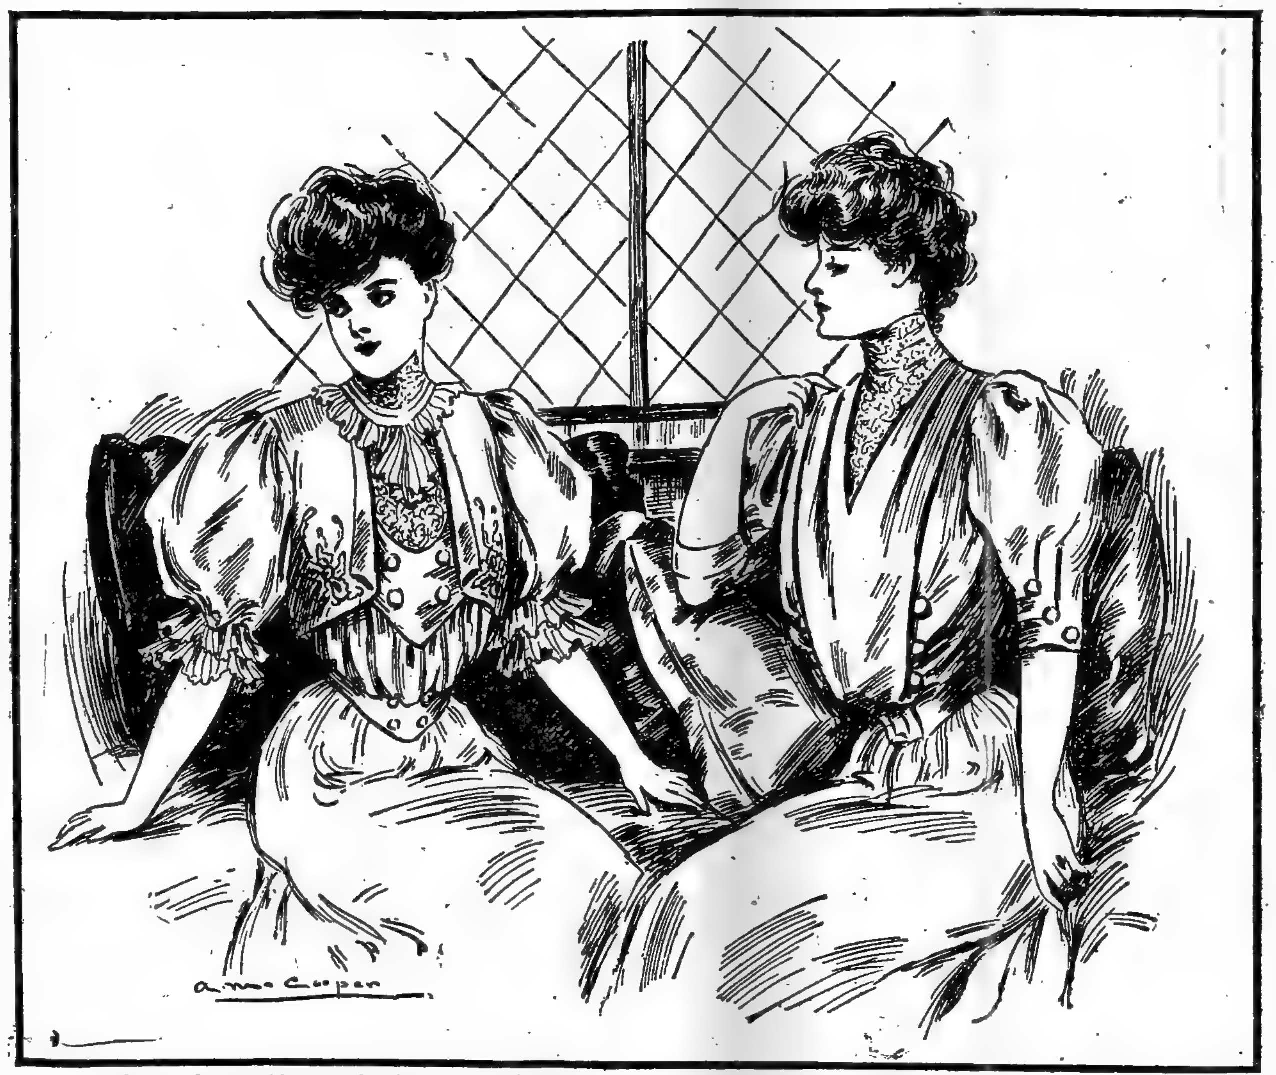
⁂

Miss Edith Pulitzer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Pulitzer and sister of Ralph Pulitzer, who married Miss Frederica Vanderbilt Webb, is one of the most effectively gowned débutantes of the season. She is very tall, very slight, and very dark and vivacious. Her gowns at the Horse Show were wonderfully effective. One of the more quiet gowns she is now wearing is a heliotrope-colored broadcloth in a very deep, almost purple, hue. It has one of the extremely short, plaited walking skirts, the coat also having plaits. The coat skirts end perhaps twenty inches below the waist line. The plaits go over the shoulders and down the front and back of the coat body and skirts, and there is much fine braiding between. The sleeves are long, quite full at the top, but tapering in coatsleeve fashion to the wrists. These are also plaited and braided. With this Miss Pulitzer wears an extremely large broad-brimmed hat in the same shade as the cloth of purple felt or velvet. It would be a Gainsborough were it turned up at either side, which it is not. This hat is raised by a bandeau covered with purple tulle and slants a trifle down to the right side, the left side being raised by the bandeau a little higher than the right side. Around this hat are the crispest fluffs of purple tulle in box plaitings, and caught here and there in the tulle, but forming a line straight around the base of the crown, are rosebuds in metallic finish, whether gold or silver the glimpse the writer had of them was not sufficient to decide. At the left there were evidently dark heliotrope ostrich tips. With her black hair and eyes and clear skin the effect was uncommonly good as to the colors, while the immense hat set off her height to the best possible advantage.

⁂

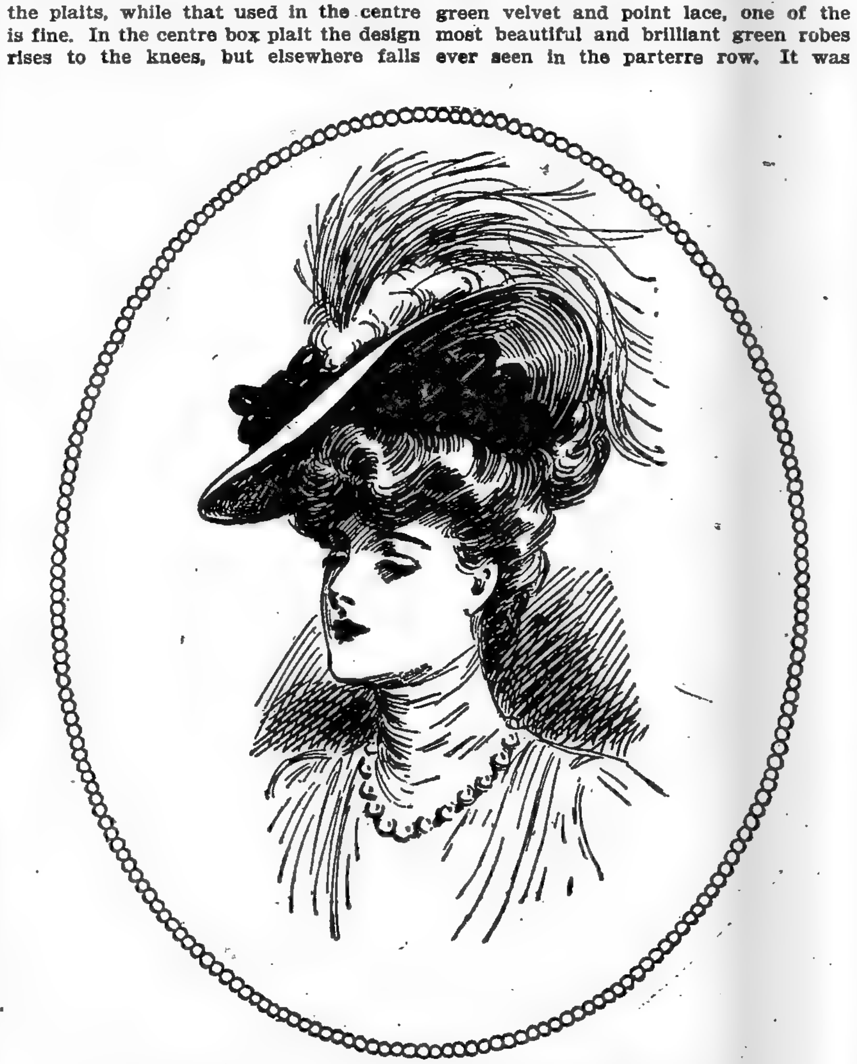
An effective and odd little walking gown in large gray shadow plaids on an especially tiny and dainty little brunette, was noted on Fifth Avenue. The skirt was laid in graduated box plaits widening from about three inches at the waist line to seven at the bottom; each plait was pressed flat and edged with silvery gray silk braid half an inch broad, or else bound with inch-wide braid.

The Eton coat repeated the graduated box plait idea, the plaits being narrow at the bottom and widening toward the neck and shoulder seams, and like the skirt, having their edges outlined with silver gray braid. The sleeves came half way between wrists and elbows, and were also finished with plaited effects and braid. The small toque was of gray velvet trimmed with cloth of silver folds and gray ostrich tips at the right side.



Blouse of embroidered pale blue satin and chiffon. White panne velvet blouse with silver buttons and Duchesse lace guimpe.

An odd princess robe in sapphire blue cloth is laid in box plaits from the top of the square cut corsage, showing an all around guimpe or Irish crochet to the knees, where the plaits are released. The robe is fitted by graduated box plaits, narrowing to an inch and a half at the waist line. The robe closes invisibly down the front under one of the plaits, the centre plaits in both the back and the front being wider than the others and outlined by blue silk cord a quarter of an inch thick set on the edges. These centre plaits also extend to the extreme edge of the robe instead of ending at the knees. The robe is trimmed around the bottom in an odd set design, a cross between javelin points and fleur de lis, the designs being outlined with cord the size of that edging the plaits, while that used in the centre is fine. In the centre box plait the design rises to the knees, but elsewhere falls eight inches short of that height. There is a waving ribbon design around the bottom of the robe at the top of the hem.



Mauve crinoline with mauve feather and heliotrope messaline chous.

The top of the robe is also edged with the cord, and a fine and narrow design matching that on the skirt outlines it. The sleeves are quite full puffs of the cloth, also showing a fine, almost all-over braiding in the fine cord, and four inches above the elbows a ribbon design in the cord on a cloth band shapes each sleeve into two puffs, one large, full puff at the top, and a much narrower and scantier one just above and over the elbow. Another cloth band, an inch wide, braided in fine cord, finishes the sleeves, and a narrow ruffle of lace is inserted in each.

The high stock of Irish crochet has some of its flowers outlined with the finest of blue silk cords, just a hint of color to match the robe.

⁂

Mrs. Lawrence Townsend, who has been in New York most of the Winter, and who abroad, as here, is considered a very handsome woman, has appeared often at the opera in beautiful gowns. One night she was in Mrs. Ogden Goelet's box, another she was with Mrs. Astor, and two or three evenings ago appeared in Mrs. James W. Gerard's box. Mrs. Townsend is a large blonde, with light brown hair and a full, beautifully modeled figure.

One evening she wore a dull pink velvet robe, the color of wild red raspberries. It was a princess robe, cut straight across the top, having sleeves that fell away from the shoulders and stood out from the arms at their tops as though stiffened. There probably was some sort of stiffening, either fine wire or fabric, that held the velvet away from the arms, for at their tops the sleeves were fully two inches distant from the arms. These sleeves were soft, moderately full puffs that ended above the elbows, and were close fitting at the bottom. A network of crystals and net covered the shoulder curves, clasping them tightly. The only decoration of this robe was three or four rather small, pink roses, matching the color of the velvet, crushed against the top of the bodice a little to the left.

The evening she was with Mrs. Gerard Mrs. Townsend wore a princess robe of black velvet, also cut straight across the top and having very short velvet sleeves. Across the top of the bodice was a flat flounce of point lace, perhaps five inches deep in the centre by three and a half at the sides, where it touched the sleeves. A wide dog collar of pink coral was worn, and also one long string that fell below the waist line; or, possibly, it was a very long chain wound eight or ten times around the neck before the end was released to hang over the bodice.

Mrs. Gerard was in a light emerald-green velvet and point lace, one of the most beautiful and brilliant green robes ever seen in the parterre row. It was most simply made.

⁂

Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr., in the parterre box of her sister, Mrs. Ogden Goelet, wore one night an odd gown of blue covered with a network of silver and steel on heavy net—at least that was the effect. The bodice was a loose cuirass effect in gleaming crystals, and was cut square, with narrow bands to match over the shoulders, from which fell transparent sleeves of wide-meshed silver net, fringed with silver and crystals and flecked here and there with them. These filmy sleeves came to the hands, but showed the arms so perfectly that in certain lights the sleeves could scarcely be discerned. Scarf-like ends of brilliant ciel-blue panne velvet or satin also extended over the shoulders and down the bodice for a little way each side of the bust line, each ending in a loose, tablike point. In her blonde coiffure were several sprays of ciel-blue gauze flowers laid on flatly from near the front to a point well back of the crown.

⁂

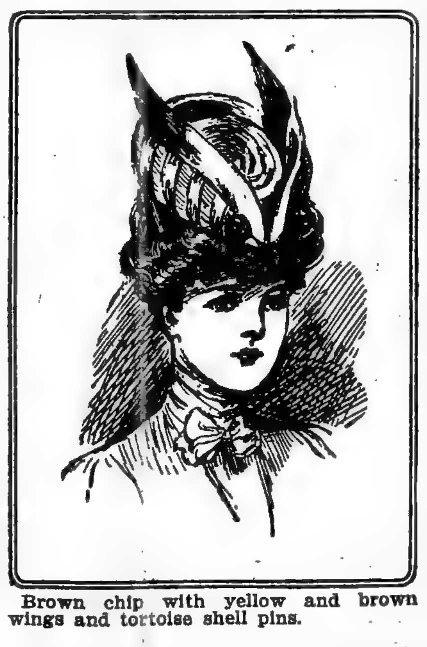
Mrs. James Speyer wore one of the handsomest gowns seen at the White House wedding of Miss Roosevelt. She also wore it at one of the latest fashionable weddings in New York.

The coat is one of the Louis affairs, of medium length and many seams, of extremely pale-blue velvet embroidered here and there in outline in gold thread and in Watteau colorings of purest blue mauve and pink in leaf and flower designs. The stock and jabot are white lace and the double-breasted waistcoat is white satin, having its double row of buttons of pale-blue velvet embroidered in the pastel or faded Watteau tints. A plaited belt of white satin crosses this waistcoat in the front and closes at the left side of the front under a large, hollow oval buckle set with brilliants, one end of white satin depending from it. Extending from under this girdle in the front are two white satin ends that shape down to a short point in the centre front.

The stock is high and formed of filmy net and ruffles of lace, and below this was the loose, full, ruffled jabot to match, over which extends the top of the satin waistcoat. This waistcoat, by the way, has four or five narrow folds or tucks extending all around the top and outlining the curve. Turned back from this waistcoat are the coat loose fronts that hang in straight lines over the waistcoat but are fitted in smoothly under the arms and curved in to the figure for several inches toward the front. A wide rever effect is given them by the exquisite embroidery in Watteau colors that outlines these fronts. This colored embroidery also extends around the neck at the back, the embroidery on the body of the coat and sleeves being in outline in gold, a broken outline, too.

The skirts of the coat are straight around the bottom and come perhaps sixteen inches below the waist line. The sleeves are coat shape to the elbows, where deep, turned back cuffs, wider than the sleeves and curved at the bottom, are attached. These are of velvet done in Watteau colors to match the coat fronts. This colored embroidery is heavy at the top of the cuffs and the outside of the coat revers, but fine and in tiny designs in the middle and inner or lower edges. Narrow lace ruffles fall from under these cuffs. These lace ruffles extend up the back of the cuffs, between their outer edges, to the body of the sleeves, narrowing in as they go, and showing the width of one only, while from the bottom the lower lace ruffles are attached to net tops, so the full beauty of the lace is shown. These ruffles come only a short distance below the elbows.

The trailing skirt of pale blue chiffon cloth over some soft clinging silk is shirred several times at the top, and three groups of curved pin tucks go around it. There are five or six tucks in each group a half an inch apart, and the groups are a couple of inches or so apart. At the bottom of these pin tucks three half-inch tucks extend around the chiffon, and to this section is joined an eighteen-inch, flat section of fine lace, like baby Irish, over an accordion plaited flounce of the blue. This lace is finished at the lower edge by an inch-wide band of sable fur.



Brown chip with yellow and brown wings and tortoise shell pins.

The hat topping this gown is of shirred black tulle, with black satin cords, and trimmed with two superb black ostrich plumes. The hat is rather large, with a rounding loaf crown, outlined by large cords, covered with black satin. There is one of these cords at the base and two around the brim and one at the extreme edge. Two long black ostrich plumes rise from the front, and following the rising curves of the hat rise high at the back, the ends only curling in under.

CHIROPODY, MANICURING, MASSAGE

506 FIFTH AVENUE, Between 42d and 43d Streets

Personal and Otherwise

MRS. WILLIAM K. VANDERBILT, Sr., whose picture may be found in the Pictorial Supplement, is the second wife of Mr. Vanderbilt, and he is her third husband. Mr. Vanderbilt's first wife, who was Miss Ava Smith, is now Mrs. Oliver Hazard Perry Belmont, and Mrs. Vanderbilt's first two husbands, Lewis Rutherfurd and Samuel Sands, are dead. She was Miss Ann Harriman, sister of Oliver Harriman and the late William Harriman, of Mrs. Stephen Olin, Mrs. Lillie Travers. Her first husband was Mr. Sands, the second Lewis M. Rutherfurd, and several years after the death of the latter she married, in London, William K. Vanderbilt, Sr. Since then they have passed most of their time abroad. By her first husband Mrs. Vanderbilt had two sons, Samuel Stevens Sands and G. Winthrop Sands, the latter of whom married a Miss Tayo Newton a few months ago. By her second husband she had two daughters, the Misses Margaret and Barbara Rutherfurd. Mrs. Vanderbilt is rather above middle height, with a full but not stout figure, and blonde hair that is now nearly all gray, and fair, well-preserved complexion. She is not handsome as is her sister, Mrs. Stephen H. Olin, who was the beauty of the Harriman family. She dresses very quietly and in excellent taste, and her manners match her frocks.

⁂

Mrs. William Eyre Gibson Gaillard was Miss Mary Stamps Bateson, and her marriage to Mr. Gaillard was celebrated on Washington's Birthday at the residence of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Bateson. She is a greatniece of the late Jefferson Davis, the Confederate leader, and Mrs. Davis, who is now 81, was one of the guests at the wedding. Mr. Gaillard is a son of the late Mr. Charles Bell Gibson Gaillard and great-grandson of Dr. William Gibson. The latter studied under Sir Charles Bell and was an associate of Sir Astley Cooper. At 70 he relinquished the practice of medicine and went to Rhode Island, where he made his home in Newport.

⁂

Miss Frances Livingston, another in the group of society women and girls in the pictorial section, is a daughter of William S. Livingston, named after Chief Justice Livingston. Miss Livingston claims descent from one of the Four Marys, ladies in waiting of Mary Queen of Scots, and also of an East Indian Princess, whom one of the Livingstons a century and a half ago wedded while trading in the East Indies. Miss Livingston's mother, who was Miss Mary Wigham, married H. Mason Raborg of Virginia as her second husband. She gave a dance for her daughter, who was one of the season's débutantes, at Delmonico's last month. Miss Livingston is fair, with light brown hair, blue eyes, and a talent and taste for music.

⁂

Miss Nathalie W. Vanderhoef is the youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harman B. Vanderhoef, and her brothers are F. Bailey Vanderhoef and Harman B. Vanderhoef, Jr. She made her début at the same time as her elder sister, Miss Louise Vanderhoef, at a tea, followed by a small informal dance, a year or two ago. The sisters are both blonde, and both are expert golf players and fond of outdoor life.

⁂

Mrs. Reginald Ronalds, whose face appears in the supplement, was Miss Thora Strong, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Hamot Strong of Erie, Penn., and a grand-daughter of the late William L. Scott, the railway magnate. She is a niece, on her mother's side, of Mrs. Richard H. Townsend of Washington, and her cousin, Miss Matilde Townsend, was one of her attendants at her wedding in February to Mr. Ronalds. Mr. Ronalds was one of the Roosevelt Rough Riders, and is a son of the late Peter Lorillard Ronalds, who died some months since, and of Mrs. Ronalds of London, who was Miss Mary Frances Carter of London and a noted hostess there. Mrs. Ronalds had a beautiful voice, finely cultivated, and formerly sang at many of the famous musicales at which she has been the hostess in London. Sir Arthur Sullivan, the composer, left her a large sum of money when he died. She is a favorite with the present King, with whom she danced years ago, when he visited this country incognito.

Mr. and Mrs. Ronalds sailed for Europe in less than a week after their marriage, which took place at Erie. The first days of their honeymoon were spent at Clarence Mackay's Carolina place. They are to make an automobile tour of Europe.

Mrs. George E. Daniels, another of the subjects whose picture appears in the pictorial section, was Miss Teresa Holmes, a daughter of the late John Holmes. As Miss Holmes she spent much of her time abroad, and after her return lived at the St. Regis. Her engagement to a German Baron was announced a year or two ago, and the date of the wedding set, but when the Baron came over to claim her, his fianceé broke the engagement on the very eve of the wedding, and the disconsolate foreigner left at once for Europe. It was nearly a year before her engagement to Mr. Daniels was announced. The latter is from Boston, but has been engaged in the practice of law for some time in this city. Mrs. Daniels is fair, with brown hair, blue eyes, a plump figure, and has a most attractive face and unassuming manners.

⁂

The immortal Sarah—and every one knows Bernhardt is meant—was born in the Rue St. Honore, Paris, in 1844, and was the eleventh of fourteen children. Four of the fourteen came in pairs of twins. Bernhardt's mother was a short, plump, fair, and blue-eyed Dutch Jewess, who spoke French with a shockingly bad accent.

At the age of twelve Sarah was baptized and became a Christian. About this time she entered the Augustin convent and became quite pious.

Whether or not time proved the correctness of her ideas, at this age Sarah was convinced that her mother cared little for her, and in consequence she had fits of sombreness. While still at the convent she heard that all the convents save the one she was in had given bonbons to the girls in honor of the baptism of the Prince Imperial. This aroused her wrath, she planned a rebellion on the part of the girls, by a clever ruse succeeded in getting the convent gates open, and with the other rebellious souls fled. It was not until the police had captured and returned all the pupils that Sarah went back.

Despite her impishness and vehement, passionate spirit she at one time very strongly desired to become a nun.

The Duc de Morny, a friend of her mother, suggested to the latter the advisability of the child going on the stage, but she demurred, holding that Sarah was not only too thin but also too homely. Just before this Sarah had seen enough of the world to gladly renounce the idea of becoming a nun; and had refused offers of marriage from a perfumer, a glover, and a chemist in whose shops she had purchased various articles.

When in 1864 she rehearsed in Paris a play, "Deslandes," she disliked her part so much that she declared she would never appear in it. The day following its first performance she ran away to Spain with her maid, leaving her mother locked in a room where she had imprisoned her. It was two months before she returned, although in the meantime the police had been set on her trail, but without success. In Spain her favorite objects of interest were the museums. It was not till she had spent all her money that she went back to Paris.

Bernhardt says that she never loved the stage, but that, as it was her profession, she determined to spare no effort to get to the top.

SUESINE SILK

Wears Better Than Silk.

What a flurry there is about the counters that hold Suesine Silk—it seems to catch the fancy of every woman of fashion.

Soft and pretty as China Silk, but more enduringly good for wear on account of the touch of cotton in it—and for less than half the price. Samples sent upon request. All colors. Please give the name of your dealer.

MARCH 1906

Society at Home and Abroad

LENT is in its second week. The sewing classes have been started with éclat and the musicales and lectures and some of the bridge clubs are in full force. Upper Fifth Avenue and its adjoining streets are beginning to show the number of departures for pastures new. Here and there the ugly wooden structures which board up houses whose owners are away have made their appearance. Fifth Avenue, however, is as gay as ever, and New York is now so large and there are so many sets that the absence of some fifty or more persons of prominence, even if the majority of these have boxes in the parterre of the Metropolitan, is not as patent as in the days when the late Ward McAllister was misquoted and the famous popular phrase, the "Four Hundred," was launched in the public press.

Many of the absentees have gone abroad, as is their wont each year at the same time. The months of March and April are most agreeable on the Riviera and on the Continent. Many do not remain for the London season, but come home in time for the country house parties and the racing, and then go to Newport or Bar Harbor. Mrs. Astor was booked to sail yesterday. Mr. and Mrs. Laurens Van Alen have gone with her. James J. Van Alen and Miss May Van Alen are in England, where Miss Van Alen is said to enjoy greatly country life. They are at their ancient abbey, which they have renovated and made over with modern comforts and luxuries. Mrs. Astor is to be with her daughter, Mrs. Ogilvie Haig, who is not in the best of health, at the Astor apartment in Paris, and then to go to some German spa. Mrs. Astor does not intend to return to America until the early Autumn, and it is doubtful if she will care to entertain at her Newport villa the coming season.

In the meantime Mrs. John Jacob Astor has joined the Aiken colony, where are also Mr. and Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, Miss Dorothy Whitney, and many of the Newport set. Mrs. John Jacob Astor and Mrs. Lawrance were in Philadelphia last week, visiting Edward Willing, who has been ill. He is much better. He will go to Newport with his daughter, Mrs. Lawrance, later. Mrs. John Jacob Astor will be in London for the season. Mrs. Thomas Hitchcock, Jr., has been in New York for some weeks, quite ill. To the Eustis family, of which Mrs. Hitchcock is a member, Aiken owes its discovery by the society element in the North. Aiken is delightful these early Spring days. What would be called a strenuous simple life is lived in this South Carolina village. Golf and tennis and riding to hounds and polo and the breaking-in of race horses and amateur steeplechases are among the many diversions. Life is in the open and every one is up and stirring with the sun.

Another set has gone to Jekyl's Island. Among those there at present are Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Pulitzer.

⁂

This is the last week at the Opera. There have been few empty boxes or stalls from the first night, and even on Ash Wednesday there was a large and fashionable audience. In fact, the character of the Wednesday night gatherings has changed. Formerly every one who could wanted to be at the Opera on Monday, with a second choice on Friday, and Saturday's popular performances for some years had been named "Poor relations and country cousins' nights." But all this has been changed. Saturday evening at the Opera this year has been in more than one sense popular.

Subscribers have retained their boxes and there have been many young people who have gone there for a lark. The bills have been better and there seems to be a more genuine appreciation of music. The season could have been carried with profit until Easter.

Owing to mourning, Mrs. Astor was absent from the Opera a great part of the season. This same misfortune, which fell on many other prominent families, threatened at one time to make the season dull. Notwithstanding at least forty houses always open for entertaining being closed this year on account of family bereavement, there never has been a gayer season. And now there is no let up, although dinners have taken the place of dances. One must eat in Lent as well as in carnival time, even if the ménu be changed and fish take the place of fleshly meats. Among those at the Opera last week were Mr. and Mrs. John R. Drexel, who are shortly going abroad for a long stay. Mrs. Lawrence Townsend and Miss Yvonne Townsend are constant attendants at the Metropolitan. Mrs. Townsend will naturally go to London for June and July. The Viscountess Maitland, who returned a fortnight ago from her Southern trip with Col. and Mrs. Robert M. Thompson, has been another familiar face in the various parterre boxes. Mrs. Frank Mackey, who comes to New York once in a long while, was in town last week and was at the Metropolitan. Mrs. Mackey is one of the best-known American women in England. She and Mr. Mackey have a lodge in the Quorn hunting district and are also prominent in London. She is one of the few women who drive four-in-hand. She frequently tools her coach through the croded mazes of omnibuses, hansoms, and carriages in busy Piccadilly.

⁂

Mrs. Ogden Mills and the Misses Mills are in town during the week and are regular attendants at the Opera on Monday and Friday evenings. Whether or not there will be a fashionable rival to the Metropolitan by next season is a question. The new Opera House on Thirty-fourth Street announces a long list of prominent subscribers, among whom are said to be Mr. and Mrs. I. Townsend Burden, who have not had a box at the Metropolitan. The experiment will be interesting.

⁂

Among the entertainments planned for Mi-Carême is the domino dance to be given by Mr. and Mrs. Charles Steinway. This will be also a masquerade and fancy dress affair. The invitations are in old English script and worded in clever verses from the pen of Richard Butler Glaenzer. The dance will be given at Steinway Hall, on Fourteenth Street. It is years since any social affair of prominence has been held in that quarter of the town, and memories of the glories of the old days of the Academy of Music are recalled by the invasion of society, after a decade of neglect, in the Union Square neighborhood. Mr. and Mrs. Steinway gave a most successful vaudeville entertainment and dance at the Waldorf-Astoria during the holidays.

⁂

The latest plans for the wedding of Miss Cynthia Roche and Arthur Burden are to have the ceremony take place in New York in early June instead of at Newport. Mrs. Burke Roche and Miss Roche sailed last week for Paris, with shopping as an object. They are to return in time for the races and the coaching parade. Mr. and Mrs. James A. Burden, who usually go abroad early in the Summer, will, after a sojourn at their country seat, near Troy, come back to town for the wedding. Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Burden may be at Newport for the late Summer. The wedding will be an event which will bring to town society en masse. No definite plans as to bridesmaids and ushers have been given out by Mrs. Roche. The Newport cottagers had hoped that the wedding would have taken place there, and are much disappointed.

⁂

Another wedding which was promised for New York after Easter, and which was of much interest to the California and Western element in society here, will now, it seems, take place in London at historic St. George's, Hanover Square. It is that of Miss Lurline Spreckels and Spencer Eddy, First Secretary of Legation in Russia.

Mr. Eddy is now in Chicago. It is understood that his best man will be Craig Wadsworth, one of the Secretaries of Embassy in London. Mr. Wadsworth has been in America recently as a witness to the probating of the will of the late Marshall Field of Chicago. The present Mrs. Marshall Field is an aunt of Mr. Eddy. There have been some changes, by the way, in the personnel of the embassy at the Court of St. James's. Mr. and Mrs. Einstein are to go to Constantinople. Mrs. Einstein is an Englishwoman well known in London society. Mr. Einstein is from New York.

⁂

The special performance of "Haensel und Gretel" at the Metropolitan Opera on Thursday evening will be a gala occasion. It is for the benefit of the Legal Aid Society. Mrs. Roosevelt has promised to be present. It is still hoped that the President may accompany Mrs. Roosevelt on her New York visit and be at the Opera House, and also that Mr. and Mrs. Nicholas Longworth will decide to run over to New York for this evening. Among the patronesses are nearly all of the leading hostesses. The sight will be a brilliant one and a fitting climax to the closing of the season at the Metropolitan. Among the parterre box owners who will be present are Mrs. Robert Goelet, Mrs. Ogden Goelet, Mrs. Henry Clews, Mrs. E. Reeve Merritt, Mrs. Edward J. Berwind, Mrs. James A. Burden, Mrs. Ogden Mills, Mrs. Luther Kountze, Mrs. Frank S. Witherbee, and others. Mrs. Douglas Robinson, sister of the President, is deeply interested in the entertainment. Miss Corinne Robinson, who has been ill, is now on the rapid road to recovery.

⁂

Charity is in the ascendant this week. To-morrow afternoon, in the grand ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria, will be given the musicale under the auspices of the Seaman's Benefit Society. Mme. Rappold, M. Tipaldi, and M. Gilbert are among the artists. Already the advance sale of boxes and seats has been most gratifying, but there are still a few left. The ladies who undertake this worthy and important charity will give the results of this entertainment to the running expenses of the mission boat Sentinel and for general work among seamen. Among the members of the society are the Misses de Peyster, the Misses Leverich, Miss Edith Van Cortlandt Jay, Mrs. John Osgood Blanchard, Miss Ethel Kingsland, Mrs. Edmund L. Baylies, Mrs. J. Langdon Erving, Mrs. Newbold Morris, Mrs. Herbert L. Satterlee, Mrs. Charles D. Stickney, and Mrs. Grenville B. Winthrop. Boxes have been taken by Mrs. Charles B. Alexander, Mrs. John R. Drexel, Mrs. Morgan Dix, Mrs. Ogden Mills, Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, Mrs. Orme Wilson, Mrs. Alexander Van Rensselaer, Mrs. Frederick W. Vanderbilt, Mrs. Prescott Lawrence, Mrs. J. Pierpont Morgan, Mrs. John B. Trevor, Mrs. James A. Burden, and others.

⁂

There will be the usual meetings of the sewing classes this week, including that of Mrs. Frederic J. de Peyster, the Helpers' Lenten Sewing Class, the Nursery and Child's Hospital Sewing Class, and Miss Leary's Bellevue Class. The latter will meet on Thursdays in Lent at Miss Leary's new home, 1,032 Fifth Avenue. At several of the classes music is given by clever amateurs, tea is served after 5, and a number of men are asked in for that function. In addition to the meeting of the Bellevue sewing classes on Thursdays, Miss Leary has Tuesdays. On these afternoons there is always delightful music. Miss Leary's Tuesdays are an institution. It is true that one misses the romantic environment of Washington Square now that the hostess has moved her lares and penates to upper Fifth Avenue, but her new home is larger, is exquisitely furnished, and is at the court end of town.

⁂

St. Patrick's Day—Saturday—was of yore a day dreaded by many of the New York householders. When the first strains of "St. Patrick's Day in the Morning" were heard on Fifth Avenue, executed by the various brass bands heading the different divisions of the processions, the members of the household below stairs deserted in a body to view the parade. But to-day Swedes and other nationalities have succeeded the natives of the Emerald Isle in those departments, and, with a growing love for everything which is British, society takes an interest in the 17th of March. Miss Leary has chosen the evening of this day for the benefit musicale to be given in aid of her Italian Settlement in conjunction with aid to the Italian Immigrant Society. Mme. Lillian Nordica and Charles Gilibert, with Victor Herbert and his orchestra will be the musical attractions. Many boxes have been sold. Among those who are to be present are Mrs. Charles T. Barney, Mrs. Prescott Hall Butler, Mrs. Joseph H. Choate, Mrs. J. Pierpont Morgan, Mrs. John H. Davis, Miss Clementina Furniss, Mrs. John Henry Hammond, Mrs. Amos R. Pinchot, Mrs. William Jay Schieffelin, Mrs. Loriliard Spencer, Mrs. James Gayley, Mrs. Lowell Lincoln, Jr., Miss Stone, Miss Chanler, Miss Virginia Potter, Mrs. Stanford White, and Mrs. Cadwalader Jones.

⁂

Mr. and Mrs. Charles M. Oelrichs have sailed for Bermuda, where they are to remain until Easter. Mr. and Mrs. Peter Martin will not come East until after June, when they will go to Newport, as in previous seasons. There is some doubt as to whether the Walshes will return to Newport this Summer. Miss Walsh is much better and Mrs. Walsh is rather anxious, it is [illegible], to go back, as she has many friends at the City by the Sea. The Walshes will still be in mourning and will not entertain if they do decide to be at Newport in July. Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs is expected daily in New York. She went to California for a short stay. Mr. Oelrichs will remain on the Pacific Coast for the present.

⁂

Mr. and Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., and Mr. and Mrs. Reginald Vanderbilt are soon to come back from abroad. Mrs. Alfred Vanderbilt was in town last week, but generally she returns to Newport for the week-end. Mrs. Reginald Vanderbilt's health is said to be much improved. It has been rumored that, after this year, Mr. and Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, Sr., will live in this country and give up their residence in France, except as a temporary place of sojourn. Mr. Vanderbilt will establish his racing stable here. When the William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., residence is completed, these twin houses will be a feature in the "landscape" of Fifth Avenue. Mrs. Lillie Harriman Travers, sister of Mrs. Vanderbilt, did not go abroad. She has been at the Opera several times recently and will this Spring occupy her country place on Long Island.

⁂

On Saturday there will be a small wedding at Flushing. Miss Helen Bogart Lane, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Henry Lane, will be married to Charles Davis Drew, at the home of the bride. Miss Lane is the second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William H. Lane. Mrs. Lane was Miss Caroline Allen. The Lanes and the Bogarts are related. The latter family especially are historical in the story of the foundation of Flushing.

⁂

The one wedding of Mi-Careme will be that of Miss Evelyn B. Schley, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Grant Barney Schley, to Max Howell Behr. The ceremony will be performed at noon by the Rev. Dr. William R. Huntington, rector of Grace Church. It will be followed by an informal reception and wedding breakfast.

⁂

Several engagements were announced during the week, among which was that of Miss Justine de Peyster, eldest daughter of the late Col. Johnston Livingston de Peyster of this city and Tivoli, N. Y., and a granddaughter of Gen. J. Watts de Peyster, to Howard Townsend Martin. Miss de Peyster has for several years lived with her mother in Washington. She has two married sisters, Mrs. Edward Sturges Hosmer and Mrs. Garrett B. Kip. She is a greatniece of Johnston Livingston. Mr. Martin is the brother of Bradley Martin and of Frederick Townsend Martin. He is a widower. His first wife was Miss Camilla Thompson of St. Louis, who died abroad four years ago. Mr. Martin is a member of the Union Club. The wedding will take place at Tivoli in June.

⁂

Miss Rosalie Tone, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. Wolfe Tone, and Roe Tyson, son of Robert F. Tyson, are to be married in the Autumn. Their engagement was announced in THE TIMES on Wednesday. Miss Tone made her début a little over a year ago. Her mother was Miss Colhoun, and the family's country place is at Morristown.

⁂

Arrangements for the different Spring weddings are now being made. On Wednesday, April 18, Miss Catherine Cossit Dodge, daughter of Mrs. George Eggleston Dodge of New York and Tuxedo, will be married to John Shillito Rogers, son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Pendleton Rogers. The ceremony will take place at the Brick Presbyterian Church, so long the place of worship of various members of the Dodge, Stokes, and Cossit families. Miss Dodge is a granddaughter of the late William Earl Dodge. She asked to be her bridesmaids the Misses Emily Rogers, Susan McCook, Eunice Terry, Sybil Kane, Evelyn Sloane, and Miss Hopkins of Washington. Mr. Rogers's best man will be his brother, H. Pendleton Rogers, Jr., and the ushers are to be R. Bayard Cutting, Frederic Kernochan, Henry R. Taylor, Frederic Juilliard, Bradish Johnson, and Beverly Robinson. Mr. Rogers is a member of the Knickerbocker Club, and was graduated from Yale in 1898.

⁂

The wedding of Miss Ely, daughter of the late Richard S. Ely, and Lieut. Commander John H. Gibbons, Naval Attaché to the Court of St. James's, will take place in April. Miss Ely is a sister of Richard F. Ely. Her mother was a Miss Ingersoll. Commander and Mrs. Gibbons will immediately sail for England.

⁂

Miss Mignon Critten, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. De Frees Critten, will be married to Representative Swager Sherley of Kentucky at the home of her parents, Grymes Hill, Staten Island, on April 21. Miss Critten and Mr. Sherley were with the Taft Philippine party. Their engagement was announced shortly after that of Miss Roosevelt and Mr. Longworth.

⁂

In Richmond, Va., on March 22, Miss Eleanor Bosher, daughter of the late Robert S. Bosher, will be married to George S. Brewster of this city. Mr. and Mrs. Brewster will go abroad for their honeymoon. Mr. Brewster is a son of Mrs. Benjamin Brewster of this city.

⁂

Miss Nannie Wright Brown, elder daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Waldron P. Brown, and Harold Richmond Talbot, son of Dr. Robert Blancker Talbot and Mrs. Talbot, are to be married on Thursday, April 26, at 4 P. M., in the Church of the Incarnation by the Rev. Dr. Grosvenor. The church reception is to be followed by a small reception at the Brown residence, 32 East Thirty-fifth Street. Miss Nellie Granville Brown will be her sister's maid of honor, and the Misses Grace Ruggles, Harriet Porter, Alice Kobbé, Alice Du Vivier, all of New York; Miss Gladys Gittings of Baltimore, and Miss May Jones of Virginia are to be the bridesmaids. Mr. Talbot's best man will be the famous football player, J. L. De Saulles, a Yale classmate of Mr. Talbot, and the ushers will also be Yale men, and will include Jeptha Wade of Cleveland, Arthur Hyde of Boston, Dr. Donald Guthrie of Philadelphia, and Henry R. Bennett of this city.

⁂

April 23 has been chosen as the date of the marriage of Miss Florence J. Southerland, daughter of A. F. Southerland, and Eugene Gray Foster. It will take place at the Madison Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church. The wedding reception will be held at the home of the bride's father, 145 West Fifty-eighth Street.

⁂

Mr. and Mrs. Elisha Dyer, Jr., and Miss Swan have gone abroad for the Spring. Mr. Dyer will return after a few weeks, but his wife and step-daughter will remain on the other side until late in the Summer. They will go to Newport, as usual. On the same ship with Mr. and Mrs. Dyer was Mrs. Samuel Newhouse, who has been visiting her relatives in the West. Mrs. Newhouse will, after a brief trip to the Continent, be in London for the season. Potter Palmer, Jr., was another passenger on the Kaiser Wilhelm, and Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Moore were also on the ship. There is no authority for the announcement of the engagement of Mrs. Potter Palmer and the Duke of Atholl. The Duke of Atholl is a widower. He married in 1863 the daughter of Sir Thomas Moncrieffe, who died in 1902. His heir is the Marquis of Tullibardine. The Duke of Atholl is a descendant of Lord Murray of Tullibardine. He is 66 years old, a landholder of about 202,000 acres in Scotland, and is the owner of Blair Castle and also of Dunkeld House.

⁂

Mr. and Mrs. Giraud Foster are now in Spain, making a tour in a motor. Mrs. Alexander Van Nest will sail this month for Europe, where she will join her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. J. Stewart Barney, in Paris. Mrs. Van Nest will not be at Bar Harbor this Summer. Mrs. Charles Carroll Jackson and Mrs. Richard Gambrill are still at Palm Beach.

⁂

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Gallatin have gone abroad for a three months' stay on the Riviera and the Continent. Mrs. Benjamin Knower and Miss Margaret Knower are to sail for Europe on the 24th. Mrs. Bruce Ismay, who has been entertained with dinners and bridge parties and receptions during her visit here, returns to England at the end of the week. Mrs. William Rhinelander will give a luncheon for her to-morrow at 18 West Forty-eighth Street. Mr. and Mrs. Gustav Amsinck will sail for Europe on May 22. They are to be gone the entire Summer.

⁂

According to latest reports, Mrs. W. Storrs Wells is improving in health. She has been ill in her apartments at the St. Regis. Mr. and Mrs. W. Storrs Wells are having extensive additions and repairs made to their house in West Fifty-seventh Street.

⁂

Mr. and Mrs. William Watts Sherman and the Misses Sherman are not going abroad. They will remain in New York, with occasional visits to Providence, until April, when they will open their home at Newport. Mrs. Oliver Harriman is in town, after a short sojourn at Palm Beach.

⁂

Dr. and Mrs. W. Seward Webb, who have been at Palm Beach for a fortnight, are to sail for Europe on the Celtic on April 20. They are to tour the Continent in a motor. Mr. and Mrs. George Vanderbilt have been giving a series of small house parties at Biltmore. Mr. and Mrs. William Corcoran Eustis have been among their visitors there.

⁂

Mrs. Josef Hofmann is due in New York any day. She is coming here to sue her late husband and first cousin, George Eustis, for the possession of her boy.

⁂

Mr. and Mrs. Payne Whitney have gone to Thomasville, Ga., where they are the guests of Col. Oliver Payne. Col. Payne will return to New York at Eastertide and go abroad, taking a party with him, as has been his custom for years. Mr. and Mrs. Payne Whitney will pass the early Summer at their home on Long Island, afterward going to their Newport cottage.

⁂

The preparations of the much-talked-of Assembly Ball at the Astor House creep on apace. Those who are to be present are ransacking the second-hand book shops for old Godeys and Grahams fashion plates with costumes of the period. Weymer Jay Mills and the patronesses are arranging the music and the decorations. A veritable old Astor piano is to be used, and the programme will have Lanner and Labitzki and Julien and the polkas and redowas and varsoviennes, as well as the quadrilles, of the period. Many of the women will carry bouquets edged around with lace paper. The decorations are to be garlands of roses and calla lilies. Although the men are to appear in ordinary evening dress, many of them will wear the long waistcoats and frilled shirts of the day, which, by the way, are now coming again into fashion.

⁂

A most interesting programme has been prepared for the entertainment to be given Tuesday evening at the Berkeley Lyceum for the benefit of the Chrystie Street House, a temporary home for young men and boys who are in trouble, whether vagrants discharged from hospitals or from penal institutions. Other work of the club is the boys and girls' clubs that meet afternoons and evenings with an average weekly attendance of 500, and the permanent clubroom for young men open all the time. The house is supported entirely by voluntary contributions.

The programme consists of a comedietta in one act, "Six to One, or the Scapegoat," for which Warren Oland is coaching the players, under the direction of Mrs. William M. Benjamin. Those taking part are Mrs. Benjamin, the Misses Margaret Gardiner, Evelyn King, G. Mabry Parks, Jessica Thompson, Henrietta King, and Henry Bartol. Austin Dobson's "Proverbs in Porcelain" will be under the direction of Miss Elizabeth B. Oakley. The Misses Virginia Duane and Alice Fellowes are to do the "Secrets of the Heart," while Miss Helena Clarkson and Robert S. Talmadge will do the "Ballade a la Mode." "The Part That Fits" will be taken by Miss Dorothy Arnold, Miss Elizabeth Van Dusen, and Hinckley Arnold. In "Good Night, Babette," Mrs. Thornton Chard will be Babette. Mrs. Francis Pruyn is to do a Breton chanson and dance, and in the Village Kermess, under the direction of Miss Angelica Schuyler Church, Robert Potter Parrott, Rosalie Jones, Mr. Hewlett, Alice Riggs Hunt, and others will appear. Another feature of the programme will be the rendition by Mrs. Wilson Shannon Dunn of musical recitations in Canadian patois. Tickets may be obtained from Mrs. John Clarkson Jay, 106 East Seventy-ninth Street, and Miss Laura Jay Edwards, 11 West Forty-seventh Street.

⁂

The managers of the New York Home and School of Industry, 120 West Sixteenth Street, have sent out invitations to a tea and exhibition of antique and modern needlework on Thursday afternoon, March 15. Interesting specimens have been loaned by well-known collectors. This charity, one of the oldest in the city, incorporated in 1851, is worthy of the support of those who believe in helping the poor to help themselves. Mrs. Whitelaw Reid for many years was the President, but felt obliged to resign on going to England to reside. Mrs. Benjamin Knower has been elected to fill the office. Underwear of plain but substantial material neatly sewed, pantry towels, aprons, sheets, pillow cases, &c., are made and sold on the premises at a great reduction from the usual cost. In the "Ordered Work Department," orders for fine sewing of all kinds, embroidery, marking, &c., for trousseaus and layettes are taken and are carefully executed by competent workers, often of a superior class, who are thus enabled to help out slender resources. Subscriptions and donations for the enlargement of the work are earnestly solicited.

THE SOCIAL WHIRL.

SOME of those who took part in the little musical comedy given by the members of the Athletic Association of Hamilton Institute for Girls were the Misses Kathleen Jenkins, Florence Helmstetter, Edith Devellin, Constance Peck, Claire Steinhilber, Ruth Ballard, Marion Hees, Lorna Napier, Ruth Lake, Helen Lockley, Harriet Tetmore, Anjie Holman, Florence Babbitt, Diane Tate, Mary Cape, and Renée Bonnat. The playlet was called "The Dress Rehearsal," and was given in Carnegie Chamber Music Hall.

Mrs. Henry M. Bristol of Emerson Hill, S. I., entertained on Tuesday with a luncheon and euchre party. The guest of honor was Mrs. Gardner Ladd Plumley. Some of the others were Mesdames Hawkins, Bronson, Sheldrick, Dumbell, Driscoll, and Copeman, and the Misses Ethel Hall, Ethel Bristol, and B. Anderson.

Mrs. John H. Judge, 27 West Ninety-fourth Street, on Wednesday gave another of her series of informal teas.

Mrs. Edmond Connelly, 57 West Seventy-fifth Street, gave a luncheon at Sherry's on Tuesday. Her guests were Mesdames James Henry Parker, Harry Wallerstein, Alfred Cochran, John Sergeant Wise, John J. Crawford, H. M. Somerville, Pauline Du Bose, Alexis Faulkner Bisson, Walter Turnbull, Le Roy Bruen, T. [illegible]lington Semple, R. Lindsey Coleman, C. B. Goldsborough, Myles Collier, and W. W. Mountjoy, and Miss Caroline C. Connelly.

On Friday there was a talk on current topics by Miss Janet E. Richards of Washington, D. C., in the Hotel Nevada. She had as an audience the members of the Greater New York City Chapter of the National Society, United States Daughters of 1812, of which Mrs. George A. Ludin is Regent and Mrs. W. R. Hooper, Secretary.

There will be a reception on Saturday in the home of Mrs. Robert Vermilye, when the Mount Holyoke Alumnae Association of New York will meet to welcome Miss Mary E. Wooley, President of the college.

A meeting and tea for the members of Stony Wold Auxiliary No. 4 will be held to-morrow in the residence of Mrs. W. J. Blodgett, 140 West Seventy-second Street. The Chairman is Mrs. George Ward Van Vredenburgh, the Vice Chairman Mrs. John Tennant Van Sickle, Secretary Mrs. William Chambers, and Treasurer Mrs. Frederick L. Bradley.

A pleasant feature of a reception given by Mrs. Charles Griffin, 476 West 152d Street, on Thursday, was a short talk on Raphael by Mrs. Nettie C. Beal.

E. G. Alger and his daughter, Miss Muriel Alger, 170 West Seventy-fifth Street, sailed for Europe last week, and will spend several months on the Continent, returning in the Fall.

Mrs. M. Nash Larendon, 311 Riverside Drive, will receive informally on Monday, March 19, and on Mondays, April 2 and 16.

Mrs. Thomas Carmichael will open her home, 30 West Fifty-third Street, for a bridge party, to be held on Mi-Carême, March 22, to raise funds for the large flower euchre to be given on April 19 for the Little Mothers' Aid Association. It is expected that a thousand West Side women will be present that afternoon at the Hotel Astor. The women on the committee, Mesdames Bartow Weeks, John Judge, Floyd Crane, Eugene Munsell, Philip Crovat, and the Chairman, Mrs. Benjamin Lillard, have later bought up many of the tickets of their friends to the party.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Lambert, 137 West Seventy-fifth Street, sailed yesterday for the other side. They will remain abroad some months, traveling on the Continent.

The annual reception of the Women's Philharmonic Society was held on Wednesday evening in the Chapter Room of Carnegie Hall. It was preceded by a musicale. The opening address was made by Mme. Cappiani, First Vice President of the society, and Chairman of the Entertainment Committee, and was followed by a short talk on "Music in the making of Americans," by Signor Carlo Cattapani. Miss Amy Fay, President of the society, was assisted in receiving by Miss M. Reid and Miss Sarah Eliot Newman. The artists who took part in the programme were Mrs. Antonio Sawyer, contralto; Miss Jessie Shay, pianist; Miss Irene O'Donoghue, soprano; Miss Lucile Billingsley, violinist; Paul Petry, baritone, and Albert Quesnel, tenor.

Mrs. Arthur Vinton Lyle, 265 West Ninety-third Street, gave a reception on Wednesday afternoon. She will give one more this season. The date set is Wednesday, April 4.

A number of west side society women are interested in the benefit for the Vassar Students' Aid Society, New York City Branch, which will be given on Monday afternoon, April 2, at the Hudson Theatre. The society was organized in 1890 for the purpose of raising funds to aid young women who might desire a higher education at Vassar College. The committee includes Mesdames Louis H. Allen, Louis Guttner, Charles E. Potter, O. D. M. Baker, Frederick Swift, Herman Meyer, K. Imanishi, and Seth B. Robinson, and the Misses Caroline M. Gerrish, Stella Miles, Delle Fay Norris, Elsie Borg, Jennie Pomerene, Jane P. Sousa, Adelaide Wallach, Elsie Sidenberg, and Estelle Smith, Chairman.

Mrs. Belle Gray Taylor left town last week for a visit to London.

On Thursday afternoon Mrs. Frank Lewis Sheldon will entertain a number of friends with bridge at her home.

The second annual evening entertainment of the West End Woman's Republican Association will be given on Wednesday in the Hotel Marseille. It will be a card party and musicale, followed by a dance and supper. An odd feature in the way of crystal gazing will be introduced for those who are interested in it. Mrs. Stanley L. Otis and Mrs. George A. [illegible] are chairmen of the committee. Others interested are Mrs. Helena Secor Tonjes, President; Mrs. J. Ella Rood, Treasurer; Mrs. Philip R. Dillon, Mrs. Jane Pierce, Mrs. John L. Niver, Mrs. J. Francis Barry, Mrs. Francis Richards, Mrs. Louis Manley, Mrs. William Grant Brown, and Mrs. Frank Churchill.

On Tuesday, March 27, Mrs. Richard Henry Green will give the second of a series of informal teas in her residence, 235 Central Park West.

The last meeting of the West Side Bridge Club, of which Mrs. William S. Prankard is President, was held in the home of Mrs. Barton Baldwin, 443 West End Avenue, on Tuesday afternoon. There are twelve members in the club, Mesdames Arthur Ball, Henry Ball, W Boesé, Cox, Russell, Cowles, F. R. Kimbly, Bedell Parker, C. M. Vail, William Wilson, and W. A. Whitcomb.

Miss Myrtle Lottimer gave a luncheon yesterday of ten covers.

On Friday afternoon Mrs. Henry Brunswick will give a bridge party at her home for about thirty guests.

Mrs. Charles O. Maas of the Rochelle and her mother are spending two or three weeks in Atlantic City, N. J.

Miss Anna H. Minck, 579 West End Avenue, will postpone the masquerade dance she intended to give on the 30th of this month until April 27. It will be given in the Hotel St. Andrew. The patronesses will be Mrs. F. J. Minck, Mrs. A. C. Burnham, and Mrs. H. Hedden. Some of those invited are the Misses Morse, Baer, Gilman, Black, Burnham, Faulkner, Robinson, and Burwinno, and Messrs. Dana, Strange, Griffin, Freimm, Nash, Robinson, Lawrence, Cozel, and Develin.

On Tuesday afternoon the Tuesday Euchre Club was entertained by Mrs. H. Doring, 124 West Forty-seventh Street. Among the twenty-four members are Mesdames Depierris, McGuire, Doying, and Mead, and the Misses Barrett, Contencin, Morrill, Amanda, Irene, and Louise Schweers, Kearney, Schramm, Smith, Radford, Depierris, Secord, and Weke.

Miss Marjorie Kertscher gave a luncheon the other day to seven of her friends. The souvenirs were American Beauties. The guests were the Misses Eloise Evans, Ethel Hardcastle, Esther Morrill, Frances Morrill, Ethel Royce, Claire Lochman, and Myrtle Lottimer.

Bedell Parker, President of the Georgia Society in New York, will return to-morrow from a two weeks' visit to Jacksonville, Palm Beach, and Miami.

Mrs. W. Heber Wheeler, 310 West Ninety-fifth Street, who receives on Thursdays of this month, has sent out cards for a bridge party to be given on Saturday afternoon in her home.

On Friday Mrs. Henry De Puy, 256 West End Avenue, gave the second of a series of five at-homes. The other three will take place on the remaining Fridays of the month.

Mrs. Donald McLean, President General of the National Society Daughters of the American Revolution, left her home, 186 Lenox Avenue, on Tuesday, for Washington, where she is preparing for the Continental Congress, to be held on April 16.

The subject for discussion at the meeting on Tuesday afternoon of the West End Woman's Republican Association was "The Value of a Vote." The speakers were Mrs. Fred Nathan, Mrs. M. A. Ravenhill, Mrs. Alice Henry, Miss Dorothy Richardson, and the Rev. Madison Peters. Mrs. B. M. Sherman, Chairman of the day, presented the speakers.

The thirty-eighth annual breakfast of Sorosis will take place to-morrow in the Waldorf. Mrs. Helen Grandin Lord is in charge of the committee.

On the Right Track.

Aunt Susan (on a visit to Boston)—What are you reading, Willie, Plato?

Willie Beacon-Hill—No, Aunt Susan, I read Plato yesterday. To-day I am reading Confucius.

Aunt Susan—And what are you going to read to-morrow?

Willie Beacon-Hill—If I do not change the schedule which I now have in mind, I shall read the Data of Ethics in the morning and Esoteric Buddhism in the afternoon.

Easy Way Out.

Nellie—Are you married?

Sallie—Yes, to a conductor, but I think he doesn't love me.

Nellie—Well, get a transfer.

THE WORLD OF ART AND ARTISTS

Art Consolidation

Movements Tending Toward a Better Presentation of Art Works in Greater New York.

THE Society of American Artists having agreed to the proposals made by the Academy, an important step has been taken in the consolidation of the various bodies of artists who have been working separately at no small waste of energy and expense. The growth of the city and the struggle of a greatly enlarged corps of artists for recognition have compelled this action, and are likely to entail others hereafter. It is a normal and necessary move. Those artists who utter openly or anonymously piercing cries of alarm should come out of their studios and, like Cap'n Cuttle, get their bearings.

Some of the objectors belong to the glorifiers of conditions as they were, when the old Tenth Street building was the centre of the painter guild and that guild was practically all there was of art. It was a period in which the studio reception flourished, people of importance socially having time to visit ateliers and examine the work of artist friends and acquaintances. It could no more last than visits on New Year's Day could continue, though everybody recognized the pleasant side of that venerable practice. We drop a tear. But we are not so dense as to believe that in these altered conditions the charming old custom is practicable. All we can do is occasionally to revive one or another of certain outworn functions, as those few chosen spirits intend, who are about to hold a ball at the Astor House "way down town" in the crinolines and mighty chokers of the age before the Mexican War.

New York is too big and too flustered to revive studio receptions; the season of a few months is too concentrated; New York is too occupied with music and the drama, too hunted by dinners and social gatherings, even to pay much heed to the ever-increasing small exhibitions. The great crowd will attend only to a selection of the very best that the current art of the year has to offer. Minor exhibitions henceforth can hope to attract only those who specialize on painting and sculpture.

Dreamers whose hearts are better than their logic try to persuade us that a single large exhibition once a year is undignified and commercial. They shut their eyes to the fact that all exhibitions are directly or indirectly commercial in purpose, so far as they offer objects of the arts for sale or bring the work of artists into a prominence which means commissions. Free to them not to exhibit. Many artists shun exhibitions and still manage to find bread. But surely it is an amusing form of self-deception when artists gird at the commercial in art, yet do everything possible to make themselves known in order to sell their own wares! Is it not possible that this illogical attitude, this denouncing of sordid motives the while they are necessarily breadwinners, has something to do with a certain coolness of many collectors of pictures toward native art? It partakes of the commonest form of self-deception in religious matters, which makes us the laughing stock of pagans. One day for Christ, six days for the devil!

It is the easiest thing in the world to indict a profession or a club or a social community, and perhaps here and there the evil so stridently decried will be made odious to some one who might succumb to it. But the charge that modern art is more commercial than art at earlier periods, especially the direct claim that American art to-day is vulgarer and more commerciay than it was fifty years ago, is not supported by facts. One may fairly say that in view of the great rise in wealth and the increase in the number of big fortunes, in view of the concentration of population here, there has not been a proportional increase of people who are devoted to the fine arts and encourage them. It is not true, however, that American art has degenerated or that we have not many more artists of a high order now than we had three decades ago. Only those who will not give their time to examine the situation, and those whose stock in trade it is to pour forth pessimism as a relief to their individual bitterness and chagrin can be guilty of such misconception of the facts.

Undoubtedly juries of acceptance are bungling bodies, a prey to professional prejudices and unconscious favoritism, but the means must be found to correct their errors. If the artists consolidate their forces and appeal to the public for means to supply New York with a great annual representative show it will be impossible for these evils to flourish as they have. They need only discard still further the narrow methods which choked the progress of the small societies and seek an approach to the art-loving public by every avenue which shows them fair and aboveboard, concerned chiefly with the object of providing the very best that can be brought to exhibition.

CHARLES DE KAY.

An Italian writer on art has made an attack on the "Christ Bearing the Cross" attributed to Giorgione, which Mrs. John L. Gardner of Boston owns. He thinks it an extremely good copy of a painting which was lost long ago. Many reproductions were made of the original, showing that it had a powerful attraction to people of that day. Two important copies were once in Venice and Vicenza, the former painted by Marius de Maria and taken later to Vienna. It is the Vienna copy which is considered by Prof. Venturi to have approached the original the nearest. The writer compares the Vienna picture to the Boston canvas, greatly to the advantage of the former. It does not appear, however, that he has seen the one at Fenway Court, Boston. He seems to be judging from photographs, which are very perilous staves to lean upon.

Art Matters at Home and Abroad

THAT ancient statue in the Louvre found on the Island of Melos which is ranked among the half dozen most beautiful pieces of marble in the world has served a painter as the starting point for a picture of the Madonna with the Bambino in her left arm and the right hand reaching down to hold the drapery round her lower limbs. Miss Francesca del Mar has painted what may be called the pagan forerunner of the Virgin Mary, using the so-called Venus of Melos as the centre of interest. The title of her picture is "The Mother of the Gods," and she gives to the woman as well as the Child that aureole which the Christian clerical painters established for representations of saints.

The mother and child in arms stand on a pedestal, before her an altar with burning incense, and to right and left of the altar draped women and nude small children raise their hands in devotional attitudes.

Miss del Mar is also something of an archaeologist, for she believes that she has solved the vexed question of the original meaning of this statue. To her it is not an Aphrodite at all, not even a Venus Urania, but a Demeter (or Gaia?) So that her painting is really an essay at restoration. The rough spots on the back of the Louvre statue are supposed to be those where the right hand of the child lay; the missing left arm held him in place so that his shoulders came on a slightly higher level than the mother's.

If Demeter is suspected in this statue it would be more fitting to have the Bambino a Bambina and hazard the guess that the great goddess is carrying the baby Persephone, who grew up to be carried off by Hades and become Queen of Hell. What most people will concede is the open field for guesses which the statue supplies. It seems meant to be looked at from one general direction only and to need the balance of some other figure; but whether that figure was male or female, young or old, remains as much a mystery now as when it was found fourscore years ago in Melos. Some decline to feel the necessity of a human figure at all, and suggest a shield on which the goddess—say the Muse of History—is writing the names of winners of battles or Olympian games.

That there are still persons who believe that architects can make something beautiful in the material iron appears from an interview in The London Daily News with Sir Wyke Bayliss, a literary painter, who was a special butt of Jimmy Whistler owing to his solemn utterances on art. "I think," says Sir Wyke Bayliss, "there are great possibilities in the artistic treatment of iron, though it is usually associated with the use of vast masses of glass. There is a tendency to lose all proportion. I do not see, however, why iron structures should not be made beautiful." He agrees that Victoria Station, London, can hardly be considered a thing of beauty, "but St. Pancras is a fine, lofty building, and there is a suggestion of massiveness about the buildings at Euston Station. * * * But the time will come when architects will build something beautiful in iron." The optimistic, cheerful Wyke Bayliss was the author of this bit of logic at a recent dinner of the Sanitary Inspectors' Association: "Art is the science of beauty, sanitation is the science of health; and what are beauty and health if they are not the same thing?" And he brought down the house by exclaiming: "One of the loveliest things in the world is a drain—when it is consecrated by art in the form of a gargoyle on the roof of a cathedral."

The first person to receive the Legion of Honor for the painting of flowers is a Frenchwoman, Mlle. Madeleine Lemaire, who has for many years sent pictures to the Salons as well as to the exhibitions of the Femmes Peintres.

A French painter of landscape and townscape who is making himself remarked by the charm of his coloring and eye for the picturesque, is Louis Braquaval. He paints chiefly in Normandy, though Paris and its environment are not forgot. Valéry-sur-Somme, Abbeville, Amiens, Boulogne, and Moreuil provide pictures which are shown this month at the Paris Galleries of Durand-Ruel, 16 rue Laffitte.

For the first time has an exhibition of Courbet's paintings been made in Germany, although one might suppose that his work would have found appreciation there long ago. Berlin has a somewhat representative show of his pictures just now, and one of the local critics explains that Liebermann and Fritz von Uhde are beholden to Courbet through the medium of Munkaczy and that Trübner, Schuch, and other modern German painters hark back to Courbet by way of Leibl.

One of the London papers has a reporter who paid some attention to the color-scheme of the function when King Edward opened Parliament. The scene is the Royal Gallery.

"The doors of the robing-room opened, and the clear fanfare of the trumpeters heralded the King. Pacing slowly, the brilliant current of uniforms—gold and scarlet, blue and purple—passed between the standing ranks of people. The heralds, resplendent in their tabards, led the procession; their titles were like echoes from the history of Norman days in England. Rouge Croix walked on the right hand of Blue Mantle; Rouge Dragon was paired with Portcullis. Windsor, York, and Somerset heralds followed. Each gleamed with bullion and red, and behind them came the equerries, ushers, and a groom in waiting.

"The portentous maces escorted the Lord Chancellor, and immediately after him Lord Crewe bore the Sword of State upright in its sheath, and beside him walked the peer bearing the Cap of Maintenance. The Imperial Crown on its cushion was next, and then, engaging all eyes, walked his Majesty the King."

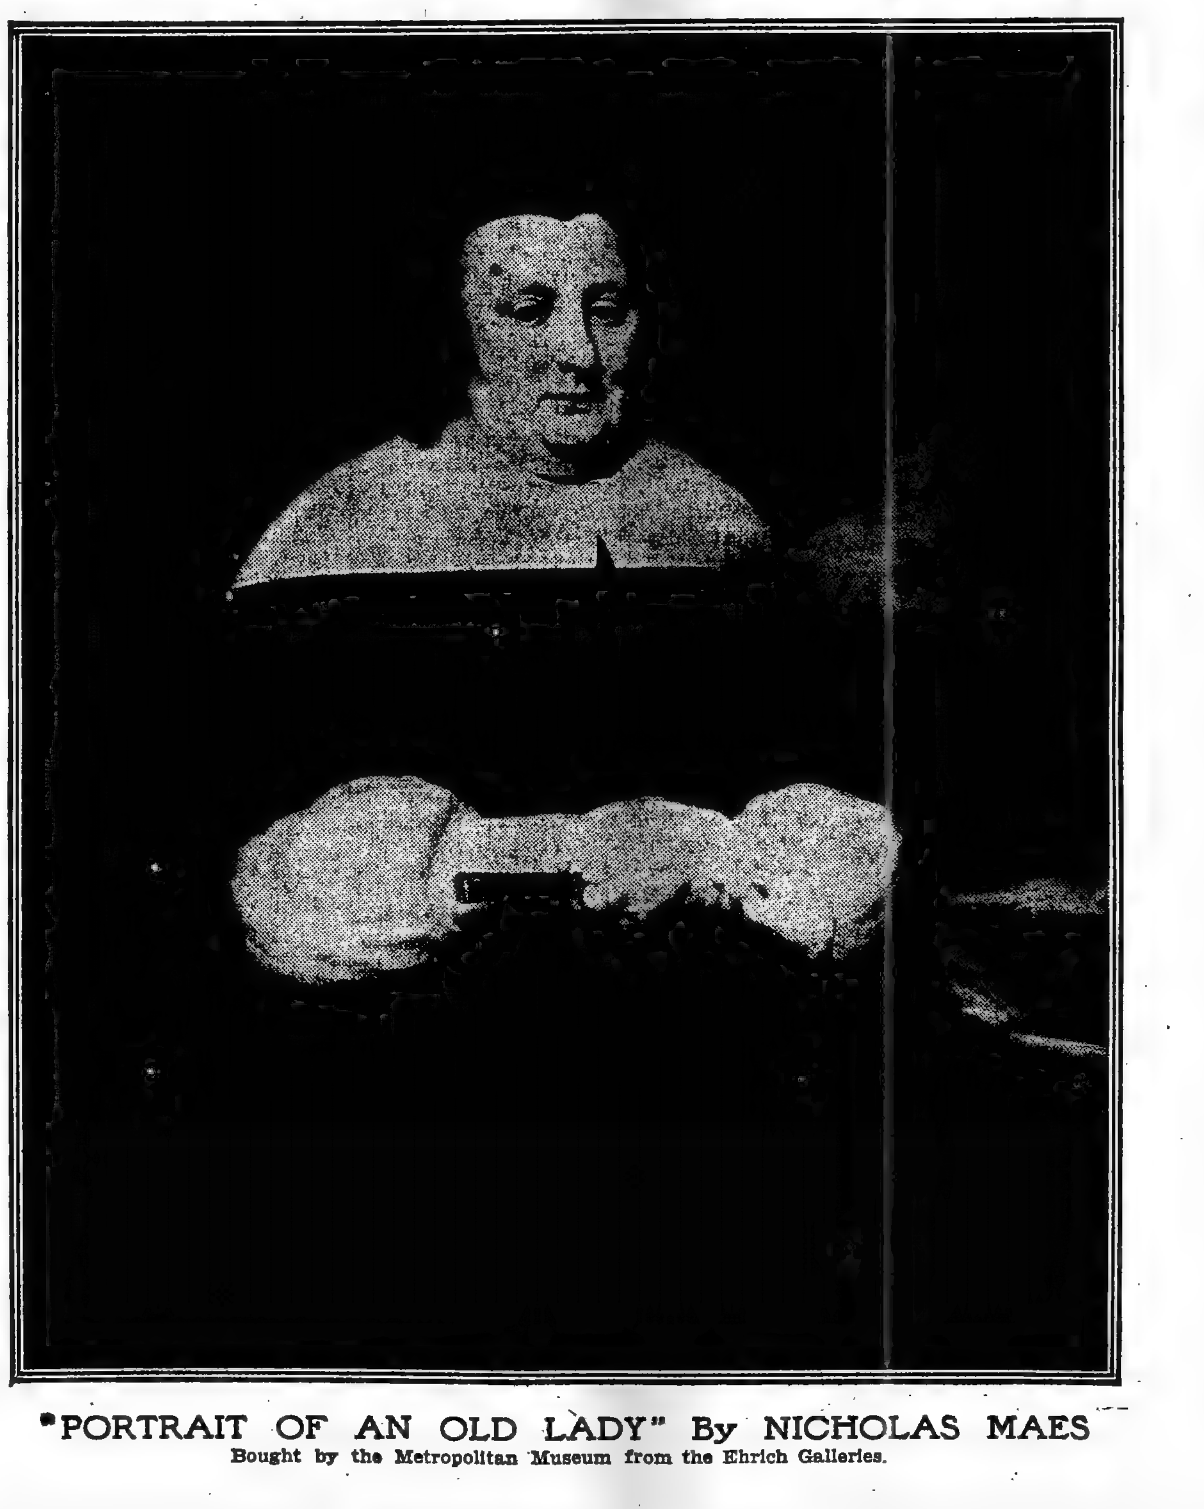
At the Metropolitan.

Admirable Portrait by Nicholas Maes Added to the Collection.

ALTHOUGH not yet announced by the authorities of the Metropolitan Museum, who are waiting for the appearance of the monthly bulletin before giving it out, a very remarkable old painting has been added to the collection by Mr. Roger M. Fry, the new Curator of paintings. It was found in New York and has been exhibited in one of the principal galleries, at which time its beauty was duly chronicled in these columns.

The purchase having been mentioned by some amateurs who saw it at the Museum, nothing could be learned concerning it. There is good reason to believe that it is the picture herewith published. It shows that Mr. Fry should not be judged by the Watts and the Etty he brought with him, pictures which are scarcely fair to his connoisseurship, in that they do not represent the higher level of work by these painters.

This Nicholas Maes is on a very different plane. It is a picture which any great collection might envy, for it represents Maes at the most interesting period, that of his emancipation from the influence of Rembrandt, when he still kept the broad, simple brushwork due to the great master's example, but had already struck out a style of his own.



"PORTRAIT OF AN OLD LADY" By NICHOLAS MAES

Bought by the Metropolitan Museum from the Ehrich Galleries.

The old lady who sits pensive, yet cheerful before a curtain which reveals on one side a softly lighted landscape, belongs to the same genus as her in the picture by Frans Hals at the Metropolitan, whose portrait hangs beside that of the late Mr. Marquand by Sargent. She wears a wig and a broad, perfectly simple white collar-cape, and sleeves guiltless of laces; an ordinary wooden fan, closed, is in her left hand. It is difficult to understand how a painter can communicate in so utterly simple and uneventful a figure, and in a face so quiet and unmoved, such an amount of reserve force. The modeling of brow, cheeks, and double chin, that of thick hands, of eyesockets which betray old age, could scarcely be better. Rembrandt or Frans Hals would not need to disown such a portrait. The mouth is sensitive and almost moves; the eyes, slightly cast down to her right, indicate that the old lady is thinking deeply. She is neither self-conscious nor gloomy. One feels that the moment she emerges from her brown study the massive old face will light up with a genial expression. There is in it a look of command, as if she had been used, all her life, to exercise her own will, and knew exactly what to do. Rarely does one receive from a portrait so powerful an impression of character.

This picture was shown some months ago at the Ehrich Galleries, and the presumption is that it was then bought for the Museum. Inquiry at the galleries as to the sale and as to the price was of no avail, and from the Museum the answer came that all announcements must wait for the appearance of the bulletin. It is safe to say, however, that a Nicholas Maes has been bought, that it was purchased at Mr. Fry's advice, and that this is the picture.

What the Artists Are Doing

CHARLES FREDERICK NAEGLE has been in Watertown, N. Y., during the past week making arrangements for an exhibition of the works of ten New York artists that is to be shown in that city. The Watertown exhibition is to be conducted under the patronage and mainly through the suggestion of Mrs. Roswell P. Flower.

In his studio in Twentieth Street Louis Akin has been working recently on a study for a mural painting that presents in a decorative way something of the quality which the villages of the Hopi Indians in Arizona present in combination with the wide empty spaces and the irregular outlines of that country. In his composition a pile of earth and rock rises up against the clear sky, the village perched on top of this mass showing a pale yellow above the reddish soil. Other villages are indicated faintly in the distance, the whole canvas giving a strong impression of the breadth and the warmth of the coloring that nature's face assumes in this corner of our country.

Théobald Chartran sailed for France on last Thursday. He is returning to Paris to paint a decoration for the walls of one of the Government buildings.

* * *

Having received a commission to execute a life-size statue of John W. Mackay, Gutzon Borglum has been in Nevada recently getting together materials for a preliminary study of the mining king. He returned to New York this week, and is to begin work on the statue at once.

* * *

Oscar H. von Gottschalk, whose first exhibition in the Salmagundi Club last Fall attracted attention, has been at work all Winter making studies of the snow near his home in Hackensack, and of the floating ice around the docks along the river front. He has been invited to send one of his canvases to the Watertown exhibition that Mr. Naegle is arranging.

* * *

L. C. Earle has finished recently the head of a young woman in profile against a reddish background. The tone falls in with the dark rich beauty of the subject's face and the note of red in the roses on her little bonnet. This, and as much of the costume as is shown in the limits of the picture, is black, and her face is seen through one of the spotted veils that are the vogue of the hour. Mr. Earle is going back to Montclair to live next month, closing his city studio on the first of May for the Summer.

* * *

E. Loyal Field has just finished a broad expanse of meadowland with hills in the background, over the crest of which a full moon is rising. He has under way a large water color of an Autumn scene with a sky charged with rain clouds. Another landscape in his studio at present that is nearing completion shows an old wood road with the trees and the road itself in a glory of the browns and reds and yellows of late Autumn.

Miss Mary Theresa Hart is working on a set of illustrations for one of Mrs. Gabrielle Jackson's children's books that are to be brought out by the Harpers in the Spring.

The ideals that interest C. A. Needham when he works in water colors are fittingly displayed in several of his recent pictures. His studio lies hidden away behind a row of business houses on East Twenty-third Street. Among these are the "Song of the Nightingale," "Idle Hours," "A Silent River," and "A Wood Dove Singing."

Frank de Haven is putting the finishing touches on a large canvas which he calls "Moonrise and Sunset." It shows a vista of a clearing in a woodland, with the moon rising in a cloud-flecked sky, while in the foreground the oak trees are suffused in the warm rays of the setting sun. Between the trees a little stream is running over some rocks in its bed. "October Twilight" shows an open country seen from the edge of a grove of trees, the full moon illuminating the wide, empty landscape. In striking contrast to these is a nocturne called "A Tidal River," with the moonlight falling on the quiet stream and three trees standing solitary against the sky.

* * *

For the sake of variety in his working hours, Maurice Paleologue, the "Pal" of the Parisian posters, has been doing some dry-points recently. He has just completed a striking head of Henry Irving in the character of Becket. Mr. Paleologue is at work on a bust portrait of Ridgely Torrance, poet. He is going to Washington this week to paint the portraits of two Senators and to look after the details of an exhibition of his work to be held in the National capital.

* * *

Pilade Bertieri has just begun a portrait of Miss May Bruce Brennan of Nashville, who is on a visit to this city, and is at work on a head of A. W. Smith. He has just completed a portrait of Mrs. Kessler and is finishing two half-length portraits of Mr. and Mrs. Bernheim. Mr. Bertieri is going back to the Bryant Park studio building in the Fall.

The Arts Club will give three performances of "Pygmalion and Galatea" at the Carnegie Lyceum on April 23, 24, and 25. The proceeds will go to the fund for a Library of Works on Arts in the new clubhouse on Gramercy Park, formerly the Tilden mansion.

Spurts and Spazzums!

Society of American Fakirs Organizes to Improve American Art.

THE Society of American Fakirs, its executors, administrators, and assigns, was meditating its annual mischief around what appeared to be a cider cask at the Art Students' League.

J. Paul Burnham, the newly elected Fakir President, explained to the novices that faking was the art of making a very little go a long way. The first object of the Fakirs was to make money, and the second was to spend it. Last year they touched the public for $800 and spent most of the money in scholarships for deserving art students.

"Are there any 'deserving' students?" asked a voice.

The interruption was unheeded. Then the President gave detailed instructions as to how, when, what, and whom to fake. Candidates for membership in the Society of American Fakirs must inspect the forthcoming exhibit of the Society of American Artists, and then repaint the canvases as they ought to be painted. The improved pictures will be exhibited at the Fakirs' fifteenth annual show, and Samuel T. Shaw again offers $50 in prizes for the best fakes, to hang in the Grand Union Hotel. For the worst fake there is a mince pie and a penny, and a dinner invitation from Mr. Shaw for the entire society, past, present, and future.

Every year the Fakirs have a slogan poster. Last year it was "Frenzied Faking." For 1906 it is to be "Spurts and Spazzums; or, Why Go to Blazes When You Can Come to the Fakirs' Show.

The committee Chairmen have been discriminately selected. J. Dunbar Gleeson will supervise "the Katalogge Kommittee because he kums from Kalifornia." Arnold Haupt is Chairman of the Decoration Committee, on account of his beautiful studio coat. The side shows will be looked after by Neal A. Truslove, who learned all about quacks on an ancestral duckpond in Pennsylvania. Mr. Truslove was instructed to allow only blank cartridges to be used in the shooting gallery. Thomas Hunt, "who left Providence (R. I.) alone," will supervise the dance, and the posters will be hung by W. D. Teague, "because he has recently increased his height."

There was a vacancy on the Press Committee. Some one suggested the name of Bruno Schmidt.

"What does he do?" asked a Fakir.

"He does his father, mostly," replied another, and the motion was carried.

The meeting adjourned with a dance around the empty cider (?) barrel.

Sculpture in a Balloon.

Paul Nocquet Will Show How Safe and Quiet Is Ballooning by Modeling a Friend High Above the Earth.

SOME sculptors there are who enjoy modeling serpents and tortoises and denizens of burrows, the bison that crops the prairie grass, and the great cats which haunt the jungle. M. Paul Nocquet has a passion for movement and every thing that lifts one above the earth. The Dancing Girl, reproduced in the Pictorial Supplement to-day, indicates his love for an airy treatment of the human form divine, poised as she is on the toes of one foot, while the tossing hands preserve the balance as the other foot goes forward to the next step, before the body has yet followed the onward impulse. He has seized the momentary arrest of movement to give stability to a very hazardous attempt. Somewhat similar is the pose that MacMonnies has given his Bacchante, now in the Metropolitan Museum; as in the case of that figure, rejected by the Boston Public Library, this one could only be carried out in bronze.

Looking about his studio at the top of 55 East Fifty-ninth Street, one seeks for a clue to the enigma, but it is only when one touches on M. Nocquet's hobby that light is given.

"Yes, I have always delighted in aeronautics," remarked the young sculptor, "ever since I was a boy. I am one of the newly formed Aero Club, and my balloon has just arrived. People over here are entirely mistaken as to the danger there is in ballooning. In Paris the sport has become so common that women as well as men think no more of excursions through the air than of motor rides. It is far less expensive and infinitely more enjoyable."

"Not expensive?"

"No, not expensive. The balloon itself costs comparatively little if one thinks of the expense of yachts and motor cars, while the gas to inflate the balloon is far from dear. I believe that as soon as these facts are realized here, in my adopted country, we shall see a tremendous wave of appreciation for aeronautics. At present the sport is so little appreciated that the wonderful invention of the Wright brothers of Dayton, Ohio, went a-begging—the combination of aeroplane and motor car—and has been bought up in France.

"What is it about ballooning that gives you so much enjoyment?"

"The intense quiet and feeling of being lifted clear of the earth," exclaimed M. Nocquet springing to his feet and opening wide his arms. "There you are, emerging above the clouds onto a sea of rolling vapor, a sight most sublime, such as people toil up the Alps to experience. While they brave every kind of danger from snow bridges and icy chasms, from slips on slippery precipices, from rolling stones and mountain sickness, wearying themselves to death and running risks of sudden snowstorms, we sit at ease like the gods of old and see the earth dwindling beneath our feet. Through a rift of the clouds we catch sight of cities and hilltops. Passing into banks of clouds, we seem to be entering vast caves with stalactites and stalagnites hanging and rising from above and below. A slant of sunlight plays on these drifting masses and turns them into every color of the rainbow. Oh, it is magnificent beyond words!"

* * *

The little pedestal on which the Dancing Girl is prancing has a frieze of Bacchanals and children about the drum, with satyr masks and other decorative members round the foot. The swinging tresses of the dancers make as many knobs along the upper edge of the pedestal. In the statuette itself, along with the gay, free movement, goes a very remarkable modeling, which indicates the structure of the body and limbs, the skeleton and muscles, and yet all graceful. The picture is from the plaster model, and one sees where the arms and raised leg have been modeled separately and attached. The only ornaments are a chain confining the hair, a longer chain about the waist, and close-fitting bangles at the ankles fashioned after the classic way in the shape of serpents. Observe the spreading fingers and parted lips; they add to the expressiveness of the figure. It is a young Maenad carried away by the excitement of the revels on Mount Kithairon, shouting "Evoë Paian!"

The sculptor has given a twist to the torso in sympathy with the movement of the arms. In all the series of figurines from Tanagra and tombs in Attica, from Myrina in Asia Minor and from Sicily and Lower Italy we have no figure so boldly posed as this, though it should not be forgot that terra cotta is one thing and bronze is another. Perhaps it was contrary to Greek tradition to indulge in such violent movement. One thinks of the Mercury by John of Bologna tipping on one toe upon the breath from a mouth underneath, the face of Boreas or some other wind god. He is being blown into the air, a youthful figure glad with the gladness of swift motion and accomplishment of some mission from the gods.

* * *

Pardonably enough, M. Nocquet likes better to talk about balloons than statues, for the sport is a relief to hard work, and he is young. People who are young, to whom ideas come easily, are readily daunted by the drudgery of a profession. Bread winning is not all of life.

"I enjoy ballooning so much," said M. Nocquet, "that I want others to sympathize with me, and I want the pleasure of feeling that others enjoy it. I would that our little club were larger than it is. The fact is that pretty much all that people here seen of ballooning consists of ascensions at fairs with a man or woman performing on a trapeze and coming down with a parachute. There have been some ugly accidents among these acrobats; but they are not necessary.

"To exhibit the harmlessness and gentleness of this sport I intend to go up in the air with my friend Levee, who made an ascension lately at West Point, and while in the air model his bust in clay. That ought to prove that one feels no sense of danger or discomfort during such a trip."

"But surely there is danger when landing?"

"Not at all. You throw out your grapnel and come gently to earth whenever you wish. If an obstacle appears you rise over it by throwing out ballast. I do wish the papers would not exaggerate these things in order to make a thrilling story. It frightens people and delays the acceptance of aeronautics as a sport and enjoyment. I predict that very soon the sight of a balloon floating over cities and rivers will cause no more excitement than a motor car on a country road."

Talk of the Studios

"THE Worship of the Magi" is the subject of a large mural painting which Nicholas R. Brewer is completing for the Church of Our Lady of Lourdes on West 142d Street. Of the ten figures in the composition the Virgin and infant Christ, with St. Joseph, form the central group. The three wise men are seen in the foreground in various attitudes of adoration, a group of white-robed angels fills the background to the right, and on the left is a vista of the walls of Jerusalem. The star that guided the magi in their search for the new-born King shines brightly in the dark blue sky.

Mr. Brewer has recently completed a number of portraits of prominent people, including those of Archbishop Ireland and Mrs. John A. Johnson, wife of the Governor of Minnesota. He is also engaged in painting a portrait of the actress Miss Dorothy Donnelly. Several other commissions are under way. Mr. Brewer formerly lived in St. Paul, Minn. Several years ago he painted a series of mural paintings for the interior of Canonchet, the old-time mansion of Gov. William Sprague of Rhode Island, which is one of the memorable country seats at Narragansett Pier.

Albert L. Groll has submitted two new paintings entitled "Arizona Clouds" and "Sandstorm in Arizona" to the Society of American Artists for the forthcoming annual exhibition. He has started two new canvases under the titles of "Afternoon in the Desert" and "Moonlight on the Plains," both studies of the great Western country.

Edward W. Redfield, whose works are known to the Academy and the Society of American Artists, has spent the Winter as usual among the hilltops and valleys in and around Centre Bridge, Penn., where he has a studio. He has two new canvases submitted to the Jury of Selection of the society, the jury whose portraits for the forthcoming annual exhibition are given in the pictorial supplement. These pictures are "The Crest" and "The River Delaware." Mr. Redfield said recently: "As usual, I've been going out to the treetops and trying to learn how to paint. My Winter's work is now in full swing, and every day I take out a canvas or two and have a go at them for several hours." He is represented in a number of prominent collections, including the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts, Boston Art Club, Art Association of New Orleans, and also in many private galleries. He received the Shaw prize at the Society exhibit in 1904, and was awarded a silver medal by the International Jury at the St. Louis Exposition in 1904.

THE PHILADELPHIA HIT BY A GIANT COMBER

Liner's Passengers, Hurled to the Floor, Began to Pray.

LOTS OF DAMAGE WAS DONE

But Only One Person Hurt—Capt. MHls Never Saw Such a Wave—Circus People Aboard.

The American Line steamship Philadelphia, in yesterday from Southampton, brought in a story of a big wave.

On Friday evening last, when the liner was nearing the American mainland, she shipped a sea that shook the great ship from stem to stern and broke in several doors, snapped off a piece of the bowsprit, loosened stays, twisted the bridge and some of the forward railings, and threw the passengers into a panic. It was about 9 o'clock when the comber came over, and the passengers had just assembled in the main saloon to participate in the concert that is the distinguishing event of the last Friday night at sea. The concert was not finished.

The ship had a large number of people on board who make their living in the show business, and the result was that the programme for the concert was an unusually good one. The concert had just started, and Percy Elliott, the London pianist, was playing an overture, when the ship gave a tremendous lurch. The lurch was accompanied by a terrific whack, due to the fierce impact of a giant sea against the liner's side. A moment later everybody in the saloon was sprawling on the floor. Some of them, instead of rising, remained on their knees to pray, not knowing how serious was the result of the blow that the ship had received.

The Philadelphia reeled and quivered under the shock for almost five minutes. Then some of the officers ran into the saloon, shouting that everybody was safe and begging the more excited of the crowd to be calm.

The wave came over forward and struck the officers' house, breaking in several of the doors, flooding the compartments of all the officers from the Captain down, and in some instances ruining their clothes. Leaving the officers' quarters the water made its way down into the saloon apartments, flooding the vestibules, passageways, and the drawing-room. Some of the passengers, in describing the inflow, declared that it was nearly knee deep in the saloon, but the accuracy of this was denied by others.

Despite the terrific shaking which the ship received, the passengers, with one exception, escaped unhurt. The exception was an Ursuline Sister, who was thrown from her berth and received several bruises. When the wave hit the ship, those of the passengers who had retired ran into the saloon to find out what the matter was. When they saw the praying men and women, they too became excited and some of them started to pray.

In the second cabin and steerage apartments the excitement was almost as great as it was in the saloon. No water penetrated these quarters, however, and the persons in them were soon quieted by the officers. Capt. Mills was on the bridge when his ship shipped the sea. Seeing that it would be impossible to force his vessel forward in such tremendous seas as were running, he turned her into the trough, where for the next hour and a half the ship rode the storm in gallant fashion.

Yesterday, in speaking of the wave, Capt. Mills said that in all his experience on the Atlantic he had never encountered a wave of the magnitude of the one that struck the Philadelphia on Friday.

"It seemed," said Capt. Mills, "that the wave picked us up as if we had been only a tiny shell, tossed us up into the air, and then as we fell caught us again and put us down." The skipper added that on the afternoon of Friday his glass dropped to 28.50, which was the lowest he had seen this Winter. At times, he said, the wind blew eighty miles an hour. The gale began as a southerly one and ended southeasterly.

The Marconi apparatus on the liner was considerably damaged in the bang that the liner received.

Just before the Philadelphia was docked Customs Inspector Timothy Donohue saw a man aboard pitch an overcoat to another man, who was on the dock. Donohue decided to find out why the man on board was so anxious to get his coat ashore, so he went up to the man on the pier and asked permission to examine the garment. Within its lining Donohue found 100 yards of white lace and some dress goods of fine texture. The lace and dress goods were sent to the Public Stores.

After the liner docked it was found that another passenger, a woman, had about forty yards of black lace that she had forgotten to declare. She said she had failed to do so because she wanted to find out if it was possible to smuggle goods into the United States. Her lace was sent to the Public Stores.

Most prominent among the score of show people who came for the Barnum & Bailey Circus, which is to open in Madison Square Garden Thursday evening of next week, was Mlle. Octave La Tour, the young woman who will make the "dip of death" in an automobile. This act is another of the loop-the-gap contrivances.

Other performers who came over were Pepe and Jerome, said to be the highest-priced clowns in Europe; the Four Barlets, whirlwind dancers; Margaret von Stutterheim, the equestrienne; Austin brothers, equestrians; Mr. and Mrs. Walter Lowes and their troupe of eleven acrobats, the Gumathas troupe of women acrobats, and the Dundine family, also acrobats. The Dundine family will appear with the Ringling Brothers' Circus.

THREE TRAINS IN WRECK.

Express on B. and O. Crashes Into Freight in a Snowstorm—2 Killed.

Special to The New York Times.

FOSTORIA, Ohio, March 11.—Two persons were killed and fourteen were injured just before noon to-day when two freight trains and the westbound flyer on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad were piled up a wreck at Godsend, five miles west of this place. The disaster was due to a heavy snowstorm.

A fast East-bound freight stopped at Godsend to take water. The snow obscured the train from the view of Albert Gaustke, engineer of the second section, which was following closely. No flagman had been sent back, according to the second train's engine crew.

Gaustke saw the caboose of the first train just in time to put on the air brakes and call to his fireman, C. E. Nicholson, to jump, and then to jump himself. Both landed safely in the snowdrifts. Their engine tossed the caboose and some cars of the other train squarely across the westbound track.

Into this wreckage the westbound express drove itself. Engineer J. H. Siegel was trying to make up twenty minutes on his schedule, and was cutting through the snowstorm at fifty miles an hour. He was within 200 yards of the wreck before he knew of danger, and did not have time to slow down his train. Neither he nor his fireman, John Hootman, had time to jump.

The engine could not drive far into the wreckage and the stop was so sudden that the baggage car, mail car, smoker, and day coach piled up thirty-five feet high.

John Hootman of Chicago Junction, the passenger engine fireman, and W. Hoy, a mail clerk, of Wheeling, West Va., were killed. Benjamin C. Snook, a mail clerk, of Chicago Junction, was fatally hurt. Engineer Siegel had his left arm broken and was badly cut and scalded. Mrs. George Stair of Detroit had three ribs broken.

The passengers in the smoker and day coach were badly shaken up and some were seriously hurt. That many of them escaped was due to the fact that these two cars rode up on to the wreck instead of being smashed in it. Passengers in the Pullman and dining cars were thrown from their seats and stunned, but they scrambled out of the cars, which did not leave the tracks, and went to the aid of others.

Flames caught the wreckage, and for a time the lives of the injured were threatened. The uninjured of the passengers and train crews tore aside the débris and the victims were removed. Two, however, were quite badly burned before the rescuers could reach them. Steam from the broken engines scalded several persons who were aiding in the rescue work.

Within half an hour all of the injured had been removed to the dining car of the passenger train, and an hour later they were being cared for by physicians in the Hotel Sherwood here.

STEIN ON CITY OWNERSHIP.

Chicago's Counsel Predicts Personal Injury Suits Costing Millions.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, March 11.—Personal injury litigation that will cost the city millions of dollars every year under the municipal ownership of traction lines is predicted by City Attorney John F. Smulski. He sounds the warning in his annual report to the city Council, made public to-day and recommends amendments to the Mueller law that will remove the impending danger.

After calling attention to 700 lawsuits for personal damages filed against the city last year which were settled at a total cost of $400,000 to the city, Mr. Smulski expresses the belief that the damage suits would be increased more than twelve fold under municipal ownership.

"The street railways of Chicago," said he, "have filed against them claims of every description, possibly to the number of 10,000 annually. I have it on good authority that these companies pay out in defraying expenses of their claim and law departments to charge of personal injury litigation, the settlement of claims and the payment of judgments recovered, upward of $2,000,000 annually.

"Knowing from past experience what success personal injury professionals have had against municipalities, I believe that the amount of claims and judgments recovered in the case of municipal ownership and operation of street car lines would far exceed the sums paid out by the present street railway corporation, which have reduced the system to a science."

PRINCE TSAI IN WASHINGTON.

Chinese Commissioners Will Call on the President To-day.

WASHINGTON, March 11.—The Imperial Chinese Commissioners, Prince Tsai-Tse, Chi-Heng, Governor of Shan-tung Province, and Li-Cheng-To, Minister to Belgium, who are en route to Europe to investigate political conditions in England, France, and Belgium, arrived here late this afternoon from New York.

They were entertained to-night by the Chinese Minister. To-morrow they will spend the day sightseeing and expect to call on the President and Secretary Root. They will sail on Wednesday for Europe.

The members of the Chinese Imperial High Commission left the Fifth Avenue Hotel at 11 o'clock yesterday morning for Washington. They were accompanied by Sir Chengtung Liang-Cheng, the Chinese Minister to this country, and two of their secretaries, Po and Tso. The Prince's special bodyguards also went with the party. The secretary who has charge of the trunks was left behind.

Dr. Kwan, the eminent Chinese physician to the Emperor, did not go to Washington. He drove through Central Park yesterday after the Prince had departed. Asked whether the Prince had been ill since coming here, Dr. Kwan said he had been troubled with a slight cold contracted while automobiling in the West.

Trolley Car Kills 7-Year-Old Boy.

While on his way to buy a cent's worth of candy, James McFarland, seven years old, of 826 Greenwich Street, was run over in front of his home last night by an Eighth Avenue electric car and instantly killed. The motorman, Frank Davis, thirty-two years old, of 209 East Fourteenth Street was locked up in the Charles Street Station to await the action of the Coroner.

New Charge for Bishop Potter.

CLEVELAND, March 11.—The Right Rev. William A. Leonard, Episcopal Bishop of Ohio, who for years has had charge of the American Episcopal churches of Europe, but recently resigned that charge, was to-day notified that Bishop Potter of New York had been chosen to fill his position.

CARNEGIE ASSAULTS THE SPELLING BOOK

To Pay the Cost of Reforming English Orthography.

CAMPAIGN ABOUT TO BEGIN

Board Named, with Headquarters Here—Local Societies Throughout the Country.

Announcement was made yesterday that an organization, including prominent men of affairs as well as men of letters, has been formed to urge the simplification of English spelling. This new body is called the Simplified Spelling Board. It will appeal to all who for educational or practical reasons wish to make English spelling easier to learn. Andrew Carnegie has undertaken to bear the expense of the organization. Mr. Carnegie has long been convinced that English might be made the world language of the future, and thus one of the influences leading to universal peace; and he believes that the chief obstacle to its speedy adoption is to be found in its contradictory and difficult spelling.

The Simplified Spelling Board contains some thirty members, living in various parts of the Union. Some of them are authors of wide reputation; some are professed scholars connected with leading universities; some are editors of the foremost American dictionaries; some are men distinguished in public life, and some are men of affairs, prominent in civil life.

The membership is not yet complete, but it now includes Chancellor Andrews of the University of Nebraska, Justice Brewer of the United States Supreme Court, President Butler of Columbia University, O. C. Blackmer of Chicago, Andrew Carnegie, Mark Twain, Dr. Melvil Dewey, Dr. Isaac K. Funk, editor and publisher of The Standard Dictionary; Lyman J. Gage, ex-Secretary of the Treasury; Richard Watson Gilder, editor of The Century Magazine; Dr. William T. Harris, United States Commissioner of Education and editor of Webster's International Dictionary; Prof. George Hempl of the University of Michigan, Col. Thomas Wentworth Higginson, Henry Holt, Prof. William James of Harvard, President Jordan of Leland Stanford University, Prof. Thomas R. Lounsbury of Yale, Prof. Francis A. March of Lafayette, Prof. Brander Matthews of Columbia, Dr. Benjamin E. Smith, editor, and Dr. Charles P. G. Scott, etymological editor, of The Century Dictionary; President H. H. Seedley of the Iowa State Normal School, Cedar Falls; Col. Charles E. Sprague, President of the Union Dime Savings Institution; Prof. Calvin Thomas of Columbia, Dr. William Hayes Ward, editor of The Independent, and President Woodward of the Carnegie Institution of Washington.

The establishment of the Simplified Spelling Board is the result of an effort made within the last year to obtain the use, by men of position, of certain simplified spellings, adopted some years ago by the National Educational Association and now used by several important publications. The response to this request was cordial. Hundreds of signatures were received, pledging the writers to use these simpler forms in their personal correspondence. The members of the Simplified Spelling Board believe that the time is now ripe for a forward movement.

They do not intend to urge any violent alteration in the appearance of familiar words. They will not advance and extreme theories. They will not expect to accomplish their task in a day or in a year. They wish, in brief, to expedite that process of simplification which has been going on in English, in spite of the opposition of conservatives, ever since the invention of printing, notably in the omission of silent and useless letters.

The immediate activities of the Simplified Spelling Board will be directed by an Executive Committee chosen from the members residing in New York. An office will be opened in New York to serve as headquarters for the work, and from this office the campaign of education will be conducted by a competent staff. Local societies will be organized wherever a group of willing workers can be gathered together. Comprehensive plans are being mapped out, which will take years for their full accomplishment.

NEW SUBWAY SECTION DUG.

Brooklyn Contractors Have Nearly Finished Their Work Under Land.

A celebration was held yesterday by the contractors who are at work on the Brooklyn extension of the Subway because of the finishing of the north section of the land and river tunnel in Joralemon Street, near Clinton. Two months ago there was a similar celebration when the south tube met the Brooklyn end of the river tunnel.

The greatest difficulty was experienced by the contractors in constructing the north tube, because of the presence of Temple Bar, a twelve-story office building on the northwest corner of Court and Joralemon Streets. The tube was completed, however, without disturbing the foundations of the building.

In a few weeks, the tunnel tube will meet the Fulton Street Subway in front of the courthouse. Then the land part of the extension will be completed. It runs to the Flatbush Avenue Station of the Long Island Railroad. The river part of the extension will probably not be done until December.

BRYAN VICTORY IN ILLINOIS.

Meeting of Majority Rule League Controlled by His Adherents.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, March 11.—Adherents of William J. Bryan were in the ascendant at the meeting of the Democratic Majority Rule League to-day at the Palmer House. The meeting was attended by delegates from every county in the State outside of Cook County.

A protest against "gang rule" tactics, such as prevailed at the last State Convention, and a "declaration of independence" from National Committeeman Hopkins were adopted.

A resolution was passed over the objections of various Hearst leaders present asking the county conventions to instruct their delegates to the State Convention to vote for Congressman Henry T. Rainey, well known as a Bryan man, for temporary Chairman. James Reddon of Vermillion County, who had been asking for a direct Bryan indorsement, said he was satisfied with this result.

It was tacitly agreed that Gen. Alfred M. Orendorf of Springfield should be the League's candidate for United States Senator. Orendorf is another Bryan adherent.

MISS ANTHONY VERY LOW.

Sudden Sinking Spell Follows a Seeming Gain.

ROCHESTER, March 11.—Miss Susan B. Anthony is very low, and is not expected to survive many hours. She was taken with a sudden pain in the heart at 3:30 o'clock this afternoon, and became unconscious and has remained so most of the time ever since. Relatives have been summoned to her bedside.

Up to the time of her sinking spell Miss Anthony had appeared to be on the gain. She ate dinner about 2 o'clock and seemed to have a good appetite. The Rev. Anna Shaw, who has been here several days, talked with her, and she was in cheerful spirits. She is able to make a few wants known, but most of the time is unconscious and appears to be gradually sinking.

NEILL MEETS MITCHELL.

Commissioner of Labor May Have Acted by the President's Request.

PHILADELPHIA, March 11.—Charles P. Neill, United States Commissioner of Labor, and President Mitchell of the Miners' Union held a conference at the Hotel Walton here to-day. The meeting was the result of an arrangement made on Saturday when Mr. Mitchell agreed to stop off here for a few hours, while on his way to Indianapolis.

Neither Mr. Neill nor Mr. Mitchell would disclose the nature of their conference, Mr. Mitchell saying it would not be wise to do so at this time. It is believed, however, that Mr. Neill came here to see Mr. Mitchell at the instance of President Roosevelt. Neither Mr. Mitchell nor Mr. Neill made any secret of their belief that the situation in the anthracite region is grave.

"It is as bad and as critical as it can be without coming to an open rupture," said the Commissioner of Labor. "The outlook is serious," was Mr. Mitchell's only comment.

After the conference Mr. Mitchel left for the West and Mr. Neill returned to Washington.

POWERS COERCED FRANCE?

Correspondent Thinks Outcome at Algeciras a Defeat for Her.

LONDON, Monday, March 12.—The correspondent of The Daily Mail at Algeciras represents France as having been coerced by the neutral powers into making concessions on the police question, probably as the result of apprehension on the part of the powers that the failure of the conference would mean war.

The correspondent declares that for France to enter Morocco as one of two powers subject to the domination of a third power would be suicidal. It would be better for France, he says, to surrender all her interests in Morocco rather than suffer such a loss of prestige.

ALGECIRAS, March 11.—The Committee on Redaction having in charge the adjustment of the remaining differences between France and Germany over the Moroccan police question and the question of the bank assembled twice to-day.

On the bank question an agreement was reached on every point except the allotment of the capital, which will probably be left to the decision of the conference.

The police question was not discussed formally in the sittings to-day. The delegates, however, went over the situation informally, and there is a feeling of confidence among the representatives of the neutral powers that a settlement of the question will be reached within a week.

FORMER MONK TO MARRY.

Released from Trappist Vows by Pope—Bride-Elect a Widow.

Special to The New York Times.

DUBUQUE, Iowa, March 11.—Joseph Graham, who spent twenty-five years of his life as a Trappist monk in the monastery at New Mallory, near here, and left that institution a year ago on a special dispensation of the Pope, is to marry Mrs. Dora Colbert, a young widow of Dubuque.

The Trappists have rigorous rules. The members never leave the monastery, and hold conversations among themselves for only an hour each week.

Twenty-six years ago Graham, then a young man, took the vows of silence and entered the monastery. A year ago the head of the society asked his release, so he could go back into the world to market a patent wagon body, which the monks had patented.

Since then Graham has lived in Dubuque, where he became acquainted with Mrs. Colbert. The marriage will take place in the Spring.

50,000 GO TO CONEY ISLAND.

Transportation Facilities Overtaxed—Most of the Small Shows Renovated.

It was a renovated Coney Island that more than 50,000 people visited yesterday. Early in the afternoon they began going down to the resort, and the transportation facilities were taxed to their utmost. Five-car express trains were put in service by the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company, and even these, running on a ten-minute headway, failed properly to take care of the crowds.

Surf Avenue presents an entirely new appearance, and while little is to be seen behind the large board fences that are in front of the large parks, about all the smaller amusement devices have been revised and enlarged.

All along the old Bowery the crowd was reminiscent of a Summer's day. People elbowed with each other good naturedly, and the Ocean Boulevard was thronged with vehicles of every description.

Two officers of Inspector Cross's staff who had been detailed to catch speeding autoists made two arrests. At the Coney Island Station the prisoners gave the names of William Green, 72 Macon Street, and Richard J. Nelson, 78 Fourteenth Street. They will be arraigned in the Coney Island Court this morning.

The amusement purveyors are predicting a banner year, and the season is to open early and run late into the Fall.

Capt. Harkins, the new commander of the Coney Island police station, had little difficulty in handling the crowd, which was an orderly one. When the season is fully opened a special traffic squad will be organized to relieve some of the congestion on Surf Avenue and the Bowery.

MAGOON IN THE CABINET IF TAFT GOES ON BENCH

Governor of Panama May Become Secretary of War.

MEYER AS NAVY SECRETARY

Bonaparte Likely to Become Attorney General Upon Moody's Retirement from the Department of Justice.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, March 11.—The prospective retirement of Secretary Taft from the Cabinet to become a Justice of the Supreme Court has renewed the talk in Washington of other impending Cabinet changes. There has been no development to-day in the situation with regard to Taft, but it is accepted even by his close friends as practically certain that the President will persist in his request that the War Secretary take the place, which means that Taft will acquiesce.

There has been considerable speculation as to his successor in the War Department, but among those in the best position to know, the only name which has received serious consideration is that of Charles E. Magoon, now Civil Governor of the Panama Canal Zone, member of the Canal Commission, and Minister to Panama. Judge Magoon has had much the same sort of training for the War portfolio that Secretary Taft had had when he took it up, and he is much more familiar with the Administration's problems in the Canal Zone and the Philippines than any other man on whom the President could call.

It has been suggested that Mr. Roosevelt might subordinate the Philippine and army features of the War Secretary's duties to those of canal work and select Chairman Shonts of the Canal Commission for the Cabinet place, but it is recognized that Magoon's general qualifications for the post far outweigh those of the railroad-canal man.

It has been the understanding for some time here that upon the retirement of Attorney General Moody, which is scheduled for some time in the Spring, Secretary Bonaparte would leave the Navy Department to become Attorney General. It is now said that when that change occurs Ambassador Meyer will come home from St. Petersburg to take the navy portfolio. The selection of Mr. Meyer for the Navy Secretaryship would balance the appointment of Magoon to be Secretary of War, and retain to New England the place in the Cabinet which tradition has always given her.

Mrs. Meyer and the Misses Meyer, who are occupying Lady Susan Townley's house on Connecticut Avenue for a month, are said to be looking for a permanent residence in Washington, where they will be joined by Mr. Meyer on his retirement from his present post, which is expected to take place this Spring. The Misses Meyer made their début in St. Petersburg but also saw something of the social life in Rome during their father's term of service at that capital.

DOWIE LOSES THE CASH BOX.

Is Permitted to be Elijah III., but Not Overseer of the Funds.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, March 11.—Departures from the policy of John Alexander Dowie which will be inaugurated in Zion City by the reform management were outlined this afternoon in Zion Central Tabernacle by the new Deputy General Overseer, Wilbur Glen Voliva.

As the vital feature in the reforms the Dowieites have decided definitely to separate "Church and State." Dowie will be permitted to be Elijah III. and the First Apostle, but not General Overseer of the cash box.

Before some 1,500 Chicago members of the church to-day the new leader told what he believes is the matter with the Dowie community. He left no doubt in the minds of his hearers that Dowie has been deposed permanently.

Among other reforms, Voliva promised to abolish female labor in the lace factory and other shops, to establish an agricultural community in connection with Zion City, to give the Zion industries a working capital, to expel unworthy officers of the church, to treat newspaper representatives with courtesy, to inculcate the toleration of other religious creeds, to eliminate expensive dress and luxurious habits hitherto indulged in by the head of the community, and to do away with all sensational and emotional religion.

"BLIND TIGER" IN CHURCH.

Methodist Pastor Finds He Sheltered Illicit Liquor Trade.

Special to The New York Times.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., March 11.—Evidence presented to the Grand Jury at Waverly, Tenn., may send a Justice of the Peace, a physician, and the negro sexton of a Methodist Episcopal Church to the penitentiary for running a "Blind Tiger" in the basement of the church. The sexton, Marcus White, has confessed that he sold whisky as charged. His confession involves the others, each a citizen of good standing heretofore. He says they put up the money and reaped the profits.

Waverly is a "dry" town, but of late whisky and beer have been shipped to it in large quantities. The pastor of the Methodist Church has been a leader in the detective work that showed that the salesroom was in the church. The Justice and the doctor were his friends, but he will push the cases against them. Officials refuse to give the names of the accused white men.

KEPT HATS ON IN CHURCH.

Women of Dr. Wilson's Congregation Overruled His Request.

Some of the women in the congregation of the Rev. Dr. Warren H. Wilson's Arlington Avenue Presbyterian Church, in East New York, declined yesterday to grant a request he had made on the Sunday previous for all of them to remove their hats during the service, especially while he was preaching. He said that there were many in the back seats who couldn't see on account of the women's hats. At the services yesterday only about half of the women had their hats off.

"In earlier times," said Dr. Wilson at the services yesterday, "it was the custom for both the Jewish and Quaker men and women to keep their hats on. The Jews stick to that custom, but the Quakers don't. I see that some of the ladies of my congregation are satisfied to be behind the times, so I'll let the case rest right there."

After all, Usher's the Scotch that made the highball famous.—Adv.

HAMILTON COMING HERE.

Hasn't Heard from the Fowler Committee of the New York Life Yet.

ALBANY, March 11.—Andrew Hamilton, who was formerly chief of the legislative work of the New York Life Insurance Company and who returned last week from Europe to his home in this city, informed the Associated Press to-night that, contrary to reports, he had received no communication of any kind from the Fowler committee, which has been investigating the internal affairs of the New York Life.

"You may say for me," said Mr. Hamilton, "that should I receive any communication from the Fowler committee, it will receive due and courteous consideration."

Mr. Hamilton said further that he expected to go to New York to-morrow. He declined to discuss the purpose of his trip. Mr. Hamilton has been resting quietly at his home here since his return from Europe.

OBSERVATORY STAGE HELD UP

Easterners Robbed on the Way to See Lick Telescope.

SAN JOSE, Cal., March 11.—A Mount Hamilton (Lick Observatory) stage was held up last night at Grand View. Daniel Howard and wife of Brockton, Mass., and other Eastern tourists were on board.

The two highwaymen got $6 in cash, a gold watch, and some jewelry.

LINERS IN COLLISION.

Steamships Badly Damaged by Smash in St. George's Channel.

LIVERPOOL, March 11.—The Leyland Line steamer Indian, Capt. Daniel, from New Orleans, was docked here to-day with her stem broken.

She was in collision off Bardsey Island in St. George's Channel with the Houlder Line steamer Durham, Capt. Hunter, bound from this port to Montevideo. The Durham had a large opening torn in her starboard bow and her first hold is full of water.

PRINCE HENRY TO HEAD NAVY.

Kaiser Intends to Make His Brother the Commander in Chief.

LONDON, Monday, March 12.—The Standard's Berlin correspondent says that Emperor William intends in the course of the Summer to gazette his brother, Prince Henry of Prussia, as Commander in Chief of the entire German fleet on active service.

FIRE SCARE IN HOSPITAL.

But Blaze in a Stable Near by Was Easily Put Out.

Dr. Breed of the J. Hood Wright Hospital discovered fire in a pile of hay in the stable to the west of the hospital at 7 o'clock last night. He immediately sounded the gong for fire drill and at the same time turned in an alarm.

The fire originated somehow in the rear of the stable, where the horse feed is kept. Ambulance Drivers Langdon, Keyes, and Murthy immediately got out the three horses kept there, and shoved the two ambulances out into the alley.

The fire drill was carried out to perfection. A two-inch hose was turned upon the burning hay to such good purpose that by the time the firemen arrived there was nothing for them to do. Drs. Bartram and Solly went through the wards assuring the patients that the fire was in an outhouse, and that there was no danger.

MOB ATTACKS HOSPITAL.

Italians and Austrians Angered Over Isolation of Patients.

GREENSBURG, Penn., March 11.—Infuriated because refused admittance to the Westmoreland Hospital, more than 100 Italians and Austrians stormed the hospital for several hours late last night. The police force and a squad of the State Constabulary were called out, and seven of the rioters were arrested.

Some foreigners came to Greensburg from their camp at Rodebaugh to visit twenty-one men injured in a railroad wreck on Thursday. No visitors have been allowed, and they were told they could not see their friends.

They returned to the camp at Rodebaugh and several hours later the big party appeared on the hospital grounds. Attempts were made to force the doors and missiles were hurled against the building.

Police were summoned and were able to guard the doors until the State constables arrived. Leaders of the men are held on the charges of inciting a riot and disorderly conduct. Three of them carried loaded pistols.

CANADA SLIGHTS CONSULS.

They Are Not Invited to the Governor General's Drawing Room.

OTTAWA, March 11.—The absence of the Consuls General from the Governor General's drawing room last night has caused much comment.

The failure to invite the foreign Consuls is said to have been due to a precedent established at the opening of Parliament, when they were placed far down in the order of precedence, below the Mayor of Ottawa.

HE GAVE A FIRE ALARM.

Obliged an Excited Stranger, and Then the Police Locked Him Up.

An excited man ran up to William Bar of 141 West 116th Street at Seventh Avenue and 126th Street about midnight last night.

"Where's the nearest fire alarm box?" he yelled.

"There it is," replied Bar, pointing to a box across the street.

"Go give the alarm," said the excited man, "there's a big fire around at 158 West 126th Street."

Bar did as directed, and then ran around to see the fire. Three engines, two trucks, the patrol, and one Battalion Chief answered the call. When they got there they found nothing but a cloud of steam from a hot water pipe in a Turkish bath house. Bar admitted that he had given the alarm, so he was locked up in the West 125th Street Station.

No March 12 Blizzard in Sight.

To-day is the eighteenth anniversary of the famous March blizzard of 1888. People who may have been led by the snow squall of Saturday to expect another blizzard on the anniversary will doubtless be pleased to know that nothing worse than rain is predicted for to-day.

OPERATORS REFUSE ALL MINERS ASKED

Propose That Strike Commission Awards Shall Stand.

WANT 3 YEARS MORE OF THEM

Say It's Scarcely Conceivable That "Grave Controversies" Are to be Renewed—Leaders Silent.

The proposals of the United Mine Workers of America for a readjustment of wages and conditions in the anthracite coal fields, as a whole, have been denied by the committee representing the anthracite operators.

As a counter-proposal the operators suggest that the awards made by the Anthracite Coal Strike Commission, the principles upon which they were established by the commission, and the methods established for carrying out their findings and awards, shall be continued for a further term of three years from the first day of April, 1906. The present agreement terminates March 31 of this year.

"At the termination of the strike of 1902," say the operators in a long statement issued yesterday, "in the anthracite regions, by the submission to arbitration in which all parties joined, it was provided that 'all questions at issue between the respective companies and their own employes, whether they belong to a union or not,' should be decided by the Anthracite Strike Commission. Accordingly the award of the commission covered and decided 'all questions at issue between the respective companies and their own employes'; it also provided a 'satisfactory method for the adjustment of grievances which may from time to time arise.'

Ceases to be Final After March 31.

"It is true that the award of the Strike Commission ceases to be absolutely controlling as to future conditions after March 31, 1906, but its decision after protracted investigation, with any other tribunal and with disinterested persons generally, would be final as to the matters involved. So, too, it seems scarcely conceivable that any party to the award of the Strike Commission would seriously seek to renew or retry the very grave controversies which were fully heard by that distinguished tribunal and were decided by it in pursuance of the President's injunction, 'to endeavor to establish the relations between the employers and the wage workers in the anthracite fields on a just and permanent basis, and as far as possible to do away with any causes for the recurrence of such difficulties as those which you have been called upon to settle.'"

The operators say that no new facts have arisen since the award, and that a letter submitted by the Chairman of the Miners' Committee "consists merely of a so-called contract, containing such provisions as seem to the committee to be advantageous. It is based apparently upon the view that the action of the Strike Commission and the Conciliation Board should go for nothing and the questions which they settled should be reopened for further controversy.

Would Make Arbitration Empty.

"If that were so arbitration would be empty and those principles of justice and fairness to each other and to the public which have been thereby established would be completely set at naught. For the reasons already stated this view must be deemed unsound. Upon all facts or issues within their scope the awards already made should control."

The statement of the operators includes the correspondence on the subjects at issue between President John Mitchell of the United Mine Workers, acting for the miners, and George F. Baer, President of the Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Company, for the operators. It discusses the miners' proposals in detail.

The demand of the miners that the operators enter into an agreement with the union is declined, on the ground that the anthracite operators "stand unalterably for the open shop, and again decline to make an agreement with the United Mine Workers of America, an organization controlled by a rival industry."

Of the demand for an eight-hour day the statement says the operators know of no change in conditions that can be used to sustain the renewed demand for a reduction in hours. It declares that the expectation of the Strike Commission that the reduction from ten to nine hours "should not result in any decrease in the output of the mines," has not been realized, and adds: "We might justly say that, with the experience of the past three years, the ten-hour day should be restored; but we are willing to abide by the decision of the commission."

The proposal that a uniform scale of wages be established in the anthracite fields is met by the operators with the reply that this would be impracticable by reason of the varying capacities of the workmen and the varying conditions existing in the region and at the collieries.

Not Willing to Raise Prices.

"We cannot increase wages without advancing the price of coal, and we are not willing to advance the price of coal," is the reply to the demand for a general increase in wages. The request that the operators shall collect from each employe certain stated sums for the support of the mine workers' union is denied on the ground that "as a matter of policy we would not make such an agreement as you request, and as a matter of law we are not permitted to make it."

The operators decline to agree to any change in the Board of Conciliation as established by the Anthracite Coal Strike Commission, taking the ground that the system proposed by the miners would simply involve the creation of a series of minor boards whose decisions might be conflicting, and from which appeals would have to be taken to an arbitrator, thereby creating more delays than now exist.

The complaint of the miners that the Board of Conciliation does not act promptly the operators declare to be not warranted by the facts. The demand for a new sliding wage scale is denied on the ground that the sliding scale fixed by the Anthracite Coal Strike Commission covers practically all the proposals in the proposed new scale.

All Proposals Are Declined.

In conclusion the statement says:

"Your propositions as a whole, therefore, are declined.

"It had been our hope and, we trusted, the public expectation as well, that the effect of the exhaustive investigation and findings of the distinguished citizens who constituted the Anthracite Strike Commission would be to establish a just and permanent adjustment of the relations between the operators and their employes. We therefore regret your suggestions that an entirely new and untried arrangement should be made, which is only to last for one year.

"It is not to the interest of employers or employes, nor of the public to have the mining business as well as the general business and comfort of the people, seriously disturbed by these yearly contentions. Neither can stand these progressive and enormous increases in the cost of production of anthracite coal, followed necessarily by corresponding increases in its price.

"It is peculiarly fortunate, therefore, that existing conditions have all been the result of arbitration by third persons, so that neither party can say that it has not had due consideration. There can be no doubt that the good of all concerned will be served best by adhering to the results thus reached."

The statement is signed by George F. Baer, W. H. Truesdale, J. B. Kerr, David Willcox, Morris Williams, E. B. Thomas, and J. L. Cake.

Demands Covered One Year.

The demands of the mine workers, which were prepared by a committee of seven with John Mitchell as Chairman, were forwarded to President Baer, Chairman of a similar committee representing the anthracite operators, on Feb. 27. They sought to provide for an agreement between the representatives of the United Mine Workers of America and the various anthracite operating companies that certain wages, rates, hours of labor, and conditions of employment should become effective April 1, 1903, and continue in effect until April 1, 1907.

The proposals included the establishment of an eight-hour day for all persons covered by the agreement; a readjusted scale of wages, with an increase of 10 per cent. above the award made by the Strike Commission for contract miners; a new sliding scale, providing for an increase of 1 per cent. in wages for all mine workers affected by the agreement for each increase of 5 cents in the average price of coal in the sizes known as grate, egg, stove, and chestnut sold at or near New York above $4.50 per ton, the rate of compensation in no case to be less than that fixed in the agreement; the recognition of a mine committee from the union with full authority to take up with the officials of a company any dispute or grievance which may arise at a colliery.

In case of a failure of the mine committee and the officials of the company to bring about a settlement, the grievance, under the plan proposed by the miners, would be referred to the officials of the district, who would take the matter up with the General Superintendent or manager of the company for adjustment. In event of the failure of these officers to agree, the complainants then might present the grievances and the company's answer to a Board of Conciliation.

Were to Choose an Arbitrator.

It was proposed that the whole anthracite coal region be divided into three districts, and that the Board of Conciliation be made up of four representatives from each of these districts, two members in each district to be chosen by the miners and two by the operators. In event of the board failing to reach an agreement upon any grievance, it was proposed that the board then select an arbitrator to whom the grievance would be submitted for prompt decision.

The demands also provided that to each employe be given an itemized pay statement at least one day before payday; that a discharged employe has the right to present his grievance in the same manner as provided for in the case of other grievances; that no person be refused employment or in any other way discriminated against on account of membership in any labor organization; that the companies collect from each employe such amounts as might be levied by their organization monthly, the amounts thus collected to be turned over to an authorized committee at the colliery; that all employes who are required to work a safety lamp should receive 10 per cent. extra in addition to the regular wages or prices, and that the violation of any provisions of the agreement, either by the employers or the employes, should not invalidate any of its provisions.

Won't Talk About Refusal.

Neither President Mitchell of the United Mine Workers nor the members of his committee would say anything about the operators' answer to the demands before they left the city yesterday for Indianapolis, to attend the convention of the United Mine Workers which begins there on Thursday. Mitchell accompanied by William Dettry, President, and George Hartlein, Secretary, of Anthracite District No. 7, left on the 10:55 A. M. train at Jersey City for Indianapolis. John Fahy, President of District No. 9, the other member of the nathracite mine workers' committee of seven, will leave this morning. Before he left the Ashland House Mr. Mitchell was asked if he had anything to say as to the prospects of a strike.

"All that I can say is," he replied, "that I wish you good by. I may not be back for a long time."

District President John Fahy and District President W. H. Dettry declined to examine a copy of the operators' statement.

"We have nothing to say about the reply at this time," said President Fahy. "We will discuss that at the proper time."

A Result of President's Letter.

The convention of the United Mine Workers in Indianapolis, as well as the general conference of the bituminous operators, which takes place in that city five days later, was called as a result of the letter written by President Roosevelt to President Mitchell and to President Francis L. Robbins of the Pittsburg Coal Company, requesting both to use every effort to prevent a soft-coal strike. Meantime the principal State associations of soft-coal operators have since then held meetings and decided to refuse the demands of the soft-coal miners for an increase of wages. Before Mr. Robbins received the letter he was in favor of refusing the demands, and after he received it, it is said, he was in favor of granting them.

It is thought that notwithstanding the action of the State associations of soft coal operators, President Roosevelt's letter may influence the decision of the National conference of operators. If a general strike of soft coal miners could be called it would bring out about 300,000 mine workers. A general strike of the anthracite mine workers would involve about 170,000 workers.

It is not thought likely, however, that a general strike of both soft and hard coal miners will be ordered, as in such case there would be no miners at work, and the funds of the union would soon become exhausted, whereas if one section remained working its members could aid by their contributions in supporting the strikers. There are about 50,000 non-union miners who would not strike, even if it was possible to have a National strike of soft coal miners.

Not Much Soft Coal on Hand.

It was learned yesterday that while there is a reserve of from 6,000,000 to 8,000,000 tons of anthracite stored up, due principally to the mildness of the Winter, besides large stocks in the railroad yards, there is not much of a reserve of soft coal. One reason for this is that soft coal deteriorates in quality when it is exposed to the air for some time, and another is that there has been so much competition in that trade that a number of the collieries have been working only one or two days a week.

This overcompetition was one result of the anthracite strike of 1902, which was followed by an unusual demand for soft coal. At that time a large number of small operators opened soft-coal collieries and did a good business while the anthracite strike lasted. After it was settled the demand dropped quickly to the normal rate, until, the soft-coal operators say, there are too many collieries for the demand. During the anthracite strike the wages of the soft-coal men were advanced. Some time ago the wages were cut 5.55 per cent. The demand of the miners is for an increase of 12½ per cent., which would be 7 per cent. more than they were receiving before wages were cut.

Though some persons predict that an anthracite strike would not last long on account of the reserve of coal, yet the strike of 1902, when there was no reserve, lasted five months. Some time ago President Mitchell started a movement to raise a strike fund of $5,000,000. There was good deal of talk about this at first, and money seemed to be coming in, but latterly interest in the matter seemed to have died out.

TALK OF A STRIKE DEAL

To Force an Anthracite War and Benefit Soft Coal Operators.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, March 11.—From an authoritative source it was learned to-night that Baer's committee of the authracite operators had won over the large independent interests in the Western Pennsylvania bituminous field to stand firm with them in resisting every demand of the miners at the coming convention in Indianapolis. Confirming this is another statement to-night, also from an authoritative source, that the independent Western Pennsylvania operators will bolt the Indianapolis convention if the element favoring a compromise has its way.

Desirous of preventing such a split if possible, great pressure is being brought to bear on Francis L. Robbins, Chairman of the Pittsburg Coal Company, who represents the bituminous combine, not to recede from the original stand taken by the operators at the Indianapolis convention. If this effort fails, a meeting of the independents who favor giving no quarter to the miners will be held here before the Indianapolis convention assembles. The independents will even elect their own scales committee in the event they are unable to come to an understanding with the bituminous combine.

Rumor of Strike Agreement.

Besides all this, it is promised that early this week a statement will be given out by Baer's committee showing conclusively that the bituminous combine has entered into a secret arrangement with John Mitchell to force a strike in the anthracite field, to further the interests of the soft-coal men.

This agreement, it was said, takes the form of a promise that the bituminous combine will grant a modified demand of the miners if Mitchell will insist that the anthracite miners come up to the scratch. This the bituminous operators know the anthracite operators will not do, so that if Mitchell carries out his part of the agreement, a strike will then be ordered in the anthracite field.

It is to thwart this agreement that powerful and secret influences have been brought to bear on the independent soft coal operators here.

The most important factor in the ranks of the independent bituminous operators in this district is the Pittsburg-Buffalo Coal Company, whose producing capacity is almost as great as that of the Pittsburg Coal Company. A few days ago it was announced that this company would stand by the Pittsburg Coal Company in an effort to effect a compromise with the miners. To-night it is reported from a source whose authority cannot be questioned that the Pittsburg-Buffalo Company will stand firmly against granting any concessions to the miners. Another independent coal company that will take the same stand is the Westmoreland Coal Company, of which F. R. McGovern is President.

Mr. Robbins Wouldn't Talk.

The announcement to-day that the hard coal operators had issued a statement announcing they would grant no concession to the mine workers, created a sensation among the soft coal miners and operators. President Robbins would not express an opinion as to what this will mean to them. He said the situation is a critical one and any expressions now would prejudice the chances for peace.

The operators of this district are not a unit as to what they will concede. Independent operators opposed to Mr. Robbins have called a meeting in this city for some day this week, probably Wednesday, when they will decide what action they will take at the conference next week in Indianapolis. The great majority of independents, however, both in interest and number, have pledged their support to Mr. Robbins, and will follow his lead whichever way he goes.

There is no doubt that soft coal operators are well satisfied and will remain so, whether the conference results in a settlement or a strike.

At the conference next week the miners will have 1,500 delegates, representing 500,000 miners. The operators will have about 500 members present, representing $500,000,000 invested in coal mining. The miners are determined to force an advance and the men of this district insist on 12 per cent. They will not be satisfied with any compromise. This being the case, the settlement of the difficulty does not present a rosy front.

PHILADELPHIA COUPLE WED HERE AT 3 A. M.

Spent Whole Night Trying to Get Some One to Marry Them.

THEN GOT HOTEL CHAPLAIN

Friends and Cabman Helped—Miss King Was H. A. C. Virden's Fiancee, but Wed W. F. Lever.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Frederick Lever of Philadelphia are registered at the Hotel Algonquin in Forty-fourth Street. They were married yesterday by Father Quinn in the Church of St. Malachi in West Forty-ninth Street, after they had been married before dawn by the Rev. Dr. Warren, non-sectarian hotel chaplain, Dr. Warren, the non-sectarian hotel chaplain, after a wild chase in a hansom cab for somebody who had the power, and knew how, to tie the marriage knot.

The newly made Mrs. Walter Frederick Lever before her marriage was Miss Charlotte Madeline King, daughter of Bernard B. King, who is connected, it is said, with a Philadelphia evening newspaper. She is 22 years old. Both of the young people are Philadelphians, the bridegroom being a son of the late Oswald Lever, the textile machinery manufacturer, whose business the son has managed since the father's death about two years ago.

Mr. Lever is a Protestant, Miss King a Catholic. She was a "co-ed" at Swarthmore College. Her family live at Lansdowne, Penn. About a year ago Mr. Lever went to Swarthmore to a party. There he met Miss King. Current report had it that she was then engaged to be married to Harner A. C. Virden, a son of ex-Recorder John Virden of 313 East Ellen Street, Philadelphia. The engagement with Virden had lasted several years, and was understood to be sanctioned by both families.

From the time Miss King and young Lever met, however, the two were very much attached to each other. But as the young woman's parents were opposed to her marriage with a Protestant, she and her present husband met very seldom.

On Saturday, the story goes, Miss King heard the news at Lansdowne that Mr. Virden was coming to press his suit with her parents. She immediately telephoned Mr. Lever at the textile works in Lehigh Avenue. He advised her to pack a few things, and go right down to Philadelphia. He met her at the station. With him was a friend, Harry Frank Gerkler of 2,407 Lehigh Avenue, who advised the couple to send for Lever's married sister, Mrs. Blanche Minot of 1,207 Sedgeley Place, and talk over the matter with her at the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel.

The four met there, and Mrs. Minot's advice is said to have been for the couple to get on a train for New York and get married. They were both of age, and this advice was taken. The young couple arrived in Jersey City at 10:40 on Saturday night, she with a brand new diamond ring on her finger.

A cabman named Kennedy took them in charge, and to him was confided the mission. Gerkler, who had accompanied the couple, drove with them to St. Patrick's Cathedral, where nobody would marry them because Mr. Lever was a Protestant. Then the cabman suggested the East Thirty-fifth Street Police Station. The Sergeant there suggested Magistrate Steinert, who lives in that vicinity. The Magistrate was not at home; then the cabman, who admitted that he was a stranger in these eastern parts, drove to the West Forty-seventh Street Police Station, where Capt. Daly was talking with two friends—Edward T. Campbell of the Algonquin Hotel and W. K. Carruthers of 439 Eastern Parkway, Brooklyn. They were unanimous in suggesting that the party go to the Montauk Democratic Club, where Alderman Farrell was holding a ball. When Alderman Farrell heard the story he said he would be "tickled to death" to marry them, but as he was quite recently made an Alderman he "would be blasted if he knew the way to go about tying them up."

He suggested Alderman Hahn, however, who lives at 140 West Sixty-eighth Street. Either he didn't live there, or had gone to bed; any way the now desperate young couple could get no answer to repeated rings of the bell. Some friend suggested that they go around to the Arcade, where there were both Democratic and Republican Clubs. They found a Notary there, but that was all, and he "didn't know the service," he said.

It was getting close to 1 o'clock Sunday morning by that time, and the couple were hungry and tired. The bridegroom went to the Empire Hotel and telephoned to every Magistrate in town and every Notary in the district, but without success. The nearest Magistrate was Magistrate Whitman, who lives at 235 West Seventy-sixth Street. They determined to go and wake him up. On the way they stopped at the Marie Antoinette, where they found Capt. Smith, a Notary. He refused point blank to marry them. On they went uptown to Magistrate Whitman. He was not in, or so soundly asleep that he could not be roused.

Then the party, with Campbell and Carruthers tagging along in the hope of seeing them through, went to the Belleclaire, where they hoped to find Milton Roblee, who is himself a notary. Mr. Roblee said he was not sure about marrying them himself, but said he was quite confident that the Rev. Dr. Warren would do it. At this point the bride gave way. She felt that they would go down in legend as something even more romantic than the "Flying Dutchman." Roblee himself got on the telephone and roused Mr. Warren, who responded:

"Yes, send them to my house. I'll tie them up in a jiffy."

Then came another ride in the night to 48 West Ninety-fourth Street, where again misfortune seemed to be in the air. Dr. Warren was long in answering the bell. Mr. Lever was comforting his bride that it would be all right next time, and all were about to drive away when Dr. Warren stuck his head out of an upper window and said:

"Why, is that you? I fell asleep again. Wait a minute and I'll let you in."

At precisely 2:45 o'clock yesterday morning the young couple were at last made man and wife and departed for the Hotel Algonquin, happy in the promise of Dr. Warren that he would see Father Quinn later and make it all right. He saw Father Quinn, who got a special dispensation from Archbishop Farley, with the result that Mr. and Mrs. Lever were married again in St. Malachi's at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon.

Last night the young couple gave a banquet to Gerkler, Carruthers, Campbell, and other good friends. The cabman was not forgotten, either.

EVERYBODY HAD TO PUSH.

How Long Suffering New Yorkers Opened a Westerner's Eyes.

A Western man, who was on the lower east side last night, saw there some of the things which a man does not see in any other large city in the world.

"I was riding on the front platform of one of your antiquated horse cars on Madison Street—and, by the way, what sort of a town is this that it tolerates those soapbox chariots?—and we got to a hill at Chestnut Street," he said. "Chestnut Street is just fifty feet long, but the street signs dignify it just as they do Broadway. The horses stopped on the hill.

"'Outside!' yells the driver, twisting his brakes and opening the door.

"'What's up?' says I.

"'Gotter get out and push,' says he. Then all the men in the crowded car jumped off, braced against the tailboard, and when the driver yelled, 'Giddup!' and applied his gad, we reached the top of the hill.

"Say," concluded the Western man sagaciously, "where d'ye 'spose you'd see that anywhere else, eh?"

MINISTER DEFENDS SUICIDE.

Dr. Townsend Says It Is a Beautiful Act Under Certain Conditions.

JAMESTOWN, N. Y., March 11.—The Rev. Dr. James D. Townsend, formerly a prominent minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, but now a Unitarian, has created attention by his advocacy of suicide under certain conditions.

"When one is hopelessly bedridden," says Dr. Townsend, "and is a burden upon others, it would not be a blasphemous but an infinitely beautiful act for him to sever the remaining strands in the silver cord of life."

TAMED TERROR OF THE BAY.

The Asbury Park Remodeled Is to Throw No More Destructive Seas.

Visitors to the Battery swimming baths on week day afternoons last Summer were often startled to see one side of the structure up ten feet or more while the other sank to a corresponding depth, and then as the whole fabric rolled and rocked great surges roar and crash across the pool.

"That means," one of the regular bathers would explain, "that it is exactly 3:49 o'clock, and that blessed Asbury Park, the Jersey Central steamboat, is going by outside on her bankers' trip full speed run to the Jersey coast resorts."

Occasionally at other hours a tidal wave would burst over the Battery sea wall, sending drenched crowds scurrying across the lawns. That meant that the Asbury Park had passed out of sight up the North River some time before.

The progress of the flyer across the harbor was heralded by a constant serenade of shrieks from tugs with tows, which meant "Slow down and save our hawsers." The old Staten Island ferryboats stopped their paddles and swung to meet the coming billows head on lest their saloons be flooded, while smaller craft fled at full speed from the advancing terror. In one day three court judgments were reported because of vessels sunk or damaged at various ranges by the swell of the Asbury Park.

On board the ship the violent fluctuations of boiler pressure caused by the constant starting and stopping of the engines made all sorts of trouble for the engine room crew, and the firemen had to be fed high to prevent desertions. Green corn and peaches and milk were none too good for the stokers those days. Chief Engineer Daniel Monroe finally telegraphed to Inspector General Uhler at Washington, complaining of conditions, but Mr. Uhler was in the Far West. The telegram became public, and Chief Engineer Pelcher ran out the season.

But all this is changed now, say those who know best, but the Asbury Park's machinery is being remodeled at Philadelphia, where she was built. Her four great steel shell boilers are to give place to featherweight water tube generators, and she will ride about a foot higher in the water. Her trim will be altered so that her stern sits deeper than formerly, doing away with the great bow wave that did most of the mischief.

As one of her officers put it:

"She will come up the coast with as little fuss as a Venetian gondola sculling up the Grand Canal. Her passengers will think they're crossing Central Park lake in a swan boat."

MOTORIST GIVES HIMSELF UP.

Homicide Charge Against F. S. Welch —Denies He Hit Craig Auto.

Frederick S. Welch of Pontiac, Mich., secretary of the Welch Automobile Company of Boston, was held by Coroner McDonald of the Bronx last night, on a charge of homicide growing out of the death of Mrs. Robert Craig, wife of Police Sergeant Craig, who was killed in an automobile accident at Jerome Avenue and 172d Street Friday night.

Detective headquarters of the Bronx say that Welch is the man who was driving the automobile that hit the car in which Mrs. Craig, her husband, and their three children were riding.

Lawyer John E. Brodsky of 29 Chambers Street, counsel for Welch, heard that his client was wanted by the police and told Coroner McDonald yesterday morning that he could produce Welch at any time. The Coroner told Brodsky to summon him at once. In answer to a telegram, Welch came to New York last night and immediately surrendered to the Coroner, who paroled him in the custody of counsel.

Welch denied that his automobile had hit the machine in which the Craig family were riding.

"I saw them at 172d Street and Jerome Avenue," he said, "but didn't stop because I was trying to make a record run to Boston."

Sergt. Craig is still in the Fordham Hospital. The case will be heard this morning.

FOUND DEAD ON PALISADES.

Clothing of Supposed Suicide Is Marked "I. S. Blagdon."

A man supposed to be I. S. Blagdon was found dead with a bullet wound in his right temple and a revolver by his side in Edgewater, N. J., last night. Dr. Bailey and his wife of Sixtieth Street, Manhattan, were walking along the Palisades when they came upon the body, which was upright.

The man was about 55 years old, had a full gray beard and thick hair, was five feet six inches in height and weighed about 130 pounds. He wore a dark striped suit and dark blue overcoat and a derby hat bearing the name "McCue."

On a handkerchief in indelible ink was the name "I. S. Blagdon," and the same name was in both shoes. From this fact, it is inferred that he may have been in some institution. The body was taken to a morgue at Fort Lee.

ARMED NEGRO DEFIES POSSE.

Believed to be a Murderer Who Escaped from Maryland Jail.

YORK, Penn., March 11.—A negro, believed to be Isaac Winder, a murderer, who escaped from jail at Townsend, Md., on Monday, is in a cave in the river hills, and is defying arrest.

Armed with a repeating rifle, he is firing upon all who try to storm the heights. A posse of eight men charged up the hillside to-day, and were met by a hot fire. Thirty-five shots were fired, and two of the posse were injured.

Winder was sentenced to hang March 30, and a reward of $500 is offered for his capture.

THE READING STORING COAL.

Mahanoy District Convention Likely to Declare a Strike.

MAHANOY, Penn., March 11.—At a joint meeting to-day of the officers of the twenty-five locals of the United Mine Workers in the Mahanoy district it was decided that each local should send at least one delegate to the special National convention, which opens next Thursday in Indianapolis.

The Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company is storing soft coal at East Mahanoy Junction for its engines on the Catawissa division. Local coal dealers say they have more orders for delivery by April 1 than they can fill.

Unless the operators grant an eight-hour day and other demands, prominent members of the unions here say that a strike will be declared at the Territory district convention to be held before April 1.

Miners Say They'll Quit Work.

SHAMOKIN, Penn., March 11.—News here to-day that the anthracite coal companies would not grant a single demand of the United Mine Workers was received with surprise and disappointment. Many of the miners declare they will quit work April 1 unless they receive concessions.

WOMAN DEAD IN A FLAT; POLICE DETAIN BOARDER

Williams Denies Hearing Shot That Killed Mrs. Rogers.

HER HUSBAND IN A HOSPITAL

Detectives Find Pass to Visit a Mr. Kirby, Who Is Also in Hospital, Awaiting an Operation.

A bareheaded man rushed to Policeman John H. Feeley in West Eighty-fourth Street at 9:30 o'clock yesterday morning, crying that a woman lay dead in a flat at 154 West Eighty-fourth Street with a bullet wound in her forehead. The man said he was John S. Williams, and told the policeman that the flat where the woman lay had his name on the door bell.

Together they climbed to the fifth floor. There, in the private hall leading from the entrance to the dining room of the flat, a woman in scanty attire lay in a heap on the floor, her head and shoulders in the dining room and the lower part of the body in the hallway. On the dining room floor lay a revolver with one chamber empty.

Williams told the policeman that the name of the dead woman was Mrs. Ruth Rogers, that she was the only occupant of the apartment besides himself, and that her husband, Howard Rogers, was in the Presbyterian Hospital awaiting an operation for appendicitis. He said he had last seen the woman alive the evening before, that he had spent the night in a room within two feet of the spot where her body lay, but had not heard any shot, and had only discovered that the woman was dead on getting up in the morning.

Policeman Feeley summoned an ambulance from Roosevelt Hospital. Dr. Johnston, who responded, said that the woman had been dead several hours, and that the bullet wound in the temple had been the cause of death. Then he notified the Coroners' office and District Attorney Jerome's homicide bureau. He told Williams that he would have to accompany him to the police station.

Capt. Handy at once sent Detectives Devanney and Coleman out on the case. After questioning Williams, who in the meantime had been arrested as a suspicious person, they went to the flat, but could not discover anything to throw light on the woman's death. From other tenants in the apartment house they could learn nothing regarding the occupants of the flat except that they had moved in last Wednesday.

Williams, who gave his age as 21 years, and who is an athletic and well-dressed young man, in the meantime was being closely questioned by Capt. Handy at the police station. He said he was a friend of the dead woman, and an acquaintance of her husband; that he lived in the flat, but could tell the police nothing of the manner in which Mrs. Rogers had come to her death.

"I was home all last night," he said, "with the exception of three-quarters of an hour, which I spent in the neighborhood, returning at about 11:30 o'clock. I saw Mrs. Rogers, who told me she was feeling very depressed. She said that she had had a quarrel with her husband in the hospital during the day. I did not pay much attention to what she said, and went to bed.

"I heard her moving about in the front room for some time and then fell asleep. I know nothing more of what passed until 9.25 o'clock, when on coming out of my room I saw the body of Mrs. Rogers lying in the hallway. I was terribly frightened. My knees knocked together and I trembled like a leaf. After putting on some clothes I ran out and got the policeman."

Williams, who is a demonstrator and salesman employed by an automobile concern at Fifty-ninth Street and Broadway, according to the police, is a son of Joseph M. Williams, a lawyer with an office at 203 Broadway and a home at Glen Ridge, N. J. Mr. Williams called at the police station where his son was a prisoner last night, but was not permitted to see him. Williams himself had expressed great concern as to the effect the news of his arrest would have on his aged father. When put in a cell, he exclaimed:

"What shall I do? This will kill father. Two years ago I was arrested for automobile speeding and locked up for half an hour. Father heard of it and was seriously ill for some time after."

Detective Devanney, on looking through the flat, discovered a pass permitting Mrs. Rogers to visit a "Mr. Kirby" at the Presbyterian Hospital. The detective went over to the hospital and saw him. He learned that Kirby was not the woman's husband, but that he knew her and knew Williams as well.

According to the police Kirby is employed as a correspondence clerk by the Hanover National Bank, and comes from a Baltimore family which is socially prominent. The police say he has been separated from his wife for some time, and before being taken to the hospital occupied an apartment at 156 West Eighty-fourth Street, next door to the house to which the Rogerses moved last week. Before moving there Mrs. Rogers lived at 50 West Sixty-fifth Street. This address is given as the home of George Kirby, a clerk in the last directory. The name on the doorbell at 156 West Eighty-fourth Street is W. George Kirby.

"Kirby told me," said the detective, "that he had had no quarrel with the woman, whom he knew well; that he never had seen a revolver in her flat, and that he knew of no reason why she should commit suicide. A surgeon who had been present at the interview between Kirby and the woman said that she was in the best of spirits and asserted positively that there had been no quarrel.

"Kirby's father, I understand, is the head of the Kirby Lumber Company in Baltimore, and is a man of wealth and social prominence. His mother is in the city, to be near her son during his illness."

Neither the Coroner, the police, nor Assistant District Attorney Cardozo, who is investigating the death for the District Attorney's office, had made up their minds last night whether it was a case of suicide or whether the woman had come to her death by the hand of somebody else. None of the neighbors in the house heard any struggle or a shot fired.

Late last night the detectives investigating the case ran across a Miss Nellie Pierrot, who is a cloak model and a friend of the dead woman and of Williams. She said she had seen Mrs. Rogers on Saturday evening.

"According to this woaman," said Detective Devanney, "Mrs. Rogers told her that night that she was despondent because of a disappointment in a love affair, and that she did not care whether she lived or died."

Near the body of the dead woman the Coroner found a big doll and a toy piano, which it was said were toys belonging to a little daughter whom Mrs. Rogers had put out to board with a family in Mount Vernon.

MRS. N. L. ZABRISKIE DEAD.

Daughter of Edward Barber Morgan, Founder of Express Companies.

Special to The New York Times.

AUGUSTA, Ga., March 11.—Mrs. N. L. Zabriskie of Aurora, N. Y., died here last evening from a paralytic attack, which was first suffered a few weeks after her arrival here early in the season. Her husband, son Alonzo, daughter-in-law, and grand children were by her bedside.

Mrs. Zabriskie was the daughter of Edward Barber Morgan, an original shareholder in THE NEW YORK TIMES and a founder of the Wells and Fargo and United States Express Companies. She was also an aunt of Edward Vernon Morgan, who has been in the diplomatic service of the Government since 1899.

Her Diamond Heirloom Lost.

Mrs. Frederick Griffith of 49 East Sixty-fourth Street is mourning the loss of a breast pin of rubies, diamonds, and pearls. She wore it when she went downtown to meet her husband yesterday afternoon, and didn't have it when she returned, but she scorns the idea that she was robbed. The pin is an heirloom, and a reward of $100 has been offered for its return.

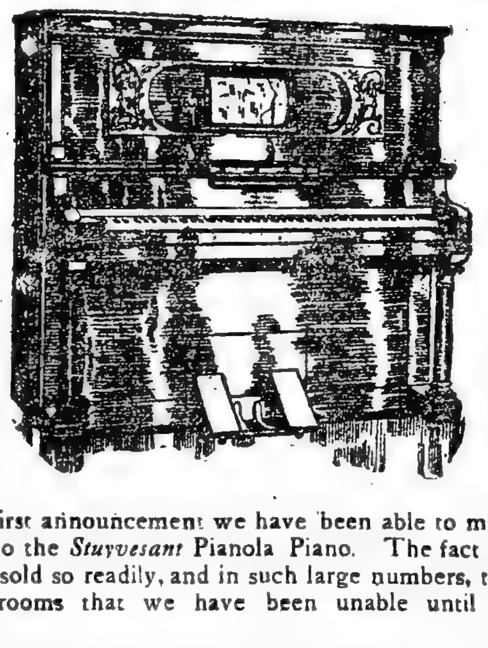
First Special Announcement of

The Stuyvesant Pianola Piano

Price $550

Sold on easy monthly payments, if preferred



THIS is the first announcement we have been able to make calling specific attention to the Stuyvesant Pianola Piano. The fact is that this instrument has sold so readily, and in such large numbers, to regular callers at our warerooms that we have been unable until now to show an assortment.

Notwithstanding the low price at which it is sold, it contains the genuine Pianola (the "Standard Piano-player of the World"—the one Piano-player that has won the approval of the greatest artists in the musical world) and the Metrostyle—being in these respects the same as our $1,000 instrument.

The piano part of this instrument is of an excellent quality—it has a full, rich tone, and every detail of construction is made with the most scrupulous care. The Stuyvesant Piano is not a new-comer for popular favor, but has been made since 1886. It has its own factory in New York City, and in addition to its own competent organization, it has the benefit of the co-operation and aid of the Aeolian Company's board of experts—a corps of musical and mechanical experts such as no other house in the musical industry has hitherto undertaken to establish.

Three years ago the Aeolian Company, desiring to complete its line of Pianola Pianos, secured control of the Stuyvesant Piano Company. It is believed not only by the manufacturers, but by some of the best authorities in the piano trade, that the Stuyvesant is by far the best piano at its price that the market affords. The fact that the Aeolian Company has selected it as one of four pianos to be made in the form of Pianola Pianos will be conclusive evidence of its real merit in the minds of many people.

Our easy purchase plan on the Stuyvesant Pianola Piano should interest everyone who has had in mind the purchase of an instrument of this type, but has deferred action on account of price. We give immediate possession on a very moderate down payment and the balance can be paid off while you are enjoying the instrument. Send for full particulars of this plan and illustrated catalog.

Important: The Stuyvesant Pianola Piano contains the Metrostyle Pianola. There are many other Piano-players of varying degrees of merit, but the genuine Pianola is obtainable only in the pianos made and controlled by the Aeolian Co.

MARCH 1906

REACTIONARY ORATORS URGE MURDER OF WITTE

Foes of Reform Also Openly Incite the Slaying of Jews.

HAVE BUREAUCRATS' SUPPORT

Anti-Semitic Proclamation Printed in Official Type—Liberals Lose the Control of the Zemstvos.

ST. PETERSBURG, March 11.—Some of the reactionary organizations are pushing the agitation against the radical elements to a dangerous point. To-day the "League of the Russian People" held a service in the Alexandrovsky Monastery to celebrate the manifesto of March 8, regarding it as a victory for the old régime. Later, at the Horse Guard menage, the fighting society of the same organization held a public meeting and listened to inflammatory speeches by Dr. Dubrovin and Prof. Nicholsky, two extremist leaders. The orators openly summoned their followers, the "Black Hundreds," to kill the Jews and hang Count Witte.

Prince Mestchersky, editor of the Grazhdanin, who supports Witte, charges the bureaucracy with having sympathy with the Court clique which is opposing the plans of the Cabinet and with inciting class hatred and strikes, with the purpose of making the National Assembly a failure. He quotes Prof. Nicholsky as declaring that friends of the autocracy should see that a number of Revolutionaries are elected, in order to furnish an excuse for dispersing the National Assembly with bayonets.

As proof of the complicity of the bureaurcy Prince Mestchersky reproduces a proclamation against the Jews which, he asserts, was printed in the typography of the Police Master with the approval of the censor and was widely distributed. The proclamation, which is addressed to workmen and peasants, declares that the authors of Russia's misfortunes are the Jews, who throughout the world hate Russia and want to rob the peasants of their land and make them their slaves, "unfrock the priests, and turn the churches into Jewish stables and pig styes."

The proclamation also asserts that the Armenians, English, and Germans want to destroy Russia and divide the country among its enemies. The proclamation calls Count Witte a supporter of the Jews and the chief enemy of the country, and summons the faithful wherever they find Jews to "tear the Christ-sellers to pieces."

Prince Mestchersky calls attention to the unrest among the peasants and warns the bureaucracy that it is playing a desperate game in arraying class against class. "If to-day," he says, "the peasants are incited to slaughter millions of Jews, the Armenians to-morrow may be seized with the mania of murder, and massacres may occur everywhere without regard to race or class."

Another important development in the political situation has been the success of what is called the reactionary element in wresting the control of the Zemstvos from the hands of the Liberals. Although the Zemstvos are not elected, they heretofore have been in the forefront of the fight against the old régime.

The issue was raised upon a demand made by the federal administration that doctors, teachers, agricultural experts, and other employes of Zemstvos suspected of revolutionary tendencies be discharged. At Moscow the Liberals made a hard fight to protect the employes, but the Reactionaries under the leadership of M. Guchkoff were victorious, whereupon thirty Liberals resigned.

At Tula the struggle was so bitter that two challenges to duels were exchanged, one of them between Prince Dolgorukoff and Prince Urussoff, the latter heading the Reactionaries. Neither duel was fought, but the Reactionaries won. The entire staff of the sanitary department of the Zemstvo was discharged and the department was closed.

A similar contest is being waged in the St. Petersburg Douma, and has already resulted in the resignation of M. Petrunkevich, President of the Medical Commission.

TO PURIFY CITY WATER.

Mount Kisco to Vote on New York's Plan to Dispose of Sewage.

Special to The New York Times.

MOUNT KISCO, N. Y., March 11.—The City of New York has made an alluring proposal to the villages of the northern part of Westchester County which drain their sewage into the streams now forming a part of the city's water supply. The offer is to build basins and disposal works for the reception and the cremation of the sewage at its own expense if these villages will construct sewer systems to connect with them.

The proposal of the city will be submitted to the taxpayers of Mount Kisco at an election on March 20. There has been a great deal of complaint about the pollution of the city's water at this point. It has been asserted several times that outbreaks of typhoid fever, scarlet fever, diphtheria, and other diseases in New York have been due to the sewage of the village, which drains into the Mount Kisco River, from which it is carried to the Croton Watershed. Only a few months ago Mayor McClellan made a tour of the watershed in an automobile to see what could be done.

It is said that the offer to take care of the sewage was suggested by him. The Board of Estimate has appropriated $60,000 to carry out the city's part of the agreement if the plan is ratified at the election. The proposal is being advocated by Isaac W. Turner, the New York lodging house magnate, who has been renominated for Village President. If the plan is adopted the cost to Mount Kisco will be about $39,000 for the construction of the sewers. It is said to be the intention of the people of other villages in Northern Westchester County to take advantage of the offer as soon as they can incorporate.

THE SNORER SHIFTED.

His Fellow-Policemen Made an Appeal in Their Nightclothes.

Policeman Henry S. Simoney of the East 104th Street Station cannot help it that he snores. Besides, he is rotund. When he snores his great chest heaves and even his bed groans. Simoney cannot understand why the sixteen men who sleep with him in the station will not sympathize, instead of throwing things at him, especially as that is not a permanent cure.

Last night his sixteen mates could stand it no longer. They sent down a committee of three to Sergt. Northrup to ask that Simoney sleep somewhere else. The policemen were in their nightrobes as they approached the desk and saluted. The Sergeant listened to their tale of woe and then said that he, too, had heard the sounds of the sleeping Simoney.

Then Capt. Capten came in. Finding out what the trouble was, he sent for the snorer and had him take a bed on the third floor, with a warning that he must not make too much noise up there, either.

Nothing more had been heard from Simoney up to an early hour this morning.

TWO CANOEISTS DROWNED.

Three Are Upset in Connecticut River—One Escapes.

WETHERSFIELD, Conn., March 11.—William A. Moore, aged twenty-four, of Thompsonville, and Arthur S. Prentice, also twenty-four years old, of Gilead, were drowned in the Connecticut River to-day near Wetherfield Cove by the overturning of a canoe. Edward Madden of Florence, Mass., the third member of the party, managed to reach the shore. The bodies of the drowned men have not been recovered.

CASTELMENARDO IN JAIL.

Accused by His American Wife—Noted for Her Adventurous Career.

GENOA, March 11.—On the complaint of his wife, who was Miss Edith Van Buren of New York, and whose brother is the American Consul at Nice, Count di Castelmenardo was to-day convicted of infidelity and sentenced to three months' imprisonment and to pay the costs of the action.

The Count has taken an appeal from the verdict of the court.

The Countess di Castelmenardo is a daughter of the late Gen. Thomas Van Buren and a great-grandniece of President Martin Van Buren. She is also a granddaughter of Joseph P. Shefield and a niece of Mrs. W. W. Phelps. She became noted for her adventurous disposition and her travels. She traveled around the world several times, and was probably better known in Europe than in America, being a familiar figure at Europe's prominent watering places.

In 1898 she made a trip to the Klondike with Mrs. Roswell D. Hitchcock, widow of Commander Hitchcock, United States Navy. In 1899 she returned to the East, but shortly after her return here she again sailed for Europe, and in July, 1900, was married in London to Count Vessichio Gurgo di Castelmenardo. She had become acquainted with the Count at Nice a few months before, being introduced by her brother, Harold Van Buren, the American Consul at Nice.

Count di Castelmenardo is the son of the Duchess Tortora Berayda di Belvedere Giuditta Gurga de Castelmenardo of Naples.

In December, 1900, the Count and Countess came to America and made their home in the Van Buren homestead, in Teaneck, N. J., with the bride's mother, who died shortly afterward. When Mrs. Van Buren died she left $200,000 and the family estate to her daughter.

The Countess again decided to go abroad to reside and went back to Europe in 1901. Then she and the Count took up their residence in Italy. In the Summer of 1902, while they were in Paris, the Sheriff of Hackensack, N. J., levied on the Teaneck estate of the Countess to enforce the payment of a grocery bill for $300 owed to Christopher & Mundorf of Englewood, N. J. When the Countess heard of it she declared that the money to pay the bill had been "held out" by some one, but she cabled sufficient money to cover the grocer's bill and the legal expenses attached to it, and the order of attachment against her New Jersey estate was vacated.

J. S. BLACK HAS VANISHED.

Demented Syracuse Man Eluded Brother-in-Law at Railroad Station.

Up to a late hour last night H. Z. Allen of Syracuse had heard nothing of his brother-in-law, Jerome S. Black, who disappeared Saturday afternoon in the crowd in the Grand Central Station. A general alarm has been sent out for him here through Police Headquarters, and Mr. Black's family has caused his description to be sent out pretty generally over the country. Mr. Allen fears that his brother-in-law, whom he had just found after a week's search, may have wandered away to his death.

Mr. Black lived at 806 Ostrom Avenue, Syracuse. A week ago he disappeared from home. Last Friday the authorities of Bellevue Hospital telegraphed that Mr. Black was there in a demented condition. Mr. Allen came for him. He learned that his brother-in-law had come to New York, had suffered some little accident that bruised his face, had been sent to St. Vincent's Hospital, and transferred thence to Bellevue. Mr. Allen was not able to locate the hotel where Mr. Black had registered and where he had left his valise.

Saturday afternoon Mr. Allen and Mr. Black stood waiting to enter a gate at the Grand Central Station to take a Syracuse train. Mr. Allen turned his head a moment. When he looked around Mr. Black was gone. A gate leading to a local train stood open. Mr. Allen thought that possibly his brother-in-law had slipped through that. The police were not able to learn of any accident to any one in the railway yards, nor did the railroad authorities know of any one who had been put off the local train. Mr. Black hadn't a cent with him, Mr. Allen said last night.

The missing man is 30 years old, 5 feet 8 inches tall, 135 pounds in weight, with blue eyes, light hair, and fair complexion. He wore a brown suit, black derby hat, and a brown tie, and carried a gold watch and chain with a silver cigar cutter attached. His condition seemed to be due, Mr. Allen said last night, to a gradual degeneration of the brain, the case resembling paresis. The missing man's face still shows the abrasions about his nose and mouth which he received in the accident here last week.

INTRUDER HIDDEN IN BED.

Scares a 14-Year-Old Boy and Escapes as Neighbors Gather.

C. J. Altman and his wife of 58 East Ninety-first Street went out for a walk yesterday afternoon, leaving their fourteen-year-old son Harold in charge of his younger brother and sister in the house. While they were out some one rang the front doorbell. Harold ran upstairs to summon Mrs. Altman's maid to answer it.

"Beatrice," he cried, rapping at the girl's door, "come down and answer the bell."

There was no answer. After rapping again he quietly opened the door and slipped into the room. Seeing a form covered up, he tiptoed to the head of the bed and, pulling down the covering, yelled: "Booh!"

The "Booh," however, got only half across his lips, for the first thing that he saw when he pulled the cover was a ferocious-looking black mustache. The boy screamed in terror, while a strange man jumped out of bed and ran toward him.

"Get out of here!" the intruder growled.

Harold ran down the steps with a yell, and, getting his brother and sister, the three went out on the pavement. The neighbors were roused by their cries, and the police of the East Eighty-eighth Street Station were notified. They found tha tthe man, who is supposed to have been a burglar, had already escaped through Andrew Carnegie's adjoining stable yard.

A QUAKER MEETING NURSERY.

Philadelphia Friends Plan One So Mothers May Attend Worship.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, March 11.—To have a nursery connected with the regular meeting for worship is the plan to be adopted by the Friends at Seventeenth Street and Girard Avenue. The idea is to increase the attendance of mothers with small children.

While the older children and adult Friends are contemplating spiritual matters, the small folk will be permitted to play in a room in the school building which adjoins the meeting house.

For a long time it has been a concern with Friends that worshippers were disturbed by babies and restless children in the meeting. Not a few mothers also give as the excuse for their absence from meetings that they must stay at home to care for their children.

The responsibility of managing the nursery has been undertaken by members of the junior conference class of the First Day School.

1,100 DEAD IN MINE; RESCUERS CUT OFF

Worst Fears Regarding the French Disaster Realized.

SOLDIERS GUARD MORTUARY

Cabinet Ministers Trying to Comfort the Stricken Families—Chamber to be Asked for $100,000.

PARIS, March 11.—The worst fears as to the enormity of the mine disaster in the Courrières district of Pas-de-Calais yesterday morning have been realized. The death list stands at 1,100. The tragedy has brought sorrow to 6,000, fathers, mothers, wives, and children.

The last previous great mine disaster in France occurred in 1885, when 293 persons were killed and 80 injured; but that and all others sink into insignificance before Courrières.

The vast mortuary camp is under military guard, 400 soldiers having arrived there to assist in holding in check the crowds of distracted mourners. For a time hope had been held out to the people that tappings on pipes by the imprisoned men had been heard, but gradually this hope vanished, and the people demanded admission to see the bodies, and even threatened to break through the cordon of troops, who had the greatest difficulty in keeping the crowds from the pit. One man named Sylvestre succeeded in entering the mine, but he never returned. It is believed that he groped about inside until he was overcome by the gases and perished.

It is reported that a rescue party numbering forty has been cut off by the caving in of one of the galleries.

Minister of Public Works Gauthier, Minister of the Interior Dubief, and the Secretary of President Fallières remain on the ground, endeavoring to comfort the families of the miners. President Fallières has given $2,000 to aid in relief measures. The Ministry will add a sum to this, and the Chamber of Deputies will be asked to vote $100,000 for the purpose of alleviating the distress.

Ministers Gauthier and Dubief have received complete details of the catastrophe from M. Lavaurs, the Director of the mine. His voice was choked with emotion as he spoke.

"Of 1,800 miners who were down in the pits when the explosion occurred," he said, "673 were working in Pit 4, 482 were in Pit 3, 571 in Pit 2, and the remainder in Pit 10.

"Those rescued from Pit 4 numbered 190; from Pit 3 fifteen escaped through Pit 11; 490 came up from Pit 2, and 74 from Pit 10. A number of these were injured, and some of them have died since. At the present moment over 1,000 men remain imprisoned."

Another Director declared that the imprisoned men numbered 1,100.

Minister Dubief inquired: "Have you still any hope?" To this the Director replied: "No; I believe all of them are dead." This was whispered into the ear of the Minister, in order that the words might not be overheard by the pale-faced people who stood anxiously about the mine building, waiting for an official statement.

Then the Ministers listened to a graphic picture of the scene in the mine by Leon Cerf, one of the men rescued, who is still suffering from the effects of his experience. He said:

"I was working with a gang when the explosion occurred. The foreman immediately shouted for us to follow him, and, dashing into a recess in the gallery, we were followed by a blast of poisonous gases, which, however, rushed by without affecting us. We remained there for eight hours, when, feeling that suffocation was gradually coming upon us, we attempted to escape. We crawled in single file toward the shaft, but several of the men dropped dead on the way, including my son and the foreman. I carried my nephew on my back for forty minutes, and succeeded in saving him. It took us four hours to reach the shaft."

For the time being the mine building has been transformed into a mortuary chamber, and all about in it lie the carbonized and almost unrecognizable bodies of miners which were taken there as they were brought up from the mine. Stricken relatives arrive at the mine building from time to time, searching for missing members of their families, and indescribable scenes of grief occur as women recognize loved ones.

Heartrending scenes, too, are witnessed about the mouth of Pit 4, where, in the presence of Ministers Dubief and Gauthier, the bands of rescuers are continually descending and returning with bodies. Women with children in their arms attempt to break through the cordon of troops, which form a lane through which the body bearers proceed to the mortuary chamber. In nearly every case the body is terribly lacerated. Only one-half of the bodies recovered have been identified.

Despite the danger incurred, the volunteers, who include a number of those who were successful in escaping at the time of the explosion, do not hesitate to descend the shaft. Some of them have been down more than a dozen times. One of them, after having brought up fourteen bodies, was suffocated on his fifteenth attempt, and it is feared that other fatalities among the volunteers will follow, as the air in the mines is still impregnated with noxious gases.

A number of the men engaged in rescue work have already been brought to the surface unconscious, and, as they were driven to their homes in closed carriages, women followed and broke the windows, suspecting that bodies were being carried away.

Several miners have come up from Pit 11, which is connected with Pit 3. They effected their escape by means of a ladder, and as they came from the mouth of the pit they appeared to be bordering on madness. All of them were more or less injured. When asked about their comrades one of them said:

"It is horrible! All of them are dead."

A young miner who escaped from Pit 4, where about 500 men remain, said:

"I was working about fifty feet from the shaft. Suddenly I felt a puff of hot gas and started toward the shaft. I was half suffocated and was unable to advance further because of the fumes. Finally, however, I succeeded in reaching the cage and came up in it. After the blast I neither heard nor saw more of my comrades, and I believe that all in the gallery in which I was working are dead."

Another miner said:

"It is indescribable. Everything was demolished or has fallen in. I saw bodies lying in piles. My son is below."

One rescuer asserted that he heard voices in the mine, and others found two horses still living. This gives rise to hope that some of the men are still living.

Replying to an inquiry as to whether hope remained for the finding of more men alive in the mine, an engineer who had been down the shaft said:

"It is scarcely possible. The state of the galleries is such that clearing them will be a difficult task, while the flames were so fierce that many of the victims must have been reduced to ashes."

It is thought hardly possible that many bodies will be recovered to-morrow owing to the difficulty of reaching the bottom pits, the runners on which the cages descend being broken or bent.

The shaft of Pit 3 is completely blocked, and the authorities are considering the advisability of dropping a heavy mass of metal down it in order to clear it and thus enable them to descend and learn the worst.

MINISTER NAMED IN SUIT.

Mr. Hunt, Cited as Co-respondent, Will Fight for Mrs. Bassett.

The congregation of the Noble Street Presbyterian Church, in Greenpoint, were greatly shocked yesterday when they read in a Brooklyn newspaper that their pastor, the Rev. E. Lawrence Hunt, who has been the pastor of the church for four months, had been named as a co-respondent in a divorce suit. The suit was started in Washington, D. C., by Charles C. Bassett, a clerk in the Geological Survey, against his wife, Mrs. Fannie Rice Bassett.

The Rev. Mr. Hunt is single, about forty years old, and lives with his mother at 140 Noble Street, next to the church. He was formerly the pastor of the Washington Heights Presbyterian Church in the National capital. He resigned from that pulpit several months ago to take charge of the Greenpoint church. He was indorsed for the pastorate by several prominent New York churchmen.

The Rev. Mr. Hunt at the parsonage last evening declared he would see Mrs. Bassett through all her troubles. He then gave out this statement:

"This is a case where from the very beginning I have kept a dignified silence, and now that it has been taken in the courts in such a way as to maliciously cause notoriety and public scandal, my best judgment is that a dignified silence is the best course to pursue. But since it has appeared in a sensational form, I may, in justice to others who are deeply affected by this, make this statement.

"Regarding the case itself I shall not enter into great details, but ought to say that Mrs. Bassett, on account of the treatment she had received at the hands of her husband, had determined to live with him no more and had left him; that he tried in vain to induce her to return; that she had proposed a separation, and that there had been, through her brothers and others, efforts made to make terms about the children; that she had finally moved to Nebraska, and there brought suit for divorce; that a summons was sent to Washington to Mr. Bassett with a copy of the petition; that an effort was made to serve the papers on him, they being handed him with a statement as to what they were; that he refused to receive them, and two days later filed this petition against his wife for divorce, naming me as corespondent. His animosity against me was based upon the reasons that I have helped Mrs. Bassett to escape from her treatment by him, which endangered her life."

Six members of the session of Mr. Hunt's church gave out a statement last night expressing entire confidence that he was innocent of all charges made in the divorce suit.

FOR ONLY FOUR NEW JUSTICES

Bar Association Committee Says New York Doesn't Need Seven.

The Bar Association will meet to-morrow night to hear and act on the report of the Judiciary Committee. This committee will report that only four of the seven additional Supreme Court Justices allowed to the First Department by the constitutional amendment are necessary.

The committee will also suggest that the Second Department, the Brooklyn district, be not divided that another district may be created, as the committee does not think another district is needed there.

A third recommendation will be that additional justices be provided only for the First Department, the Second Department (Brooklyn), and the Eighth Department (Buffalo), and not in others.

SARRIEN STILL NEGOTIATING.

Constitution of New French Cabinet May Be Announced To-day.

PARIS, March 11.—The efforts of M. Sarrien to form a Cabinet have not yet been concluded.

Several changes have been made since yesterday in the proposed make-up of the Cabinet. M. Sarrien will take the Premiership and the Ministry of Justice; M. Bourgeois or M. Clemenceau will take the Ministry of the Interior; M. Briand will be the Minister of Instruction, M. Poincaré Minister of Finance, and MM. Thomson, Ruau, and Etienne will retain respectively the portfolios of Marine, Agriculture, and War held by them in the Rouvier Cabinet.

A definite arrangement of the Cabinet is expected to-morrow.

NATIVE PRISON TO BE BUILT

Foreigners' Treatment of Prisoners Described as Pitiless—Developments of Mixed Court Affair.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES
Special Cable. Copyright, 1906.

SHANGHAI, March 11.—A long memorial from the Board of Punishments with reference to the Mixed Court affair approves the imperial rescript supporting the Nanking Viceroy, entirely ignores the fact that the administration of the settlement at Shanghai has been definitely vested in the foreign community for fifty years, asserts the right of the Chinese officials to the independent conduct of matters relating to the trial and imprisonment of native offenders, and orders the immediate construction of a native prison in place of the municipal jail, although the latter is always open to inspection, and an influential Chinese committee recently admitted that there was no fault to find with it.

The memorial describes the foreigners' treatment of prisoners as pitilessly severe.

As a natural result of the Government's attitude a Chinese patriotic society publicly commends the Magistrates whose action led to the riots as deserving of the warmest gratitude of their countrymen.

JEROME SILBERSTEIN.

District Attorney Is Now the Proud Godfather of Emanuel's Second.

The stork brought another little Silberstein to the household of Lawyer Emanuel Silberstein at 419 East Houston Street eight days ago. Yesterday, with great ceremony, they named the newcomer Jerome, after the District Attorney.

William Travers Jerome, the proud godfather, was not present. On his behalf Samuel Singer and Anna Silberstein, betrothed, stood sponsors for the little Silberstein. The mother went around among the guests the happiest of all.

"My ambition is to be the mother of seven," she said with pride—"all boys."

There was a dinner, of course. The guests came in groups, and the tables were cleared and set over and over again.

"Let joy be unconfined!" Father Silberstein kept repeating, filling glasses anew. "I am the mortal savior of my race—the race of Silbersteins!"

Silberstein's life was switched into new channels by an accident. He ran afoul of a Grand Street car as a boy and lost an arm.

From the damages he got out of the company and the contributions of his parents he studied law and passed through the New York Law School with honors. Since then he has been doing very well indeed.

SMOKE OVERCAME FIREMAN.

Rourke Was Helping Save Children from an East Broadway Blaze.

Edward Rourke, a fireman attached to Engine Company No. 9, was overcome by smoke, and James Cooney, attached to Fire Patrol No. 1, was injured in a fire which did $5,000 damage in the basement of the building at 102 East Broadway last night. Rourke was overcome while assisting in the rescue of some children from the upper floors of the building. Cooney was cut about the face by broken glass. Both returned to duty after being attended by Dr. Smith of Gouverneur Hospital.

The building is a four-story brick tenement, the basement and ground floor of which are occupied by J. Shafran & Son, dealers in notions. Policeman Foley discovered smoke issuing from the basement and turned in an alarm. Then he rushed upstairs to arouse occupants of the upper floors. The smoke drove a dozen or more of the sixty occupants of the tenements to the roof. All the others, with the exception of twelve or fifteen children, managed to find their way through the smoke to the street.

These children remained in the rooms and their panic-stricken faces could be seen pressed against the glass of the windows when the firemen arrived. Ladders were quickly hoisted, and the firemen took them out.

WANTS NEW FIRE HOUSES.

Commissioner O'Brien Would Put Six in Long Island City.

Fire Commissioner O'Brien wants to build six new fire houses in Long Island City and form four new fire companies there.

There are eight companies in Long Island City at present. It is estimated that the six new buildings and the four new sites needed would cost about $250,000.

POLICEMAN HUNG ON.

Dismounted Bluecoat Kept on Working After He Left His Own Horse.

John Pappi, a driver for a caterer, was steering a two-horse wagon in Sixth Avenue at Fifty-seventh Street yesterday afternoon when the animals were scared by an automobile and ran away. The horses took the wagon so fast toward Seventh Avenue that Pappi fell out. He wasn't hurt.

At Seventh Avenue, Thomas Mooney, a mounted policeman, raced to the side of the running horses as they turned south. He caught one of them by the bridle, but he could not bring them to a stop there. He held his seat on his horse as far as Fifty-fourth Street. He still held to the bridle of one of the runaways when he was pulled off. At Fiftieth Street they came to a halt. Mooney was bruised. He went home.

ELECTION REFORM BILL READY FOR LAWMAKERS

Prepared by Association Headed by William M. Ivins.

MARK FOR EACH CANDIDATE

Separate Set of Men to Count Votes—No Papers to be Destroyed.

ALBANY, March 11.—A bill embodying important amendments to the election law will be introduced to-morrow night by Assemblyman Prentice of New York. A provisional draft of the bill has already been introduced by Senator Elsberg, but the Prentice bill will be in the form which its sponsors desire.

This measure is the work of the Election Laws Improvement Association, organized in New York City soon after the last election, with William M. Ivins as President and representatives of various civic organizations as members. A summary, prepared by Travis H. Whitney, legislative agent of the New York Citizens' Union, given out here to-night, sets forth the important amendments proposed.

The bill provides for the Australian ballot as used by Massachusetts since 1888, with the addition of the party emblem. The ballot is also sub-divided into "voting sections" by perforated lines, each office constituting a "voting section." The purpose of this is to permit each section to be separately torn off and canvassed, thus limiting invalidating marks and the controversies arising out of the counting of ballots, to a single section, instead of involving the entire ballot as now. The voter marks the name of each candidate for whom he wishes to vote. The only "straight party column" ballot provided for is a separate ballot for Electors in Presidential elections.

Local candidates would be separated from State candidates, a separate ballot being provided for each class.

"The bill meets the need for a better class of election officers," says Mr. Whitney, "by requiring them to pass a civil service examination. In cities the examination must be under the direction of the local Civil Service Commission, but in accordance with rules adopted by the State Civil Service Commission. Elsewhere the examinations are held under the direction of the State Commission. This provision does not interfere with the constitutional requirement of the choice of the election officers equally from the two parties.

One of the most radical amendments provided is that in cities of the first class the Inspectors and tally clerks who have served during the day shall be superseded at the close of the polls by an entirely fresh set of officers.

"The purpose of this," says Mr. Whitney, "is to attract a more expert class of election officers to the work of canvassing and counting the votes than is now possible. At present the law requires the election officers to be absent from business on the registration day preceding election as well as on election day, and this requirement prevents the parties from enlisting the services of high-grade men as a rule.

"It is thought that if opportunity is given for the service of men who will be required to be present only during the latter part of the election day, it will be possible to get the service of men who are accustomed to figuring and handling books, for the purposes of making the canvass and count."

Under the bill no ballots or papers that have been used in the election are to be destroyed. Even the spoiled ballots are retained, so that the entire work of the election can be checked up from the original papers if necessary.

The number of required signatures for independent nominations is cut down, and a number of cases of nominations which the existing law does not provide for at all are covered.

"The association has drafted another bill," says Mr. Whitney, "which was introduced some days ago by Senator Elsberg, providing for a recount. The provisions of the existing law prevent any judicial review of the vote except by quo warranto proceedings, and in effect amount to a denial of a review of the courts. The new bill provides for a correct and exceedingly simple recanvass of the ballots cast, all undisputed ballots being checked up by a commissioner appointed by the court, only disputed ballots coming before the court."

SAYS SOCIALISTS MUST ARM.

Ex-Mayor of Haverhill Wants Them to Fight to Save Moyer and Haywood.

An appeal was made at yesterday's meeting of the Central Federated Union by John C. Chase, former Socialist Mayor of Haverhill, Mass., for co-operation with the Socialists in protesting against the punishment of President Moyer, Secretary Haywood, and other officers of the Western Federation of Miners, who were arrested in connection with a number of murders, including the assassination of ex-Gov. Steunenberg of Idaho. These men are now in jail in Boise City.

Capitalists and corporations were denounced impartially by Chase. He said that the unions at a meeting last Thursday decided on a perpetual agitation on behalf of the imprisoned men and asked the central body to appoint two delegates to attend the first conference to push along the agitation which will begin in the Grand Central Palace to-morrow. Referring to Moyer and Haywood, he said:

"If these two men are hanged, and if any man in this body, or any other body of the kind, is not then willing to shoulder a gun and fight for his class, he is a coward."

Shouts of applause arose from the Socialists and the request was granted. It was harder to get delegates to attend the conference. After several of them had declined, Delegate Abrahams of the Franklin Association of Pressmen's Helpers and Delegate Modest of Cigarmakers' Union No. 90, both Socialists, said they would go.

THREW STONES AND WAS SHOT

A Trenton Man Seriously Wounded by an Angry Italian.

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, March 11.—William H. West of this city was shot to-day by an Italian named Savanion Queisdewvian at Wilburtha, a suburb, and is seriously injured. The Italian is held, pending the result of West's injuries.

West, with four other men, was walking along the river road near a shanty used by railroad workmen, and idly throwing stones. One of the missiles fell near the Italian. He immediately drew a revolver from his pocket and fired four shots, one of them lodging in West's side. It is believed that the wounded man will recover.

Fugitive Caught After Months.

KITTANNING, Penn., March 11.—Michael Brennan, said to be wanted in connection with the murder of a Lieutenant of police of Birmingham, Ala., has been arrested and placed in jail here on requisition papers from the Governor of Alabama. The papers were issued last September.

KEPT MRS. PATTERSON.

Doctors Didn't Allow Her to Appear in Answer to Insanity Charge.

Mrs. Virginia Knox Patterson, who was escorted to Bellevue Hospital on Saturday afternoon by her husband, Joseph N. Patterson, of 11 East Ninth Street, assisted by two policemen, was not taken to the Jefferson Market Court yesterday for formal commitment to the psychopathic ward at Bellevue. She was in no condition to be moved. Meanwhile, she is held in Bellevue on the strength of a warrant sworn out by her husband charging insanity. It is planned to take her to court to-day for formal commitment if she is calm enough.

Some twenty years ago Virginia Knox was a beautiful Pittsburg heiress, who was much sought in New York and Paris society. In Paris in 1888 she met an Italian, Giuseppe Carussi, who had married the Countess di Montercole, and after the death of his first wife at the age of seventeen had claimed her title. The Count di Montercole, as he called himself, won her hand.

After two weeks she had to appeal to a hotel manager for protection against her husband, whom she charged with subjecting her to extraordinary cruelties. After two months she left him, obtaining a divorce three years later. She re-entered society at the age of twenty, and married her present husband a few years later. The Count died insane.

WHAT ACCOUNTANTS ASK.

Superintendency of the Insurance Department and Places in It.

The Insurance Committee of the American Association of Public Accountants, which demands a reorganization of the State Insurance Department to include the appointment of public accountants and the issuance of new forms of report, issued a statement yesterday outlining legislation which will be urged at Albany and upon which hearings will soon be given.

The association wants the passage of an act providing that annual insurance reports shall be submitted each year on Jan. 1, or within four instead of two months thereafter; that the statement shall be certified by a public accountant, and that each company reporting shall make a statement of its income and expenditures for the twelve months preceding. The association also wants a law providing that at the annual meeting of the policy holders of insurance companies a public accountant shall be elected to audit the accounts of the company. It also wants amendments to the proposed insurance bill to require that the Superintendent of Insurance shall be a public accountant, and that one of his deputies and one of his examiners shall be an accountant.

URGES JEWISH EMIGRATION.

Rabbi in Russia Says Relief Contributions Have Gone to the Cossacks.

Raphael Mordecai Barishanski, a rabbi in the town of Homel, Russia, has written a letter to the editor of the Jewish Morning Journal in this city, asking that means be devised in New York to assist the emigration of Jews from Russia, preferably to America and Australia. Rabbi Barishanski says that contributions of money made thus far to relieve Jews in Russia have gone to the Cossacks.

"It appears to me," he says, "that there can come no good of your committee's efforts to help your unfortunate brethren in Russia as long as you leave them here. With the money that you send us you are only providing new plunder for the Cossacks and hooligans. The earth in Russia is ready to open its mouth at any moment and swallow us altogether with everything we possess. It will certainly accomplish this, and hereafter we will be plundered and slaughtered according to law, the enactments of the Douma.

"With the money you send us you should devise means to deliver us from our position and point out some refuge so that your tortured brethren should free themselves from their tormentors and settle in a free country. Then you would do us a real service, and not throw your money to the wind. I heard personally from thousands of Jews that as soon as they obtain the means to flee from the bloody country they will go to America and Australia and will be satisfied with the hardest labor as long as they are able to breathe freely. Give us some real help that you may deliver us from disgrace and death."

There are 60,000 Jews in Homel, the scene of two massacres in the last year.

STOKES FOR 8-HOUR BILL.

But Labor Commissioner Sherman Thinks It Is Impracticable.

Copies of correspondence between J. G. Phelps Stokes and Labor Commissioner Sherman regarding the eight-hour bill which the Central Federated Union is trying to have passed by the Legislature were read at yesterday's meeting of the union. They were sent by Mr. Stokes, who, in an explanatory letter, said he was surprised to learn that Commissioner Sherman was against the bill.

One of the letters from Commissioner Sherman to Mr. Stokes stated that, in the writer's opinion, the bill was impracticable. It provided, for example, that teamsters could leave their teams in the streets, if their eight-hour workday was through, before the trip was over. He also thought the forfeiture clause, by which a contractor who violated the law could have his contract annulled, was too drastic.

Mr. Stokes's reply said that no teamster would have so little sense of decency as to leave his team in the street under any circumstances.

A resolution was carried by the Union favoring the eight-hour bill as it stands. Another resolution was passed directing the Secretary to write to Commissioner Sherman and to the Executive Committee of the Workingmen's State Federation, notifying them that if the bill was defeated they would be held responsible by the central body.

An Old Couple Asphyxiated.

George Boxold, 65 years old, and his wife, Mary Boxold, 63 years old, were asphyxiated by illuminating gas while they slept in their home in the basement of the house at 171 Prospect Street, Brooklyn, yesterday. The couple were found dead in bed by another tenant in the house. The gas jet in the room was found partly open.

NEW PROBATION LAWS ASKED BY COMMISSION

Report on Treatment of Convicts Made to the Governor.

NEW LEGISLATION URGED

Boards in Cities and Officers in Counties—Supervision by State Board of Charities.

ALBANY, March 11.—The report of the State Probation Commission to the Governor, made public here to-night, contains the results of an exhaustive study of the operation throughout this State of the probation system of dealing with convicts.

This commission was created by the last Legislature. It consisted of Homer Folks, Frederic Almy, Samuel J. Barrows, Dennis McCarthy, Charles F. McKeen, Marcus Stine, Howard S. Gans, Lawrence Veiller, Caroline McPhail Bergen, Roger P. Clark, Howard R. Bayne, Frances A. Kellor, Jane L. Armstrong, and Alice L. Woodbridge.

Its recommendations include the establishment of unpaid probation commissions, to be appointed by the Mayors, of seven members in New York City and five in Buffalo and the cities of the second class. These appointments are to be made in the cities of the first class, at discretion, from lists submitted by the charitable societies. These commissions would appoint and supervise the work of the actual probation officers, both salaried and volunteer.

In all counties not containing a city of the first or second class the County Judge would appoint a probation officer.

As to the actual operation of the system, the commission recommends:

That in releasing an offender on probation the court shall not be required to determine the terms and conditions under which such offender is released, but shall be permitted to do so.

That whenever an offender is released under a suspended sentence he shall be place under the supervision of a probation officer.

That the minimum term of probationary oversight of children, unless sooner terminated by reason of misbehavior, shall be three months.

That the minimum term of probationary oversight of adults, unless sooner terminated by reason of misconduct, shall be three months, except in the case of felonies, in which cases the minimum term of probationary oversight shall be one year.

That the word "custody" in the existing statutes in relation to the power of probation officers concerning probationers under their charge be eliminated, and the word "supervision" be substituted therefor.

That whenever a person under probation shall remove to another city or county within the State, the probation officer under whose supervision he was placed shall report the facts to the State Board of Charities; and that Board shall report to the appropriate probation officer of the city or county concerned, the latter to continue the supervision during the remainder of the term.

That whenever a person is discharged from probation, there shall be entered in the record of the court a statement as to whether such person observed the terms and conditions of his release and as to his general conduct during such term of probation.

That the State Board of Charities shall be charged with the general supervision of probation work throughout the State.

Bills to carry these suggestions into effect will be introduced this week in the Legislature.

NEW DEMOCRACY IN JERSEY.

Convention Called to Reorganize the Party on "Progressive" Lines.

New Jersey Democrats have issued a call for a convention, to be held in the New Auditorium at Newark on March 20, to reorganize the party in that State. The call is in the nature of a manifesto setting forth the principles of a "Progressive Democracy," and is signed by leading Democrats both of the "old school" and "new school."

Among the principles laid down as a basis for the new movement are Governmental and municipal ownership of public utilities, equal taxation, laws to prevent election frauds by the improper use of money, election of United States Senators by popular vote, a better primary law, direct legislation through initiative and referendum provisions, and revision of the tariff laws.

These coincide, in part, with the basic principles of the Colby movement, and overlap, to an extent, the recent formal declaration issued by the New Jersey Democratic League.

The circular is signed by Charles C. Black of Jersey City, who was defeated for Governor at the last election; Simon P. Northrup, President of the Democratic League; State Senator James F. Minturn of Hudson County, ex-Judge Lambert of Newark, and many others.

WIFE CHARGES BROKER WITH STEALING A RING

Muir's Lawyers Say She's Just Trying to Get Him Back.

HE IS 33 AND SHE IS 50

Mrs. Muir Tells Court Officers She Gave Him $64,000 and Can't Get It Back.

George Allen Muir, a broker, of 24 Broad Street, was arraigned in the West Side Court yesterday on the charge of having stolen a diamond ring. He was held in $2,000 bail by Magistrate Whitman for a hearing to-morrow.

The formal accuser is Edward Fuller, stepson of Muir and only ten years his junior. But the real accuser is Mrs. Muir, whose property the ring in question is alleged to be. Fuller's mother and Muir separated only six months after their marriage. The Muirs are well-to-do people, and the father and mother of the man accused of grand larceny are said not to have looked with approval on his marriage to the then Mrs. Fuller.

Mrs. Fuller, originally from Chicago, is well-to-do also and is about 50 years old. Her husband is about 33 years of age, and he and his lawyers contend that the charge of grand larceny against him is only an effort on the part of his wife to get him back.

The Muirs were married in June, 1903. According to Mr. Hess of the law firm of Osborne, Hess & Churchill, counsel for Mr. Muir, Mrs. Muir started proceedings against her husband soon after he left her, charging him with stealing a ring and $8,000 of her money. Then she began suit against her husband's mother for alienating his affections. None of these cases was pressed, said Mr. Hess, ad the husband never returned to his wife.

"Mrs. Muir was from Chicago," said Mr. Hess. "She was first married to a Mr. Wood or a Mr. Woodward, I don't know which. He died, and she married Fuller. There was a divorce, and she then married Mr. Muir."

Mrs. Muir said in court that she had had detectives hunting for her husband for a long time. His arrest was brought about by strategy on Saturday. It is said that private detectives informed Mrs. Muir on that day that her husband was to be in town. She wrote him asking him to meet her. They met in the Carnegie Hall restaurant, and the detectives did the rest.

Mr. Muir was taken to the West Forty-seventh Street Station Saturday night where his mother furnished a bond for him. His lawyers say that there is no ground for the charge of larceny. On the other hand, the wife told Detective Sergeant Judge and two of the court officers that she gave Muir $64,000 to put away for her when they were married, and that when she tried to get him to let her have $62,000 to pay on a house that she had bought in this city she failed to obtain it.

The charge of ring theft is made by the stepson, who is stopping at the Hotel Lexington. He says that he came here from Chicago to press the case.

The alleged two-year pursuit of the husband is scoffed at by the Muirs. Mr. Muir says that he has been in New Rochelle, in Massachusetts, and in this city all the time.

New Methodist Church in Brooklyn.

The handsome new edifice of St. Mark's Methodist Episcopal Church, at Ocean Avenue and Beverly Road, Brooklyn, was formally dedicated yesterday, special services being held in the morning and afternoon. Bishop David H. Moore of Portland, Oregon, preached the dedicatory sermon, and addresses were made by Gen. Horatio C. King, W. P. Sandford, and the Rev. Dr. J. H. Willey, the pastor. The new church cost $110,000.

Vain Search for 12-Year-Old Girl.

Fannie Gilton, 12 years old, has been missing from her home, 113 West 115th Street, since Wednesday afternoon. Her mother sent her out to the butcher's with 50 cents late in the afternoon. She has not been seen since. Even chimneys and cellars in the block have since been examined for fear that the girl has been murdered.

Opening Days in Spring Millinery.

WE announce the formal "first view days" in Spring Millinery for To-day, To-morrow, Wednesday and Thursday of this week.

No woman ever came to one of our Millinery Openings without being glad of it. We promise you, the reader of this, if you are a woman, that you will find hats here that will pay you for coming, whatever the distance, even if you do no more than look around the rooms and take notes of hat-effects for future use.

Our leadership in millinery—perfectly well recognized by thousands of New York women—was never better shown than in this display. We expect you to judge us by it, and have prepared it accordingly.

The Factor of Common Sense.

Our showings are, above everything else, beautiful and, next to that, practical. These hats are not made expressly for show purposes. They are hats made to wear and made to sell. Therefore the prices will interest you quite as much as the beauty displayed will delight you.

We shall make no effort to describe the showing. It wouldn't be much of a showing if we could describe it in type. It is the largest we have ever made, and easily the best in its variety, its excellence, and in the wonderful display of novelty, originality, and beauty at medium prices.

An Outline of the Price Range.

Eighteen of the most famous milliners of Paris have sent us some seventy of the most beautiful hats that ever came out of a French bandbox. They are priced at $25, $35, and $50 each.

At lower prices, $10 to $18.50—we show nearly five hundred hats of our own production, which we ask you to compare with the Paris hats in style and beauty. These hats cover the entire range of Spring fashion in shape and color, and well represent the millinery mastership which has long been accorded us in hats at these medium figures.

In Street Hats, priced from $3.45 to $8.75, we show about two hundred styles. You will find in this assortment every new idea that the designers have evolved for Spring, represented in every material and every tint that is correct or allowable for Springtime wear.

And the Unparalleled Showing at $5.

And, finally, the astonishing and special showing of 3,000 hats at $5—a showing that in itself would mark us millinery leaders of the city if there was not another hat displayed. At this one price we show more than three thousand hats—each a little masterpiece of millinery art; no two alike.

Trimmings and Shapes.

Special attention is also due to the comprehensive collection of Flowers and of Hat shapes—in each of which we have given you everything there is to give.

This is the largest, best and most interesting millinery exhibit of the Spring season.

We Ask Your Attendance and Your Judgment.

Three More Examples of Value-Giving Supremacy in Women's Suits.

We know—because we've looked—that there isn't a store in New York that matches these suits even at the REGULAR prices. We hope you will look for yourself. We are convincing from a hundred to three hundred women every day that we absolutely LEAD the town in giving tasteful and correct styles at medium prices. If you haven't yet learned that fact yourself, test us by these:

A suit of beautiful quality panama—black, navy, violet, rose and light gray. The Eton shows front and back panels, with braid embroidery, fancy vest effect, stylish girdle—skirt the new circular gored model—with pleats back and front, braid trimmed at bottom. A suit for which you would expect to pay $30.00. Our special price to-day........ 22.50

An all silk lined suit of beautiful quality voile, tailor made, with pleated Eton jacket, braid trimmed—and shows the new Tuxedo vest of moire—high braid trimmed girdle—gored circular skirt—pleats back and front—folds at bottom—rich silk drop is made with fancy flounce; colors are black, blue, gray and violet. For to-day and to-morrow only, at the special price of........ 25.00

A handsome suit of imported voile, black, navy, gray, tan, reseda—made with stylish pleated bolero, outlined with wide band of material and two rows of ruching braid, finished fancy vest effect, three-quarter sleeve, pretty cuff. Skirt is the circular effect model with box pleats and folds at bottom—handsome drop skirt, with deep ruffle—a suit you cannot match for less than $40.00. Our special price. 29.50
(Siegel Cooper Store, 2d Floor, Front, 13th St.)

Spring Waists.

An aggregation of new and beautiful styles that simply commands the attention of every well-dressed woman in New York and neighboring territory.

Styles are unusually pretty and they're so varied that every taste can easily be suited.

Every waist possesses individuality, grace, and a charm entirely its own.

At $1.00—A clever new lingerie model of white lawn—entire front designed with hemstitched Val. lace insertings, pin tucks, and side plaits—collar and cuffs trimmed with lace insertings and edge.

At $1.95—A handsome white batiste lingerie short sleeve model—front daintily designed and trimmed with lace insertings and Swiss embroidery—back, collar and sleeves tucked and lace trimmed.

At $2.50—A charming white lawn model—entire front elaborately trimmed—designed with two embroidered panels, Val. lace insertings and Swiss embroidery. The back, collar and demi-sleeve of this beautiful model are also tucked and lace trimmed.

Black Lawn Waists.

We are showing three very new, neat and desirable black lawn waists. All are open front, tailored models. Two of these styles are effectively embroidered. Especially priced at $1.10, $1.50 and $1.75.
(Siegel Cooper Store, 2d Floor, Centre, 18th St.)

Undermuslins.

Some new arrivals showing some new ideas in the effective use of lace and embroidery. Delightfully dainty and specially priced.

MARCH 1906

FINE, CABLES JOHNSTON, ANSWERING ROOSEVELT

Who Asked How Wounded Lieutenant Was After Mt. Dajo Fight.

NOT ALL PRAISE FOR WOOD

Officials Believe His Policy Caused the Needless Killing of Moro Women and Children.

WASHINGTON, March 11.—The President to-day sent the following cablegram to Lieut. Gordon Johnston, formerly a lieutenant in the President's regiment, who was badly wounded in the battle of Mount Dajo and was blown from the ridge of the crater by the force of exploding shells:

Washington, D. C., March 10, 1906.
Lieut. Gordon Johnston, Manila:
How are you?
THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

To-day the President received the following reply:

Zamboanga,
President, Washington:
Fine, thanks.
JOHNSTON.

The War Department received no additional reports from Manila to-day with regard to the killing of 600 Moros in their fort. It is not expected that anything further will be received until the arrival of Gen. Wood in Manila on his return from Jolo. He is understood to be now on his way.

Army officers familiar with the conditions in the Island of Jolo, and with the circumstances under which fighting such as that of last Tuesday and Wednesday is carried on there, do not attempt to conceal their apprehension that the full reports will confirm those received that women and children were among the Moros killed. They say the habit of the Moros in fighting makes such a result practically inevitable.

The Moros killed in Fort Dajo were members of predatory bands that had been robbing and pillaging their own people on the Island of Jolo for a long time, and the ordinary police forces of the island had been unable to restrain them. In order to maintain peaceful conditions it became necessary to administer a severe lesson.

Gen. Wood seems to have taken his time and made his preparations deliberately. It is explained that as soon as his forces took the field the Moros, according to their regular custom, retired to their fort, taking their women and children with them. Surrender is a phase of warfare with which they are unfamiliar, and the result of a fight is always the practical extermination of one side or the other.

Under these circumstances there is a disposition among officials here to criticise Gen. Wood for bringing on such a struggle. It is contended that he might have accomplished enough by laying siege to the fort and starving the Moros into submission. It is pointed out that their position on the top of a mountain made such an operation on Gen. Wood's part quite feasible.

There also has been no little criticism to-day of President Roosevelt's message of congratulation to Gen. Wood, on the ground that it was entirely uncalled for, and that the achievement of the Commander in Chief in the Philippines was not such as to shed any additional lustre on the flag. The fight at Fort Dajo is compared frequently with that at Wounded Knee, in January, 1891, when the Sioux ghost dancers were shot down, squaws and children with the braves.

MANILA, March 12.—Following are the names of privates who were killed in the recent attack on Moro outlaws on Mount Dajo:

Barsley Box, Lexington, Okla.
Edward Kilgore, Woodbourne, Penn.
Thomas Harrison, Sand Hill, Tenn.
John Tomaszewski, Kingston, Penn.
Charles Banks, Cassonburn, England.
Louis Herr, Ontario, Canada.
William Kelley, Paterson, N. J.
Robert Bastian, Sattoum, Germany.
Leo Calve, Milner, Idaho.
Charles Hoffner, unknown.
John Pfeil, Akron, Ohio.
Karl Bailey, Bogue Chitto, Miss.
James Hines, Bridgeport, Conn.
Walter Hagedorn, Kingston, N. Y.
Henry Wriedt, Williamsport, N. Y.
Paul De Burk, Spokane, Wash.
John Shuler, Donnelly, Ky.

FOR A $100,000 LIBRARY.

Washington and Lee Alumni Ask Subscriptions to a Fund.

A committee of the Alumni of Washington and Lee University at Lexington, Va., including Dr. G. Bolling Lee of 150 West Forty-seventh Street, a grandson of the late Gen. Robert E. Lee, is soliciting subscriptions for a $100,000 library to be erected at the university. Andrew Carnegie says he will donate half of the fund if the other half is raised by members of the Alumni. The sum of $10,000 has already been subscribed to the general fund. The Washington and Lee University already has a library, but it is inadequate.

Washington and Lee was founded by George Washington at the close of the Revolutionary War, when it was named Washington University. At the end of the civil war Gen. Lee became its President, and when he died the name was changed to include his. Lee was buried in the memorial chapel of the university.

LOWERING CREED FENCES.

Jewish, Universalist, and Presbyterian Clergymen Discuss the Matter.

The Rev. Dr. Joseph Silverman, rabbi of Temple Emanu-El, spoke from the pulpit of the Universalist Church of the Divine Paternity, in Central Park West, last evening. The service was under the auspices of the New York State Conference of Religion, and the general trend of the remarks by all the theologians of various creeds who occupied the pulpit was that the fences dividing the various sects from one another should be lowered, if not torn down.

Dr. Silverman's subject was, "The Common Basis of All Religions." He expressed the fear that there could never be a universal religion because God himself had divided the races of men.

"The Caucasian, the Mongolian, the African will always flock together," he went on. "They will flock together just as animals of the same species flock together. And they will select the belief which is best suited to their spiritual constitutions."

Dr. Silverman went on to show that differences of religion had often arisen through differences in the interpretation of mere words. "In many instances it arises merely from the natural proneness to hero-worship which characterizes men," he added, "and men often flock around a man who holds a certain creed to be correct because they admire the man.

"My suggestion would be to number the churches just as we do the schools—No. 1, No. 2, No. 3, and so on. A man could then enter No. 1. If the particular theology preached there did not suit him he could enter No. 2, and so on until he found the one that suited him and he could worship there. For the basic idea of most religions is the same. No religion has a monopoly of all the truth."

Dr. James M. Whiton, chairman of the conference, explained the purpose of the organization, which, he said, was to emphasize the points in the various creeds upon which agreement could be reached, rather than those on which agreement was impossible.

Dr. Frank O. Hall, pastor of the Church of the Divine Paternity, and Dr. Charles P. Fagnani of the Union Theological Seminary also spoke.

EXHAUSTING THE IRON SUPPLY

Likely to be a Shortage Within a Century—Plenty of Coal.

WASHINGTON, March 11.—Consul General Mason of Paris writes at length on the world's supply of coal and iron. It will surprise a great many to learn that we are likely to run short in iron inside of a single century if we keep up the present rate of consumption. As a matter of fact, we are more likely to increase the consumption than we are to reduce it.

The world has only 10,000,000,000 tons of iron ore available. Of these Germany has twice as many tons as the United States. Russia and France each has 400,000,000 tons more than this country. Our consumption is placed at 35,000,000, which is more than a third of the world's total consumption. Mr. Mason suggests the propriety of taking up the problem of selling our coal to Europe in exchange for iron. He writes:

"Several months ago the Parliament of Sweden, then in session, adopted a resolution calling for a report showing the extent of the known deposits of iron in Sweden and other countries, and the rate at which such deposits are being consumed by the steadily expanding iron and steel industries of the world. The report was made by the chief of the Swedish Geological Survey, together with comments by several other experts, and the whole published in the Technische Zeitschrift. While there has been some dissent as to the exactness of certain details, the report has been accepted as substantially accurate. Assuming, therefore, as true the claim of geological science that the extent of workable iron ore beds is known to within a margin of possible error not exceeding 5 per cent., the Swedish report, which is based upon the most authoritative information, has naturally attracted world-wide attention.

"Condensed to their smallest compass the statistics of the report give the following comparative exhibit of the whole known amount of workable iron ore yet available in the several iron-producing countries. The present annual output of ore, and the amount of ore actually consumed by each is as follows, in tons:

	Annual Consumption.
United States	35,000,000
Great Britain	20,000,000
Germany	24,000,000
Spain	1,000,000
Russia and Finland	6,000,000
France	8,000,000
Sweden	1,000,000
Austria-Hungary	4,000,000
Other countries	1,000,000
Total	100,000,000

Country.	Workable Deposits.	Annual Output.
United States	1,100,000,000	35,000,000
Great Britain	1,000,000,000	14,000,000
Germany	2,200,000,000	21,000,000
Spain	500,000,000	8,000,000
Russia and Finland	1,500,000,000	4,000,000
France	1,500,000,000	6,000,000
Sweden	1,000,000,000	4,000,000
Austria-Hungary	1,200,000,000	3,000,000
Other countries	....	5,000,000
Total	10,000,000,000	100,000,000

"While it is probable that the foregoing statement does not take into adequate account the undeveloped ore deposits in Utah and Alabama, its teachings are nevertheless obvious and impressive. Of the world's workable iron-ore deposits, as at present known, the United States possesses only about one-ninth, and at the present rate of consumption the entire supply will be exhausted within the present century.

"It is well known that the high-class ores of the lake district in America will, at the present rate of consumption, be exhausted within less than fifty years. The Mesaba deposits, with the present annual output of 12,000,000 tons or thereabout, will not outlast twenty-five years, and it requires only a simple calculation to demonstrate that a continued yearly consumption of 35,000,000 tons of ore by the iron and steel industries of the United States will, within the lifetime of many persons now living, eat away entirely the 1,100,000,000 tons which, according to the report above cited, constitute our country's entire workable supply as at present known.

"Inasmuch, therefore, as the United State possesses but about one-ninth of the world's ore deposit and yet consumes more than one-third of the total annual output from all countries, the conclusion is direct and unavoidable that the future economic policy of American ironmasters should be to secure by all practical means the largest possible ore supply from the mines of other countries.

"It is in respect to quantity and quality of coal supply that the advantage of North America over European countries is decisive and overwhelming. Whatever may be the facts concerning ores, the known coal measures of the United States render their fuel supply secure, abundant, and of excellent quality for centuries to come. There are hundreds of thousands of acres of gas and coking coal of high quality in the Appalachian region—to say nothing of other fields—which have as yet been hardly scratched by the pick and drill of the miner. New coal deposits of greater or less extent and value are being discovered from year to year. With what is now known the present enormous annual output of 280,000,000 tons of bituminous coal can be maintained for hundreds of years without exhausting the available supply.

"In Europe, on the contrary, the years of adequate coal provision are definitely numbered. In England experts estimate the duration of the workable coal measures to be from sixty to one hundred years. Germany has a somewhat longer lease of industrial life dependent on coal supply, but already the subject is so acute that a heavy contract for the delivery of German coal to France, for iron and steel works, is understood to have been canceled recently at heavy loss to the sellers, because, as it is definitely understood, the Imperial Government objected to the depletion of the national coal supply for the benefit of neighboring countries.

"France has native coal for a generation or more, but the mines are deepening, the cost of production is gradually increasing, and economists are looking with growing apprehension to the future. Twenty-five or at most thirty years hence, the question of an adequate fuel supply will be a serious problem for France."

OCEAN TRAVELERS.

Engineer of the Culebra Cut Among Arrivals from Panama.

Among the arrivals on the American liner Philadelphia from Southampton yesterday were:

Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Boyd, Mrs. Stephen H. Curran, Mrs. Matthew Dolan, Mr. and Mrs. John Duffy, Mr. and Mrs. G. H. Everett, Mr. and Mrs. Horace Goldin, Mr. and Mrs. T. F. J. Hannan, F. C. Havemeyer, Jr., Augustus Jay, Mr. and Mrs. William Lennox, Arthur O. McBirney, Mrs. C. P. McCully, Miss A. R. Monette, Miss Myre Sawyer, William M. Vanderhoof, Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Waggener, and R. H. Lloyd.

On the Hamburg-American liner Patricia from Hamburg, also in yesterday, arrived:

Benjamin Fitch, Dr. John W. Price, Jr., William M. Wilkinson, A. K. Christian, and Dr. Friedrich Elias.

Some of the arrivals from Colon on the Panama were:

Lieut. Angel of the Isthmian Canal police, Dr. E. Wheeler, R. G. Packard, R. P. McCormack, A. S. Koons, and W. E. Dauchey, engineer of the Culebra cut.

Some of the arrivals on the Atlantic Transport liner Minnetonka, in from London last night, were:

Henry Austin, Charles Emberly, Capt. Ernest Fleet, Stanley Routledge, and A. G. Underwood.

Dr. Parkhurst's Portrait Shown.

An oil painting of the Rev. Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst was shown in the vestry of the Madison Square Presbyterian Church yesterday. It is the work of Joel Nott Allen, and has just been brought back from Philadelphia, where it was on exhibition. It was painted for a friend of the clergyman.

NATIONAL FIGHT NOW ON DISHONEST SCALES

Henry Theobald May Try to Get Federal Assistance.

SOME REMARKABLE CARDS

Court Rules Against Firm That Advertised Scales Giving Dealers a 3 Per Cent. Rake-Off.

With fresh vigor the work of cleaning the country of dishonest scales has been taken up again. Not long ago there were startling disclosures of the extent to which the New York public was cheated of its pennies by these scales, but now the movement to wipe the cheating scales out threatens to assume National proportions. Henry Theobald of Toledo is leading the campaign for honest scales. Having already begun with New York and several large cities, he may try to get Federal aid, at least in the form of official encouragement.

A new ordinance regarding weights and measures is being prepared for the Board of Aldermen in this city. The secret of the damage done to purchasers by cheating scales lies in the "money value column" of the scales. There is the regular weight column and the "money value column"; the first tells the weight and the other calculates the amount of money to be paid for the cheese, beef, or whatever the article may be. The makers of this kind of scales do not tamper with the weight colmun, but they make the other so that the seller gets the benefit on all fractions.

Mr. Theobald has submitted an ordinance to Patrick Derry, Chief of the city's Department of Weights and Measures, and has asked Mr. Derry to introduce it, or the substance of it, in the Board of Aldermen. Here is the clause which relates to "money value" scales:

> It shall be unlawful to use for measuring the money value of merchandise for sale any computing scale or weighing or measuring device which gives any weight, quantity, or measure of a commodity for a value indicated by its computing or indicating attachment other than the mathematically correct weight, quantity, or measure of said commodity for the said value indicated. Any computing or weighing device which is equipped with a money value computing or indicating attachment shall be provided, for each price per pound at which it computes, with a sufficient number of money value figures, computations, or gradations as to indicate with certainty the money value of any commodity that may be computed on the same, and shall not be so constructed by the omission of money value figures as to make the reading of the money values uncertain, and thereby facilitate the perpetration of fraud.

A great many of the scale-making concerns are in Ohio, and there has been a hot fight going on in that State between one company which declares in favor of honest scales and another which is accused of dishonesty. The United States Circuit Court of Appeals in a decision says of the latter company:

"A demonstration of the operation of the scale before us at the hearing confirms the belief that by its use the purchaser never gains, but the seller generally, possibly not always, and that this gain would be as much as or more than 3 per cent., apparently considerably more."

The concern whose scales were thus condemned had actually sent out an advertising circular promising shopkeepers that they could sell at cost, and still make 3 per cent. profit. This is the way the circular read:

> CAN YOU DO THIS
> On your Scale?
> Buy 20 lbs. of pork loins at 9c. per lb., retail them to your trade at the same price, and get your money back? ? ? ?
> WE CAN
> on our scale and make you
> 3% PROFIT BESIDES.
> If your business amounts to $10 a day in sales, we can earn you 30c. in fractions you don't get now. Thirty cents a day means you buy this scale every 180 days. How long have you been in business? How many have you bought in that time? Think of it—
> ONE SCALE LOST EVERY SIX MOS.
> Let our man prove this.

Naturally, it was a great temptation to small grocers and butchers, many of them probably struggling to keep their heads above water, to take advantage of an offer like this. They could sell at cost and yet make profits! But these circulars were not pleasing to the competitors of the company that made the offer. One of the competitors issued a card entitled "A Timely Warning." This was sent to the butcher trade; it warned the butcher that the sell-at-cost-and-make-a-profit scales were dishonest, and said that no butcher, when the facts were brought home to him, could conscientiously use them.

As long as these circulars went only to the butcher trade no complaint of them was heard, but another circular, called "A Shameless Admission," was produced. This was distributed from house to house to consumers. It showed pictures of the dishonest scales and pointed out the fraudulent features.

Then company No. 1 went to court and got an injunction forbidding company No. 2 to spread these circulars. The United States Circuit Court issued the injunction, but the Circuit Court of Appeals has dissolved the injunction. Now company No. 2 will begin once again to send out the circulars "A Timely Warning" and "A Shameless Admission."

It seems that Inspectors of Weights and Measures in New York have confined their attention only to the regular weight column. When they found that all right they passed the scales as honest and went on their way. Mr. Theobald, himself connected with a big scale factory, wants the Inspectors to pay attention to the money value column as well. And it is to this end that he has submitted the ordinance to Mr. Derry. With it he sent a letter asking Mr. Derry's aid in detecting crimes and punishing those guilty of making and using dishonest scales.

On the reverse side of the alluring circular entitled "Can You Do This?" was a picture of the scale that was to do the wonders, with this accompanying remark: "It gives the butcher the odd fractions to which he is justly entitled. This feature alone, in the average meat and produce market, will not only save the cost of scale in a short time, but in a large market will save clerks' hire, which saving, on the old pound-and-ounce scales, is entirely lost."

The Circuit Court of Appeals, referring to this "Can You Do This" circular, says: "The circular produces a strong impression upon our minds that the scales in question were designed for the purpose of enabling the users to impose upon the purchasing public by inducing the belief on the part of the latter that they were getting what they were paying for, when, in fact, they were not." Another extract from the court's decision is:

> The alluring suggestion to the user that he has been wronging himself by using common methods of weighing is in itself a confession that the new method is designed to enable him to gain an advantage which he has hitherto been unable to enjoy.

The men who are on the trail of dishonest scale makers declare that this one, rebuked by the court, is by no means the only offender. The cleaning-out campaign, according to Mr. Theobald, is only just begun. Before it is over, he says, some of the companies that make alluring promises to butchers and grocers may find themselves in real trouble.

The New Spring Models in Vogel Brothers' Black Suits for Men.

It is difficult to conceive of variety in black, yet diversity is a marked phase of this showing of black suits. The new fabrics, the new weaves, the various types of single and double breasted sack suits, form a collection of mighty strength very foreign to the sameness which pervades the showing of black sack suits in most stores.

Single and Double Breasted Black Sack Suits at $12.50, $15, $20 and $25.

Six distinct new models in single breasted and an equal number in double breasted with all the knacks of fashion. Thibets, cheviots and unfinished worsteds in plain and fancy weaves.

WANT PROPER LABELS ON PATENT MEDICINES

Committee to Safeguard the Sale of Narcotics Is at Work.

MANY TO SUPPORT ITS BILL

Statement in Plain English Demanded of the Presence of Alcohol or Narcotic Drugs.

When the National Temperance Society received, several months ago, a copy of the annual report of the Massachusetts State Board of Health, the Trustees of the organization noticed that out of a long list of patent medicines the board had analyzed there was not one which did not contain more or less alcohol. Some of these medicines, which were advertised as free from alcohol, contained as much as 41.6 per cent.

Investigation further disclosed that the makers of many patent medicines, without advertising the fact or permitting it to be known to patrons, sold preparations that contained narcotics and stimulants of deleterious character, and the Trustees decided that legislation should be enacted which would protect the public from the dangers arising from such conditions. Alfred L. Manierre, one of their number, was instructed to draft a suitable bill. While the work was in progress it was seen that the subject was too broad to warrant the presentation of the bill to the Legislature as a temperance measure alone, and measures were taken to interest all classes in the State.

As a result, the New York State General Committee for Safeguarding the Sale of Narcotics has been formed. William A. Jenner is Chairman, and William T. Wardwell and Dr. A. Jacobi, First and Second Vice Chairmen. Mr. Manierre is Secretary, and Seth B. Robinson Treasurer, with the Rev. D. Stuart Dodge, Dr. E. Eliot Harris, Dr. Charles G. Keeley, Dr. W. Gilman Thompson, and Dr. Wisner R. Townsend members of the Executive Committee. Among the members of the committee who co-operated in the work of drafting the bill and getting it before the Legislature are:

Prof. Charles Baskerville, the well-known chemist; Prof. Charles F. Chandler of Columbia University, Bishop William C. Doane, Mrs. Francis W. Graham, President of the New York Branch of the Women's Christian Temperance Union; Bishop Coadjutor David H. Greer, Benjamin Guggenheim, the Rev. Charles Cuthbert Hall, President of the Union Theological Seminary; John J. McWilliams of Buffalo, the Rev. David O. Mears of Albany, Henry J. Pierce of Binghamton, ex-Mayor Seth Low, William Cary Sanger, James Speyer, the Rev. Ernest M. Stires, rector of St. Thomas's Church; Ernst J. Lederle, former Health Commissioner; Mrs. Russell Sage, William Jay Schieffelin, and Mrs. Rosalie Loew Whitney.

The medical profession, from one end of the State to the other, was in hearty accord with the measure and promised its support. Representatives of every medical society received places on the committee, and the health officers of the State and city were named as members, and accepted with alacrity. Among the physicians who joined the movement and who are supporting the legislation which it is believed will remedy existing evils are Drs. Robert Abbé, Herman M. Biggs, Charles L. Dana, Francis Delafield, Virgil P. Gibney, Edward G. Janeway, Francis P. Kinnicutt, and Egbert Le Fevre.

The bill, when drafted, was entitled "An act to amend the public health law by providing for the proper labeling of proprietary and other medicinal preparations containing alcohol or narcotic or other powerful potent drugs, and for the inspection, analysis, and regulation of the manufacture and sale of the same."

It has been introduced in both branches of the Legislature and is now before the Committees on Public Health. The committees will consider the bill at a joint hearing, to be held in Albany day after to-morrow, and there will be a large attendance of the New York State Committee which fathered the measure.

The State has been flooded with literature explaining the importance of the measure, and it is believed that it will be favorably reported. The work done in its behalf has been no less effective because it has been quietly conducted. These, in brief, are the provisions of the bill, which was introduced in the House by Assemblyman Wainwright, and in the Senate by Senator Stevens:

> It prohibits the manufacture and sale of medicinal preparations, including so-called "foods" which contain alcohol, or certain other narcotic or potent drugs, unless the presence and percentage of such ingredients are revealed on the label in plain English.
>
> Where alcohol has been used as a solvent, preservative or for any other purpose it is deemed an ingredient in the medicine.
>
> The label shall constitute a warranty which may be availed of by an injured party.
>
> The State Department of Health shall make analyses on its own initiative or on complaint of any citizen.
>
> It provides a double penalty, making its violation a misdemeanor punishable by fine or imprisonment, or both, in a criminal proceeding, and providing for a forfeiture of $50 to the State Department of Health in all places outside the Cities of New York and Buffalo, and to the city Departments of Health of those two cities, recoverable, with allowance for expenses, in a civil action.
>
> Analyses by State or by local Departments of Health shall be presumptive evidence in all proceedings.
>
> The law does not apply to preparations intended solely for external use, or to the dispensing of compounds on prescription by legally authorized physicians, dentists, or veterinarians, nor to preparations listed in the Pharmacopoeia of the United States or the National Formulary, unless sold under proprietary name or trademark.

FIND NO JEWELS IN RUINS.

But Detectives Guard What's Left of J. R. Livermore's Burned House.

Detectives are still guarding the ruins of the mansion of John R. Livermore, the New York lawyer, which was burned last Friday night at Bedford, Westchester County. The detectives and servants found a clothes basket full of the family silver, most of it badly melted, but they did not find any family jewels.

Mrs. Livermore was called to New York on Friday evening, just before the fire occurred, to see Mr. Livermore, who is ill, and there is a report that all her jewelry was locked up in a room.

The loss on the house and furnishings is now estimated at nearly $100,000. Three Boston terriers that had won blue ribbons at the New York and Newport dog shows were burned to death.

They were valued at $1,000 each. The origin of the fire is still unknown, but one story is that the mansion was set on fire by the firebug who has been terrorizing the people of the town for several months. Ten buildings, including the Presbyterian parsonage, have been set on fire in three months.

The firebug is believed to have a mania for seeing the local volunteer fire company work. Detective agencies have spent weeks trying to get evidence against him. Both the detectives and the villagers feel confident that they know who kindled the fires, but they cannot get sufficient evidence for an arrest.

S. O. Lockwood, a business associate of Mr. Livermore, who went to Bedford village on Saturday to investigate reports as to the incendiary origin of the fire, said yesterday that he did not believe that the fire was incendiary. He also said he did not believe that jewelry of any great value was missing.

AFTER NEW ENGLAND LINES.

Western Railroad Interests Believed to be Seeking Entrance to Boston.

Special to The New York Times.

WORCESTER, Mass., March 11.—A Western syndicate, believed to be the same that has been competing with the New York, New Haven & Hartford interests for the control of the principal street railways of the State, is after the Worcester & Holden, all the roads in and around Gardner, Fitchburg, Leominster, Westminster, a road partly completed between those points and Lowell, and all the rights, options, and franchises of the Worcester & Northern, which, when completed, will be a direct air line between Worcester and Fitchburg, opening up virgin territory, especially that about Mount Wachusett, up which the biggest electric cable line in New England is to be built.

John Farson of New York and Chicago is at the head of the men who are financing the deal in the West. Within the past few months he has been coming here by automobile and making a thorough inspection of the rights of way of the Worcester & Northern. This explains the delay in the construction of the road.

It is believed the Western interests desire an entrance into Boston by way of Lowell, as it is believed the New Haven interests will shortly control the Worcester Consolidated and the Boston & Worcester Air Line, which will give them a direct entrance into Boston.

SAYS OLD CHIVALRY IS DEAD.

Mr. Sheldon Urges a Newer Kind to Meet New Conditions.

"The old chivalry of the Middle Ages cannot exist to-day, when men and women are hanging together by straps in a street car," declared Walter L. Sheldon before the Society of Ethical Culture at Carnegie Hall yesterday morning. Mr. Sheldon is the leader of the Society for Ethical Culture in St. Louis, and the topic of his lecture yesterday was "What Men and Women Owe to Each Other."

The new relations between men and women that have come with modern civilization, he said, make it necessary that new lines of conduct for each be drawn.

"The ideals of the knights of old were beautiful things," he continued, "but today there are no perfect men and no perfect women. We know that woman has her faults as well as her virtues. She is no longer a saint in the eyes of man, but is regarded as a human being with as much evil as he has.

"The conversation and the conduct of some women that we meet is enough to make a man lose his respect for the whole sex. There are some of them to whom we take off our hats in genuine respect, and others from a sense of duty. The man should respect the aesthetic temperament of the woman. She is fond of dress, and he should help her to be as beautiful as she may. The man is interested in his newspaper and public life. He can't be looking at her all the time. If she tries to tie him down to her tastes she will only warp the family life.

"There can be no perfect life. Each and all will at times fall into lapses, and each must make allowances for the other. There is one good old rule to hold to; it is, 'Bear and forbear.'"

A KNIFE STUCK IN HIS BACK.

But Romano Still Stood Up—Santoro Charged with Murdering Him.

Giovanni Romano was murdered at Oak and Oliver Streets last night. Papers in his pocket indicate that he lived at either 65 Oliver Street or 77 Degraw Street, Brooklyn. The Oak Street police believe the man was killed by Giuseppi Santoro of 39 Madison Street, who was arrested.

Policeman Kirschman heard the cries of a crowd just before midnight, and, rushing up, saw Santoro running away and captured him. Romano, who was still standing up, had a knife sticking in his back. In various parts of his body were found seven other wounds. He died fifteen minutes later.

The detectives could not find out what had caused the murder.

FIRE AT THE UNDERTAKER'S.

And Grand Master Lee Wang Bang's Body Was Carried Out.

The body of Lee Wang Bang, the Grand Master of Chinatown's Masonic lodge, was lying in state last night in the mortuary chapel of Bacigalupo's undertaking place, when "Chipmunk," an employe of the shop, shouted "Fire!" Half Chinatown ran out to see what was up. They saw a tongue of flame shooting up from the basement stairs.

The firemen soon arrived and carried the coffins to the sidewalk. Hundreds of Chinamen who had elbowed their way into Mulberry Street fled when they saw the coffins, and ran to hide in their coop-like dwellings in crooked little Pell Street.

The body of Lee Wang Bang was carried to the sidewalk by volunteers after they had nearly beaten the fire out. Ten minutes later the body was taken back to the mortuary chapel, where it will rest until this afternoon. Then it will be carried to the Chinese burial plot at Cypress Hills Cemetery. The Chinese Masons will conduct the services. The Chinese actors will march behind a band of German musicians all the way to the graveyard.

The fire, which was caused by a lighted cigarette falling among coffin trimmings and silk linings in the cellar, did $100 damage. That was the price of Lee Wang Bang's funeral.

Small Fire at Department Store Door.

A small fire in the vestibule of the Sixth Avenue entrance to the Siegel-Cooper department store caused a lot of excitement in the neighborhood at 6 o'clock last night. The woodwork of the revolving doors was found to be feeding a small blaze, which evidently had started from paper in the vestibule on which a lighted cigar had been thrown. The damage was trifling.

NO WORD OF BALLOON THAT MADE ITS ESCAPE

Supposed to Have Gone to Sea, but Has Not Been Sighted.

WILL FLOAT A LONG TIME

Levee's Airship Not Badly Damaged—Pittsfield Wants Aero Club to Make More Experiments.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSFIELD, Mass., March 11.—No report has been received here from the missing balloon Aero Club No. 1, which slipped out of its moorings last night, threw off its net, and sailed away into the atmosphere, going easterly at the rate of fifty miles an hour. It was expected that the observer at the Blue Hill Observatory at Boston would pick up sight of the sailing mastodon of fabric, but it was not sighted, and no word has come of its being seen by ships going into Boston.

Aeronaut Leo Stevens of New York was the owner of the balloon, and his loss is estimated at $800. Mr. Stevens said to-day that the balloon was impervious to water and would float for a long time. It contained about 5,000 cubic feet of illuminating gas and was hermetically sealed at the valve neck. Undoubtedly the balloon reached the sea, and it is thought it will be reported either in New York or Boston.

So far as the test of Pittsfield gas is concerned, it was satisfactory to the officials of the Aero Club and the aeronauts. Its lifting capacity was demonstrated by the ease with which the balloon threw off the heavy anchorage when struck by the gale and escaped. Levee's balloon, L'Alouette, is not badly damaged, and will be repaired at Stevens's airship works. It is in bond, and its loss would have caused Levee to have paid a duty of 45 per cent. on it, besides his balloon, which is valued at $1,200.

Augustus Post, Treasurer of the Aero Club of America, and Cortlandt Field Bishop, Chairman of the Racing Committee, returned to New York this evening. Officials of the Pittsfield Gas Company met Mr. Post to-day and conferred with him regarding further experiments. The company agreed to make 100,000 cubic feet of gas for the next experiment and to store it in a large holder and install a sixteen-inch feed pipe from the holder to the inflation field. The company will allow the Aero Club to use its land without charge and also to experiment in conjunction with the club with various gases. Hydrogen gas can be made here, and the company is willing to experiment with its water gas, which can be refined sufficiently to give ascensional power.

M. Le Compte Henry De La Vaulx of Paris will sail for New York on March 17, and will for a time take charge of the experiments of the Aero Club. It is expected that he will make an examination of the Pittsfield works shortly after his arrival. He is to act in the capacity of an advisor for the club, and to conduct a series of flights of from four to six passengers in his large balloons. Leo Stevens is to return to Pittsfield shortly to make another attempt to fly over the Berkshires.

McGRAW SURE OF GIANTS.

Challenges Anybody to Pick Out a Team That Can Beat New York.

Special to The New York Times.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., March 11.—With every regular player in line, with the exception of George Browne and Arthur Devlin, Manager McGraw is perhaps the least worried of all National League managers regarding his chances for a third pennant.

"Pennant talk this early," said the "Little General" to-day, "is a silly waste of time. I have never claimed a pennant in my life, but I would like the people of New York to know that it will be a hard task for any one to select any club to beat us out. As they say on race tracks, 'We are just one horse in an eight-horse race,' but I would like to wager a neat sum that no one can pick a club that will beat us at the finish."

The arrival of Mertes and Strang gave McGraw much satisfaction. Mertes is in splendid condition. His color is good, and his general movements similar to such as might be expected in mid-season, which goes to show that he has not spent a Winter in absolute retirement in California. McGraw was asked about a reported trade, in which Mertes was to figure, and the manner in which the New York chief denied the rumor would indicate that "Sandow" has many years of service coming to him as a member of the Polo Grounds squad.

The Sabbath was spent in rest for those who cared to take it. Several players took advantage of courtesies extended by citizens and rowed in gigs and shells furnished by members of the boat club. The exercises proved popular for Donlin, Ames, McGinnity, McGraw, and others, who probably floated on the treacherous waters of the Mississippi River for the first time.

Some uneasiness, which McGraw says is not necessary, has been entertained as to the welfare of the team's chief pitching asset, Christopher Mathewson. A specialist was called in to-day to attend to him. He found symptoms of a bad cold, and performed an operation of minor importance on the nose of the Giant twirler.

OLYMPIC ATHLETES TRAIN.

New York Contingent Begin Preliminary Work at Pastime Grounds.

The New York contingent of the Olympic team has begun a systematic course of training under the management of M. P. Halpin of the New York Athletic Club. The Pastime Athletic Club oval will be the headquarters of the team until they sail for Greece on March 31. Yesterday Martin Sheridan, George V. Bonhag, Myer Prinstein, James S. Mitchell, and W. Schick reported at the grounds. Sheridan threw the discus in the morning and joined Mitchell at the weights in the afternoon. Bonhag ran five miles, and Schick practiced starts. Prinstein did not practice owing to the cold.

The other members of the team are training in different sections of the city. Harvey Cohn is doing road work near his home at Canarsie. Harry L. Hillman has selected Adelphi Field, Brooklyn, for his preliminary work, and H. V. Valentine is training at Flushing, L. I.; C. J. Bacon covered eight miles over Jerome Avenue, but J. P. Sullivan rested yesterday, having participated in the Eighth Regiment games on Saturday night.

C. M. Daniels and J. W. Spencer, the swimmers, spent a couple of hours in the tank at the New York Athletic Club. Both men are in good shape and swam several fast trials. They will continue their work daily until the team sails.

Manager Halpin has issued a call for all the men to report at the Pastime Athletic Club grounds next Sunday, when they will wear their Olympic costumes for the first time. It has been decided that the men shall wear an American shield instead of a flag.

Seventh's Riflemen in Class Match.

The members of the Seventh Regiment Rifle Club reported in good strength at the armory range on Saturday night for the purpose of participating in a class match, an event that is always looked forward to with much interest by the regimental marksmen. There were five prizes contested for, the premier honor going to Private O. Wuerz of Company C, with the excellent total of 65 out of a possible 70. The conditions of the match called for seven shots standing at 200 yards and seven prone at 500 yards, four entries and five prizes. All scores having the same numerical value constitute a class. First prize is awarded to the man making the best score in the highest class, second prize to the one making best score in next highest class, and in like manner through to the fifth class. The scores follow:

Name and Company.	Standing.	Prone.	Total.
Private O. Wuerz, C	33	32	65

Lieut. R. M. Dunn, Vet	32	29	61

John D. Thees of Company B qualified as an expert with a total score of 153, of which 66 was made at deliberate fire and 87 at rapid fire. Sergt. S. M. Richardson of Company H qualified as a sharpshooter with 32 points standing and 32 prone, a total of 64.

The shooting was in charge of Corporal F. M. Wheeler of Company H and Private W. G. Eliot of Company K as executive officers.

SUMMER BALL PROBLEM.

Question Must Be Settled When Football Agitation Subsides.

When the football question is settled enough to admit of attention being given to other phases of college athletics there is no doubt but that the Summer baseball problem will assume an important place in Faculty deliberations. Cornell has asked the leading colleges for an opinion on the question as to whether a rule should not be adopted to admit of Summer playing outside of the major and minor leagues, so that students may receive money for their athletic skill without disqualification. Ten colleges of Ohio on Saturday adopted such a rule. The proposition was made at the conference of Big Nine at Chicago on Saturday to adopt the same rule, but the question was laid on the table until the next meeting, when the football problem will be disposed of. There is every probability of favorable action in a number of prominent institutions.

To most followers of amateur athletics the idea of Summer ball playing for money being authorized is abhorrent. They can see no difference between taking money for athletic skill in one sport than in one another. They say that the whole essence of amateurism is the entire proscription of every kind of profit from what should be purely a pastime, and that to admit the germ of professionalism to thus enter the college athletic structure will soon see the entire fabric impregnated with it. On the other hand, the collegiate authorities seem to lean toward the other idea—that the taking of money is not in itself evil, but that the whole question is dependent upon the spirit which actuates the athlete. They say to disqualify on hard and fast lines without considering attendant circumstances is to do a grave injustice to some men who have in their opinion every right to play.

The whole matter resolves itself into a question of justice to the individual. As Prof. L. M. Dennis of Cornell said recently: "We have no right, in my opinion, to make rules which shall exclude any man who is legitimately entitled to play on our teams from doing so for a theoretical offense against a code. Equity should be the basis of all decisions, and I think that the time has come when reasonable precautions shall be taken to insure the honesty of a student's purpose, and that beyond that each individual case shall be decided on its merits. In a gentleman's sport each should be above taking advantage of the other, and certainly if college Faculties cannot be trusted to tell the truth to each other it's time athletics were dropped entirely.

"Take the question of an athlete coming from one institution to another. Some would exclude such men arbitrarily from sport. That would be unfair. Certainly if a man pass a year's work he shows his purpose is honest when he stays a year before playing. If we eliminate, as is now proposed, holders of degrees from taking part in sport I think we have taken all reasonable precautions.

"As to Summer baseball. Unquestionably it is worse to have men playing Summer baseball and getting money by employing subterfuges to dodge the letter of the law, and then lying about it when they say they have not taken money indirectly, than it would be to allow them to play openly and get money. I cannot see why they should be forced to earn money at some menial occupation that would net them much less or to carry a stigma of professionalism and unfair practice. It becomes a question whether the injury to the individual does not overshadow any bad influence on the whole student body."

LORD OF THE VALE LEADS.

August Belmont's Horse to Carry 133 Pounds in Benning Handicaps.

Weights have just been allotted to fifty-two horses eligible for the Benning Spring handicaps to be run on the first and last days of the meeting of the Washington Jockey Club. The first handicap is scheduled for Monday, March 26, the distance being six furlongs over the Columbia course, and the second handicap is carded for Saturday, April 14, over seven furlongs of the Columbia course.

In the distribution of weights Handicapper Joseph A. Murphy has placed August Belmont's Lord of the Vale, the six-year-old son of Hastings and Lady Violet, at the head of the list with 133 pounds, while Mr. Belmont's other nomination, the four-year-old gelding Mount Henry, by Henry of Navarre, will carry only 114. John E. Madden's Adbell, by Plaudit, out of Nahma, comes next to Lord of the Vale, with 130 pounds, and F. R. Hitchcock's Dandelion, son of Hamburg and Pansy, will be required to shoulder 125 pounds. Then follow William Hendrie's Scarfell with 124 pounds, and H. T. Oxnard's Bohemia with 123 pounds. Penalties will accrue from noon to-day. The weights follow:

	Pounds.		Pounds.
Lord of the Vale	133	Chippewa	100
Adbell	130	The Clown	100
Dandelion	125	Hyperion	100

MARATHON RUNNER WON RACE

W. Frank Finished First in Star A. C. Cross-Country Run.

W. Frank of the Irish-American Athletic Club, who has been selected to represent the United States in the Marathon race at the Olympic games in Athens, won the Star Athletic Club cross-country run yesterday. It was Frank's first appearance in competition this year, and he showed excellent form, covering the course, which was 11 miles, in 62:40. The field was limited to ten starters, but all of them finished, there being less than one minute between the first and last man. The course led from the clubhouse out Jackson Avenue to Thompson Avenue to Flushing, L. I., and return by the same route. The men kept together on the outward journey, with Frank and Kennedy slightly in the lead. On the return journey Frank increased his pace, but Kennedy kept doggedly at his heels. The other runners began to string out. Frank kept in front, and finished about ten yards ahead of Kennedy, who was twenty-five yards in front of Early. Summary:

Name and Club.	Time. M.S.
W. Frank, Irish-American A. C.	62:40
T. J. Kennedy, Star A. C.	62:42
C. Early, Star A. C.	62:50
G. Owens, Brooklyn A. C.	62:54
T. Million, Star A. C.	62:58
W. Green, Star A. C.	62:59
W. Brazil, Star A. C.	63:05
J. Egglestein, Star A. C.	63:09
W. Hayslip, Star A. C.	63:18
W. Cowan, Star A. C.	63:20

Nine members of the Wyanoke Boat Club took part in a five-mile road run yesterday. The men ran out Sedgwick Avenue and returned. J. McGuire led the entire distance, and won by 20 yards in 27:53. Clarence Guttenberg was second, and A. Frankenthal third. The others finished in the following order: S. Berger, W. Herg, W. Hart, Charles Steinman, and Martin Engel.

Fred Lindsey won the weekly cross-country run of the Crescent Boat Club. Owing to the cold weather the distance was reduced to four miles. Lindsay's time was 24:07. The order of finish for the other men follows: J. Cox, F. Betts, Charles Graham, Joseph Zingi, J. Pattenaud, J. Gilson, and W. L. Maher.

There was a poor turnout of the Metropolitan Rowing Club oarsmen for the weekly cross-country run. Eight men started, and two dropped out. H. Hertel won in 27:52. He was followed by H. Thompson, J. Sulger, H. Rogers, G. Loughran, and P. Kelly.

Champions in N. Y. A. C. Games.

More than five hundred athletes, including nearly all of the intercollegiate champions and a number of the men who will represent this country at the Olympic games at Athens, have entered for the annual games of the New York Athletic Club that will be held to-morrow night in Madison Square Garden. The pick of the Yale, Harvard, and Cornell runners will contest in the one-mile relay for colleges. Ten teams have entered for the interscholastic relay, while the match relay between the Mercury Foot runners and those of the Irish-American Athletic Club will bring out two men on each team who will compete in the Olympic events.

Schick, the famous sprinter and holder of intercollegiate honors for Harvard, will start in the 60 yard dash, with Dear University of Pennsylvania; Seitz, formerly of Georgetown, and Reed of Amherst. L'Engle and Moore of Yale will run in the half-mile against Valentine and Nebrick. The field events also promise to be remarkably high-class. Ellery Clark, former all-around champion, will compete in nearly all of the events on the long programme.

FAVOR AUTO SPEEDWAY ON SECTIONAL BASIS

Pennington Track Directors Support Philadelphia Highway.

CLUBS TO OBTAIN ESTIMATES

Emerson Brooks Believes Cost Will Be Greater Than Figured by John Brisben Walker.

Several of the automobilists actively interested in the building of the New Jersey speedway at Pennington have expressed a willingness to abandon prospective work on their track and direct their efforts toward the more ambitious project of the proposed New York-Philadelphia highway. Emerson Brooks of the Automobile Club of America, who has been one of the most enthusiastic advocates of the Pennington speedway plan, said yesterday that in view of the novel scheme lately outlined by John Brisben Walker to build a broad highway for motor cars across New Jersey to Philadelphia, no immediate effort would be made to push the Pennington track to completion.

"The Directors of the Pennington track who reside in Trenton are heartily in favor of the New York-Philadelphia highway," said Mr. Brooks. "They think, however, that Mr. Walker's estimate of the proposed cost is too low. That, however, is a matter that has not been carefully investigated yet, and the first effort will be to obtain an exact estimate of the cost of building the highway, as well as the expense of securing the rights of way. Mr. Walker stated that the highway could be built for $6,000 a mile, allowing a breadth of 80 feet. Our estimates, made by experienced engineers for the Pennington track, showed that the track could not be built for less than $24,000 per mile, and I think this will correctly represent the cost of the 100-mile route to Philadelphia."

Mr. Brooks also stated that the highway might probably be built to greater advantage if completed in sections. Two or three automobile routes might be built at different localities in New Jersey, and eventually they could be connected, making an ideal roadway between the two cities. With the adoption of this sectional plan, the purposes of the Pennington promoters would be attained just as well as though a special course were built. The section near Pennington would afford automobilists a private speedway for testing high-powered cars, something that many of the big manufacturers have been anxious to secure for some time.

It would also offer an opportunity to the American Automobile Association to use such a section of an automobile speedway for the Vanderbilt cup race or any other big road event that might be projected. That the A. A. A. is anxious to use such a track was shown by the resolution adopted at its January meeting, when a strong preference was expressed for private or special automobile speedways upon which to hold road races. It is only the lack of such a speedway that would insure absolute safety to both machines and spectators that is compelling the officers of the association to turn their eyes to the same Long Island course this season as was used last October.

The practical side of the matter will soon be brought to the attention of the associated clubs of New Jersey, and the Philadelphia Automobile Club will be asked to assist the New Jersey and New York clubs in the coming investigations. The Pennington speedway Directors have several thousand dollars subscribed for their track, and it is quite possible that the contributors would be willing to transfer their money to the greater project if definite assurances are received that the plan possesses elements of practicability and future success.

HANDICAP YACHT RATING.

How Various Boats Enrolled in the New Class Compare on Records.

Yachtsmen are enthusiastic over the possibilities of the handicap class that is to be started this Spring on the Sound. In speaking of the handicaps of the various boats that have enrolled one well versed in the capabilities of each says:

"I have examined the records of various boats that have entered in the class thus far on the basis of last year's racing. I have not gone beyond that because I have not had the time. This enables a half dozen in each division to be rated. Investigation a bit further will place the rest.

"Take, for instance, the thirty-three-foot boats. Those who have signified their intention of entering are, as I understand it, J. W. Alker's Alert, F. G. Stewart's Regina, Victor I. Cumnock's Nike, T. M. T. Raborg's Mimosa I., W. F. Clark's Marguerite, F. M. Weeks's Little Peter, and Harry A. Jackson, Jr.'s, Alyce. Little Peter did not race at all last year. Alyce raced only in the Block Island race. I have ignored that, although Alert also started, because the results were so uncertain. The others I have figured out with respect to each other thus:

Boat.	Miles.	Time.	Difference.	Rating P.C.	Sc'h.
Alert	..	..	..	..	..
Nike	50.5	8:55:12	3.30	0.6	0.6
Regina	60.5	12:53:29	6.27	0.8	1.4
Mimosa I	15.0	2:46:44	5.39	3.4	4.8
Marguerite	15.0	2:52:53	3.23	2.0	6.9

"This table means that Alert and Nike sailed 50.5 miles. Alert's aggregate time was 8:55:12. Nike was 3:30 behind her and requires .6 per cent. to equalize matters. Regina and Nike, sailing against each other, sailed 60.5 miles. Nike's time was 12:53:29. Regina was 6:27 behind, and needs .8 per cent. to tie. Alert allowing Nike .6 per cent., must allow Regina .8 per cent. of Nike's aggregate as well, or 1.4 per cent. all told, and so with the others.

"The twenty-seven-foot class, including A. E. Black's Thelema, G. P. Granbery's Firefly, George E. Gartland's Robin Hood, Howell E. Sayre's Maryola, Guy Standing's Firefly, E. C. Ray's Acushla, and Dr. J. B. Palmer's Naiad, affords statistics for all but the latter two. In this class, however, it is only possible to get the relations of these boats to Thelema. Thus the figures given in the following table show her time and the amount the others were behind her, with the ratings they require to equal her. The table follows:

Boat.	Miles.	Time.	Difference.	Rating P.C.	Sc'h.
Thelema	..	..	..	..	..
Robin Hood	10	2:16:39	2.24	1.8	1.8
Maryola	54	13:19:59	27.34	3.7	3.7
Firefly (N.R.)	47	11:15:36	25.57	3.8	3.8
Firefly (M.B.)	15	4:00:50	10.01	4.2	4.2

"In the twenty-two-footer class only three of the boats may be rated. These are Donald B. Abbott's Answer, W. R. Berth's Kenoshi I. and T. M. T. Raborg's Opossum. The relations of these are computed as in the first table—Answer to Kenoshi and Kenoshi to Opossum. The figures show:

Boat.	Miles.	Time.	Difference.	Rating P.C.	Sc'h.
Answer	..	..	..	..	..
Kenoshi	30.5	7:22:39	8.23	1.9	1.9
Opossum	29.5	7:51:16	5.58	2.2	4.1

"The others in the class are H. A. Pryor's Grasshopper, T. E. French's Idler, R. P. Morse's Ojibwah, and C. W. Voltz's Kenoshi II. These may be rated with one exception from the previous year.

"This outline shows the possibilities. I think all yachting men will find that if the class receives an earnest trial it will be a huge success and the feature of the year."

School Teams Play Fast Hockey.

The hockey teams of the private schools comprising the Interscholastic Hockey League are in the heat of a struggle for the championship at the St. Nicholas Rink. The schools entered for the title are Berkeley Preparatory, Columbia Grammar, Cutler, Graff, Irving, and Sacks Collegiate Institute. The battle began last Tuesday, when the Irving seven placed the puck in the net seven times, while the Sacks boys could do it only once. Two nights later the Berkeley and Graff players finished with a score of two goals each, the tie to be played off on Thursday evening.

To-morrow night the teams of Cutler and Columbia Grammar Schools will meet. Early Wednesday evening the second teams of the New York Athletic Club and St. Nicholas Skating Club will play a game.

BLAME FOR SEED GRAFT.

Secretary Wilson Says Congress is Responsible for It.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, March 11.—Secretary Wilson has written a letter to Representative Tawney giving the history of the distribution of free seeds to American farmers. He thinks Congress is wholly responsible for the matter, and that Congress will have no opposition from the Department of Agriculture or the farmers if that body should undertake to abolish the practice.

"The first appropriation for seeds," says the Secretary, "was in 1839, when the Commissioner of Patents was allowed $1,000 for collecting agricultural statistics and the 'purchase of seeds of new and rare varieties of plants.' From 1839 to and including 1865, the total amount expended in collecting statistics and supplying seeds was $672,724. The appropriation for the current year for seeds alone is $290,000, or almost one-half of the total amount expended in the twenty-six years from 1839 to 1865 in the encouragement of agriculture.

"The purpose of the early legislation was to introduce into this country seeds of new and improved varieties and of new crops in order to increase the horticultural and agricultural products of the United States. As the demand for the new seeds being introduced by the department grew, such demands naturally found expression in requests made to Senators and members of Congress, and in course of time the number of these requests became so great that it was impossible to fill them with strictly new varieties of seeds. Hence the practice began of sending out larger quantities of packages of vegetable seeds.

"The distribution of such seeds increased, however, so that by about 1890 it had become the most prominent feature of the distribution, and although the distribution of new varieties of field crops was not entirely lost sight of, the proportion of such seeds introduced was exceedingly small, and the original purpose of the legislation, namely, the introduction of new and improved varieties, was not kept prominently in the foreground. Accordingly, in 1897, Congress specified that $20,000 should be used for the introduction of new crops from abroad, and a separate section of foreign seed and plant introduction was established which has done much good work.

"There is no doubt that although the amount that is expended distinctly for this work of introducing and developing new crops is relatively but a small proportion of the entire appropriation, the relative amount of good done by this branch of the work is far in excess of that accomplished by the mere distribution of miscellaneous standard varieties of vegetable and flower seeds, which can be purchased from any seedsman. As far as I am aware, there is no other Government that buys ordinary miscellaneous vegetable and flower seeds from growers and dealers and then distributes them to its citizens."

NEW YORK BAKERS COMPLAIN.

Say They Are Discriminated Against by Anti-Dumb Walter Law.

The New York Retail Bakers' Association will hold a special meeting at the Fifth Avenue Hotel this morning to devise means of obtaining the passage of Senator Coggeshall's amendment to the law preventing the use of dumb waiters in the bakeries of New York City.

The New York bakers think they are unconstitutionally discriminated against by the dumb waiter law, as flats, drug stores, hotels, and paint shops are allowed to have dumb waiters running from cellar to roof.

NEW ROWING ASSOCIATION.

Hudson River Clubs Organize to Hold Regatta in June.

Representatives of rowing clubs on the Hudson River held a meeting at the clubhouse of the Active Boat Club of Hoboken yesterday afternoon, at the call of Secretary G. A. Hitchcock of the Actives, to organize a rowing association to hold a regatta at Fort Lee during June and to promote the general interests of rowing along the Hudson. The new organization is to be known as the Hudson River Rowing Association, and, judged by the enthusiasm of the delegates, it should be a potent factor in rowing affairs about New York. General plans for developing interest in the sport were informally discussed, and the outlining of a plan of procedure was left in the hands of a committee to be reported at a future meeting.

Six clubs of Hoboken participated in the meeting. They were the Actives, Atlantics, Valencias, Rosedales, Germanias, and Woodcliffs. Two New York clubs will be enlisted, the Hudson Boat Club and the Palisades, while it is hoped the Waverleys of Yonkers will join. It is also intended to solicit the participation of clubs on Newark Bay in the annual regatta, if not in the association. Secretary Hitchcock is hopeful of making the association the most active about New York.

2,000 BOWLERS TO COMPETE.

Programme Completed for the National Tournament at Louisville.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., March 11.—President J. H. Haager of the American Bowling Association and Secretary Smithers to-day completed the schedule for the National tournament which will open here on St. Patrick's Day, March 17. The final report of entries shows 217 five-men teams, 68 two-men teams, and 881 individual players. Bowling will begin each day at 11 A. M.; and the schedule calls for occupancy of the alleys until midnight. With the usual delays incident to the handling of such a number of contestants, however, it is probable that the games will be continued possibly until morning as the tournament nears its close.

The contests will be held in the Armory, a recently completed building, with a seating capacity of 12,000. It will be decorated in green for the opening, and the honor of being the first team to send the balls down the alleys has been awarded to O'Learys No. 1 of Chicago. The tournament is scheduled to continue ten days.

Ten Clever Wrestlers to Compete.

Ten of the best wrestlers in the East have entered for the carnival to be held at the rooms of the Paddock Athletic Club on next Friday night. George Bothner, the champion lightweight of America, will defend his title against the sturdy Harlemite, "Young Muldoon," and as the match is to be to a finish, with no holds barred, the struggle should be a desperate one. John Piening, the "Butcher Boy," will meet Neil Olsen, the "Terrible Swede." Alex. Swanson and George Fisher, Harry Model and Everhardt Hahn, and Young Roeber and Harry Pikinsky will also contest at catch-as-catch-can style for supremacy.

TENNIS EXPERTS' CHANCE TO GET INTO FORM

Two Tourneys to Begin in Brooklyn This Week.

MATCH FOR 7TH REGIMENT

Soldiers' Challenge Accepted by the Casino Club—Mrs. Barger-Wallach Plans Competition.

Indoor lawn tennis players are to compete in two tournaments that will begin this week, and in both meetings experts will play, one of whom is mentioned as a probable member of the American international team. In a measure the challenge series of matches between teams of the Seventh Regiment Lawn Tennis Association and the Brooklyn Casino Club holds the place of importance. The latter organization is the latest recruit to the covered-court sport, and has built one of the finest indoor courts in the country in the fashionable section of Brooklyn Heights. The Seventh Regiment players are the challengers for the series, which will be a series of home-and-home matches, beginning next Saturday on the Casino courts.

William B. Cragin, Jr., President of the Seventh Regiment Association, announced yesterday that the team would be made up of Robert T. Bryan, the regimental champion; Morris S. Clark, Arthur M. Lovibond, and William B. Cragin, Jr. The Casino team will include Frederick B. Alexander, the Princeton ex-champion, who is pretty sure of a place on the American team that will try for the Davis International Cup; Hugh Tallant, formerly of Harvard; A. S. Roberts, and Edwin P. Fisher. Each series will consist of two doubles and three singles matches, and the competitions on the Seventh Regiment courts will be played on March 31.

The other tournament will be the annual championship of the Twenty-third Regiment of Brooklyn in singles and doubles. This will be held upon the armory courts, beginning with the first round of the singles next Saturday and continuing each succeeding Saturday until finished. Many members of the Crescent Athletic Club, Kings County Lawn Tennis Club, Knickerbocker Field Club, and Brooklyn Lawn Tennis Club are numbered among the experts of this regiment, and it is expected that the tournament will afford them splendid practice for the outdoor season. All of the matches will be the best two in three sets, except in the final and championship rounds, which will be the best three in five sets. George A. Antonides, one of the Class B experts of the Kings County Lawn Tennis Club, is the Chairman of the Tournament Committee, which also consists of P. S. Van Zandt, Company D, and J. L. Salter, Jr., Company A.

From the plans being made by Mrs. Barger-Wallach, the second annual tournament to be held in the St. Nicholas Rink will begin early in April. One week of this series will be devoted to women players of skill, while two weeks will be devoted to the ranking experts of the country in singles and doubles. Several of the players for the internationals will compete, as the list includes Holcombe Ward, ex-champion, who has been keeping his game on edge by competing with Mrs. Barger-Wallach on the courts of the Indoor Lawn Tennis Club; Frederick B. Alexander, Robert D. Wrenn, George L. Wrenn, Jr., Beals C. Wright, Malcolm D. Whitman, Theodore Roosevelt Pell, Wylie C. Grant, and others.

Reconciled at Wife's Deathbed.

After a reconciliation with her husband, from whom she had been separated, Mrs. Mary Glendennon, 25 years old, died last night at the home of Mrs. John Vleit, at 170 Adams Street, Newark. Mrs. Glendennon and her husband had had some misunderstanding a year and a half ago, but yesterday afternoon they met. Mrs. Glendennon had suffered from a weak heart, and the excitement of the meeting is believed to have caused the attack that resulted fatally.

Jersey City's Midnight Alarm False.

The rumors circulated to the effect that yesterday was to be a "dry" Sunday in Jersey City proved to be without foundation. Side doors were open as usual, and the only change from usual conditions was that beer-can traffic was suspended. There were no excise arrests.

Pacific Coast Tours

A new booklet just issued under this title should be in the hands of every person who expects to make a trip west of the Rockies this year.

It outlines all the routes to the Coast, shows maps of each, contains a large map of the country from the Great Lakes to the Coast and has a great deal of valuable information about side trips, interesting sights, etc.

The booklet is finely printed and handsomely illustrated. Its use will save you the trouble of getting and combining the separate booklets of the many different roads reaching the Pacific.

Your request on a postal, mentioning the name of this paper, will bring a copy by return of mail.

DISAGREEING WITH THE PRESIDENT.

In his annual message President ROOSEVELT declared that "every consideration of wise policy and, above all, every consideration of large generosity bids us meet the request of Santo Domingo as we are now trying to meet it" by ratification of the treaty pending in the Senate. "Not only every principle of reason but every generous instinct within us bids us respond to the appeal" of the troubled island republic, he said. The Senate evidently is not of that opinion, for it is believed in Washington that the Santo Domingo treaty will not be ratified.

The President "earnestly recommended" the reduction of duties on Philippine sugar and tobacco to 25 per cent. of the present rates under the Dingley act. This enactment he characterized as a "measure of justice" to the Filipinos, whom it would aid "without injuring the interests of America." The Philippine Tariff bill was killed the other day in Senate Committee.

Equally positive and equally futile was the President's recommendation "that Indian Territory and Oklahoma be admitted as one State, and that New Mexico and Arizona be admitted as one State." "There is no justification for further delay," he said, "and the advisability of making the four Territories into two States has been clearly established." The Senate on Friday, by a vote of 37 to 35, adopted Senator BURROWS's motion to strike out of the Statehood bill all reference to Arizona and New Mexico. The bill was then passed providing for the admission of only one State, formed by the union of Oklahoma and Indian Territory.

President ROOSEVELT has a way of expressing his opinions in positive language without any qualification whatever, insomuch that he seems to close the door of the argument and to put those who differ with him altogether and hopelessly in the wrong. Any one reading his message and without further information would be led to believe that the Statehood question had but one side. As many as twelve Republican Senators had the courage to declare by their votes that there is another side. That is a pretty large number of Senators of the President's own party to be found voting against a proposition declared by him to be "clearly established," as to which further delays would have "no justification."

It is a situation full of discomfort for good party men. The defeat of three measures, the Philippine Tariff, Statehood, and the Santo Domingo treaty, the enactment of which the President earnestly recommended and desired, gives rise, of course, to stories of an "insurrection," and the minds of some of the Railroad Rate bill's supporters are filled with gloom. We see no special evidence of an insurrection—that is, there is no body of Republican Senators banded together to punish and humiliate the President. At least, other explanations may be offered that are more plausible and in better accord with the facts of the case. The Senatorial champions of the beet sugar and tobacco interests killed the Philippine Tariff bill. The Santo Domingo treaty has not only encountered the party hostility of the Democrats, but has been the cause of serious misgivings on the Republican side of the Senate. The Statehood bill was cut in half, it seems to us, because of an honest and altogether commendable conviction on the part of the Republican Senators who voted for the Burrows amendment that it would be an outrage to force a promising community like Arizona into an abhorred union with New Mexico, which is a community of an entirely different stripe.

The Senate has merely asserted the right to form and record its own judgments. The President's habit of saying that the thing he wants done is beyond discussion does not shut off discussion in that body. Nevertheless the defeat of three of the four measures most earnestly recommended by the President in his message is by no means conclusive as to the fate of the fourth, the rate-making bill. The twelve Republican Senators who voted to divide the Statehood measure are apparently opposed to the Federal regulation of railroad rates. A very large number of the twenty-five Democrats who voted against the admission of Arizona and New Mexico will doubtless vote for any kind of rate-making bill. On the other hand, among the thirty-five Republicans who voted against the amendment of the Statehood bill there are many who will not vote for a rate regulation bill without the provision for judicial review. Upon that question again they will assert the right of private and Senatorial judgment. They will be as little influenced by hostility to the President as by his arguments and appeals in behalf of the Hepburn bill. Courage of opinion and fidelity to one's own beliefs are not insurrection.

PRINCE TSAI'S TALK.

It would not be quite fair to hold Prince TSAI closely responsible for reports of his remarks at a private dinner to which reporters were not asked; but if the kinsman of the Emperor of China said what he is reported to have said to his host and fellow-guests on Saturday evening, he has not the slightest occasion to avoid responsibility for it. The remarks attributed to him were in the most friendly spirit and very much in the tone adopted by the members—at least by the best-behaved—of the royal families of Europe when on their travels. He expressed a cordial desire on the part of the Emperor for amicable relations with our country, and declared that this desire was based on gratitude for kindness shown by the American Government at a time when kindness was none too conspicuous in other quarters, and on common commercial and political interests in the present and future.

Some of us may think that the Prince's disclaimer of a boycott of American goods in China involved a subtle discrimination for which the Chinese mind is better adapted than our own. The difference between boycotting American goods and resolving to buy like goods elsewhere because of a grievance against the American people is not in practical effect very great. But the point for Americans to consider is not the precision of the phrase, but the fact that the grievance does exist and that we as a people are responsible for it. Prince TSAI is quite within the bounds of truth and of courtesy when he says that Americans would trade no more than necessary with any nation that treated their buyers as we treat those sent by Chinese merchants. For, unfortunately, we do not simply exclude them; we subject them to injurious and humiliating examination and detention, refuse them the common rights accorded to the citizens of every other country, attribute to them as an offense their wish to enter our ports, and assume them to be guilty until and unless they can affirmatively prove their innocence. The President has lately done all that lies in his power to soften the harshness of this policy, but much remains which only legislation can remove, and the evidence is only too strong that legislation of this sort is likely to be shaped more by the selfish and cruel demands of the trades unions than by the recommendations of the President or the dictates of decency, enlightened interest, and common sense.

The Chinese Government has repeatedly expressed its willingness and desire to co-operate in the prevention of migration to this country of its laboring class, not merely the lowest, or coolies, but of all kinds of workmen. It asks—and the request is logical and fair—that when this migration is guarded against by such adequate measures as may be agreed upon, other Chinese shall be treated as we should be obliged to treat and do treat other nationals—Italians, Russians, Syrians, &c. In other words, it asks that we shall not select the Chinese alone from among all the people of the globe as prima facie objectionable and undeserving of fair and humane treatment. For the enforcement of that demand the Government and the people of China possess an instrument of great efficacy which they have a perfect right to use—namely, trade discrimination. If they choose to replace our import duties by a general agreement not to buy our goods, they will violate no international obligation. Every one knows that their markets are very valuable to us already, and those who have paid much attention to the subject know that their markets will be incalculably more valuable in the future. Is it worth while to risk losing them merely to gratify the ignorant prejudices of those who secured and now sustain the present policy?

WHERE THE MONEY HAS GONE.

Last week's bank clearings answer the question as to what has become of the money. The average increase of bank clearings in the Middle States, 30 per cent., is unusual, but moderate when compared with other communities. It is the Pacific States which are really booming. Travelers to the Portland Exposition were amused and sometimes irritated to see across the landscape legends "See us grow." The bank clearings read the same way. Here are a few selections of increases from The Financial Chronicle tables:

	Feb.	Two Months.
Los Angeles	38	30
Seattle	124	94
Salt Lake City	86	89
Tacoma	50	42
Sioux Falls	43	52
Total Pacific	42	41

It would be possible to select other exceptional centres of activity and also rare cases of reaction. For this year Chattanooga's increase is 60 per cent., Fall River's 80 per cent., and so on. The decreases are so unrepresentative that it is unfair to cite them in any discussion of where the money has gone. It has not gone there at all events.

We like these signs of activity in remote and rural regions, dealing with actualities, and not with paper proofs of title. Whatever of speculation there may be indicated, at least it is not a stock market boom. But however pleasing such figures are a word of caution may not be amiss. Money is really scarce. That it is scarce for the best of reasons instead of for the worst does not alter the fact. Always in every boom there comes a rush to realize. This is rather worse than even a Bridge or Subway rush, and those who garner profits betimes avoid the unpleasant experiences of those who overstay their market. "The prudent man looketh well to his going." This is Biblical and academic, and has no immediate relation to anything above set forth.

THE TASK OF FRANCE.

If all signs shall not fail, France will leave the conference at Algeciras with strengthened prestige and with greater security for her interests in North Africa, but also with a task which, if it be not wholly a new one, is more strictly defined, carries with it greater responsibility, and entails some risks not before encountered.

She obtains practically all that she has claimed in the way of precedence in the affairs of Morocco. This includes the policing of the coast cities and the centres of trade, as well as the maintenance of order along the 700 miles of her Algerian frontier, and a superior, though not a dominating, share in the financing of Morocco. Of these two "mandates," as they are called in the discussions of the diplomatists, that relating to order in the Moroccan cities and along the border is by far the more important and difficult. France has in the past undertaken a portion of these duties, and it is admitted even by her own writers that she has not made a complete success. So far as concerns her own border, she has been engaged in a series of teasing struggles with the tribesmen, and, though on the whole she has slowly extended the zone of her influence, she has met with some disagreeable checks. Still, these are her own affair, and she can probably get on in the future, as she has done in the past, without serious reverses. But it is different with the policing of the coast cities and trade centres. There the interests of other nations are closely involved. Two years ago, when our State Department announced to the Republican National Convention that it had demanded of the Sultan of Morocco, "PERDICARIS alive or RAIS ULI dead," it was France that stepped in and advised the Sultan to pay the ransom of the American citizen. That is an instance of what may happen, and is many times more apt to happen under the proposed arrangement.

The situation is liable to become complex at any moment through the danger to foreigners from the tribes over whom the Sultan has but imperfect control. It is to be remembered that the Sultan is a religious rather than a political head of the country, that his resources and his ability for managing the tribes are limited, and that he has got along with them largely by systematically letting them alone in their respective regions. If trade is to be fostered and the interests of Europe are to be extended, these regions will steadily be encroached on and the Sultan will either himself resist the inevitable or will need much aid in overcoming the resistance of the tribes. It will be the task of France in the first case to handle the Sultan, in the second to help him handle the tribes. The troubles that may arise are such that a shrewd French opponent of M. ROUVIER has said that the greatest injury Germany could inflict on France would be to force her into the position her Government has insisted on assuming.

That, however, is an extreme view. While the possible difficulties cannot be ignored, and while the state of parties in France and the uncertainty of all democratic foreign policies do certainly threaten complications in the management of the Moroccan business, there is good reason to infer that this management will in the long run be fairly successful. The history of Algeria is on the whole extremely creditable to France, and it has been more so under the Republic than ever before. That colony has presented almost the same problem as is presented in Morocco, and the experience gained is sure to be of great advantage. Moreover, the one source of instability and vacillation most to be feared, the fickleness of the popular temper, is less formidable in this instance than in most others, because the pride and patriotism of the French are distinctly enlisted. The French Government has won a priceless triumph in the direction of national prestige in the Moroccan matter. The people may not very clearly understand and may not much care for Morocco, but it will always remain in their minds the thing won against the harsh and provoking opposition of Germany. They will be likely to give their Government a pretty free hand in dealing with the subject of such a victory, for they will feel that weakness in this direction would give to Germany another occasion for interference. The policy of France toward Morocco is necessarily intimately interwoven with her policy toward Algeria, and is the logical development and continuance of the latter. Her people will not readily submit, we think, to any serious change in either, and with the solid support France has now received at Algeciras, it is reasonable to predict that her course will suffer no radical change. That means utimately the control of the whole southwestern littoral of the Mediterranean—a consummation distinctly in the interest of civilization.

We publish this morning the first of a short series of articles by Dr. WILLIAM J. SHEARER, Superintendent of Schools, Elizabeth, N. J., on the subject of the faulty classification of pupils in our public schools. The writer is an educator of established reputation, who has given much study to this matter, and has devised and applied what is reported, on good authority, to be an adequate remedy for the undoubted evil he describes and discusses. The main purpose of his articles is to show how far the individual pupil fails to get from our schools the benefit he should and might get, what are the causes of this failure, and in what manner the system may be made to yield this obviously reasonable and desirable result. We invite candid attention from all interested and engaged in school work to these articles.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

An Unexpected Blow at Business. There will be, we are sure, no end of wild astonishment all over the country as soon as it becomes generally known why Mr. E. T. BEDFORD doesn't want to be the iceman any longer. In some circles the astonishment will be largely compounded of horror and in others, alas! its chief component will be admiration, but the chances are that everywhere there will be a common element of incredulity. For Mr. BEDFORD explains his retirement from the Directorate of the American Ice Company by saying that he was unalterably opposed to raising prices because of the shortage in the supply! To use his own words as they came to us: "Some people think that because there is to be an ice famine there ought to be a money plenty in the company's treasury. I think that an ice famine ought to be as much of a calamity to the company as to the public. I don't think that the shortage of ice ought to be made the excuse for increasing dividends. The company can not, will not, and should not rightly increase its earnings by selling less ice. Prosperity ought to depend on deserts and not on accidents of nature." That may be magnificent, but it certainly is not "business," for if there is any settled maxim of trade it is the one that a thing is worth what it will bring in the open market, and here is a man of large affairs who resigns high position in a great corporation simply because its other officials, noting that the supply of what they have to sell is small and the demand for it large and urgent, have felt compelled to advance prices. Mr. BEDFORD takes the strange view that what they call compulsion is only an opportunity to exploit their fellow-men ruthlessly, and it is to the taking advantage of this opportunity that he so vehemently objects. Here is heterodoxy to shake the very foundations of business as it has been understood and conducted all over the world since the first exchange of three bone fishhooks for one stone axe took place. To have a thing that many people desire with a great desire and not to make them pay for it as much as can be exacted without making them go without it altogether is—well, let us be frankly harsh and call it "idealism." No gentler word seems to fit the case. It is one that must cause widespread anxiety. Our apprehensions as to the safety of commerce and finance are mitigated, however, by the further information that Mr. BEDFORD has found no reason for resigning as Director of the Standard Oil Company and purposes to increase his present activity in the Corn Products Refining Company. Evidently there is still hope that he has not cast off all his moorings and will not for some time to come drift helplessly out into the uncharted sea where business is not business.

Extermination or Utilization. Lamentable as it is to hear of the enforced slaughter of 600 inhabitants of islands where we established peace some five years ago, there is yet consolation in the knowledge that these last rebels against our undoubtedly beneficent rule are men who, if nothing except extermination can reduce them to order, can be exterminated with exceptional facility. To be sure, the Moros are by far the bravest and most determined fighters in the Philippines, and foeman who, for barbarians, are by no means to be despised by the soldiers of any country. The very excess of their courage, however, is a fatal weakness, for it impels them to risk all in regular pitched battles, from which they have no thought of retreating in order to fight another day, and as, with all their prowess, they are no match for our soldiers, any war which they insist on having will inevitably be a short one. It is quite different in the other islands, where the natives, though possessed of no such desperately martial spirit, are yet able to conduct long and troublesome campaigns, simply because their ideal of battle is a volley from ambush and an instant retreat through jungle where they can be followed with the greatest difficulty or not at all. Extermination of the too strenuous Moros, however, may not be necessary after all. Even in this engagement not all of them fought on one side, and those who assisted our own forces so conducted themselves as to receive the hearty commendation of the American officers. This suggests an advantageous use for the Moro qualities, which are not by any means bad qualities except as they are wrongly and unwisely directed. Enrolled as constabulary under the right flag they ought to be an efficient implement for suppressing and keeping suppressed enemies who are merely bandits. Perhaps the implement will never be as trustworthy as it is efficient, but with management sufficiently tactful and patient even that difficulty might be overcome.

Policemen on the Piers. "Special details" have always been numbered among the petty abuses of our police system, but each of them has been an economy or a convenience to somebody or other, and it is not at all wonderful that by sending so many of the detailed men back to patrol duty Commissioner BINGHAM has excited loud and indignant protests from those who find themselves injuriously affected by the innovation. The latest cry comes from the shipping men through The Marine Journal. "Very soon," it says of Gen. BINGHAM, "after this gentleman assumed office he began to undo the work his predecessor had done in the matter of police protection at places where large crowds of citizens congregate at certain hours, such as the theatres, ferries, and prominent street corners where traffic is always more or less congested, and recently he has removed the necessary patrolmen from the piers along the East and North Rivers. These were the haven of thieves and toughs until the police under previous administrations routed and have since kept them from the theft of property, much of which is in transit belonging to citizens of other ports and which should be well guarded for the reason that failure to deliver it intact militates against this port as a distributing centre." The Board of Trade and Transportation, it is announced, "will take the matter up at once." Perhaps the point to take up first is demonstration of the propriety of using policemen as wharf watchmen and attendants. The city is still spending a good deal of money in protecting the water front. Special guards on piers are quite another matter.

SMALL TALK OF WASHINGTON.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, March 11.—"The flings I hear on Minnesota's Scandinavians," said Representative Adam Bede to-night, "since the debate on New Mexico's Greaser population, make me perspire occasionally. Our foreign element furnishes the best citizens we have. They become American rapidly. A large percentage of the schoolma'ams in Minnesota are bright, pretty, well-taught Scandinavian girls.

"But I think of an awful experience I had some years ago with a Scandinavian audience up in the pine woods. On the bill with me was a Norwegian who was advertised to speak in Norsk. He did not show up.

"'Can you speak Norwegian still?' asked the committeeman of me.

"I saw he thought I was a Norwegian. I lied and said that I could. When we got to the hall, what did the fellow do but make a speech saying that the Norwegian speaker could not come, but they need not be disappointed, because Mr. Bede, a native Norwegian, would take his place. The crowd was 200 or 300 big, hearty, blue-eyed chaps of the Ole and Nels class, and when I skipped to the front of the platform I would have given $5 to any one of them to come forward and eat me alive. But I put in practice the only idea I could muster to escape defeat.

"'How many of you cannot understand English?' I asked, the first thing. 'As many as cannot hold up your hands.' They were ashamed to admit that they did not understand the language of their adopted land, and not a hand came up.

"'All right, my friends,' I said. 'I am delighted to see that you all talk the glorious tongue of our fathers, the language in which the Declaration of Independence is written, and, as it makes me hoarse to talk Norwegian for any great length of time, I will go on in English, which now I know you will appreciate just as well.'

"Then I let out for three hours with the liveliest mix-up of fun and tariff I could put up. But I never think of that committeeman and those blue-eyed, fair-haired Scandinavians without a cold chill lifting my flannels an inch from my hide."

Golf as a business investment can sometimes be a good thing, as a golfer-dentist of Washington has proved.

A short time ago the President was suffering from toothache. He sought the advice of his dentist, who said he did not regard himself as expert in extracting teeth, but he knew a fellow who did nothing but pull teeth for other dentists.

"He is playing golf in great shape," said the dentist, "and he has an arm like a blacksmith. He plays golf to keep up his muscle for pulling teeth.'

So the President went and a crowd gathered on the sidewalk until the Executive toothache was exorcised at the powerful hands of the golfer-dentist.

"I was delighted," said the President afterward. "That chap pulls teeth so dreamfully that I was tempted to have him take out every one. I was forced to beat a hasty retreat in fear that I should be tempted to let him take both jawfuls."

Among the dentists it is said the golfer-dentist has doubled his income several times since he began to get a reputation on the links.

Poverty of imagination on the part of a very polite doorman has of late been giving two kinds of a reputation to Senator Knox. Newspaper men who have called to see the Senator evenings have been told at the door that he was either sick abed or at his bath.

Of three callers one evening recently two were told about two hours apart that the Senator was at bath. The other came away distinctly under the impression that the Pennsylvania Senator was a very sick man. He was astounded to see him the next morning on the street looking very well. One of those who happened to get the bath answer met the Senator.

"Senator," he said, "my paper sometimes thinks it is very necessary for me to see you in the evening. I should be very much obliged to know at just what hour I could call and not find you at your bath."

Following the explanations the doorman received a lesson that may save the Pennsylvania Senator from being regarded Nationally as an invalid who spends his entire evening in his bathtub.

Astronomy's Highest Problem.

From The London Telegraph.

The highest problem that astronomy offers is the question of the structure and form of the universe. One definite fact is known. The star clusters, gaseous nebulæ, and stars of a particular spectrum type concentrate upon the plane of the Milky Way, but objects of the class of spiral nebulæ appear to avoid the galaxy and to congregate about its poles. Yet, strange to say, in the formation south of the equator, known as the Cloud of Magellan, bodies of all classes, spiral as well as gaseous, are contained. Herbert Spencer's view of this segregation of certain kinds of nebulæ was that the stars and nebulæ must necessarily be complementary parts of one general scheme of creation, driven apart by some separative influence. Recently Mr. Hinks of the Cambridge Observatory has put forward a view which seems to fit the case as well, if not better, than the philosopher's theory. He suggests that the stars are distributed in a series of independent clouds, approximately in one plane, and that there are a number of nebulæ clouds out of that plane. The cloud in which our sun is would supply the larger stars that we see, the nearer clouds the stars of the eleventh magnitude, which are distributed in groups in the plane of the Milky Way, while the more distant clouds make up the galaxy itself. According to this hypothesis the smaller Cloud of Magellan would be one of the distant star clouds which happened to be out of the plane. The greater Magellanic cloud consists probably of nebulæ and star clusters rather than stars.

Castle's Gruesome Secret.

From The London Mail.

While digging on land near French Park, County Roscommon, on Feb. 26, a laborer discovered a cavern with an arched roof, about six feet in depth. From this a narrow winding passage led to an old castle, about a quarter of a mile distant.

The underground passage is well built, and some of the walls bear traces of inscriptions, while at a certain point a number of skeletons and bones were found, together with a quantity of metal, which proved to be armor and weapons, evidently of great antiquity.

An old legend in connection with the castle runs to the effect that ages ago the remains of one of the most powerful of the Connaught clans took refuge in this castle after their defeat in battle, and being driven into the passage it was closed up at either end by their foes and the warriors were thus left to their death.

EVIL OF EUTHANASIA TALK.

Its Effect Very Bad on Many Who Are Ill, Old, or Friendless.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Does any one ever think of the effect of the printed discussion concerning "euthanasia" upon that class of the community which is most intimately concerned in its result? Old and friendless and incurable people sometimes read the papers. A woman of my acquaintance who has spent a large share of her life in visiting among the sick and poor, and who often finds it necessary to arrange for the entrance of some sick person into a hospital, tells me that she is constantly hampered in this benevolent office by the unwillingness of the patients to go to a place where they will be helpless in the hands of strangers, and that there exists among them a universal apprehension that if their cases prove incurable they will be quietly "put out of the way," to save trouble to the doctors and nurses.

There are some things that overcome the consciousness of suffering and the desire to be free from it, and one of them is that passionate clinging to our own personality, our one inalienable gift of individuality, of identity, which makes the weariest of us willing to sit up until all the lamps but our own have gone out, and until the whole world is bitter cold around us, if we can but still keep a glimmer of light by which to study this interesting book called life.

CAROLINE HALSTEAD ROYCE.

Its Advocates Win, Says Capt. French.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have read with deep interest the pleas for euthanasia by Lurana W. Sheldon and others, as well as the criticisms by their opponents who seem to believe in the sacredness of human life, except in case of war, governmental assassination, capital punishment, slow starvation of the submerged sixth, or other form of patriotic, national, judicial, or industrial manslaughter.

To my "finite mind" and "fallible human reason" the advocates of the cup-of-merciful-oblivion, safeguarded by science, law, and intelligent public opinion, appear to have the better of the argument.

I have neither the desire nor the intent to "kill off our aged and infirm," to quote from a just and kindly believer in free speech who signs himself, with deliciously unconscious humor, "Equity."

I do not wish, or purpose, to poison my dear old mother, to bludgeon a sick sister, to strangle my wife because she is not so well as usual, to poniard my son on account of a football strain, to sneak up on the blind side of an ailing neighbor and euthanaze him, or to commit suicide because politics, insurance, and high finance have given me a pain.

But I hope that if I ever become, through disease, age, or casualty, hopelessly insane, senile, or driveling; if I should ever be an inert mass of hopeless agony, or if some incurable malady should make me a horror to the tender hearts that would minister unto me—I hope some merciful, compassionate, gently brave hand will "medicine me to that sweet sleep" or that I may have the sense, the courage, and the strength to use some means to end my pain, my shame, or my uselessness, and thus win the chance to live again before the seed of life should have rotted in the spoiled husk of the body. Only the healthy soul is immortal.

PHILIPPINE CONDITIONS.

Interesting Observations of an American Business Man in Manila.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I give you below an extract of a letter received from a personal friend in Manila, who was formerly a successful business man in this country. In addition to being a business man, he has a strong personal interest in educational and religious matters, and his opinion appears to me to be worth publishing. It was in response to my request for his frank opinion on conditions in the Philippines that this letter was written.

JOSEPH F. EASTMOND.
New York, March 7, 1906.

It will be easier for me to give an opinion as to the benefit that the possession of the Philippines will be to the United States or otherwise after action on questions pending in Congress. That the islands will be eventually benefited I do not doubt, principally from the work of the Educational Department.

The Filipinos are far superior to my expectations, and they are coming up to responsible positions with credit. The reign of the local "boss" has been absolute, and this is hard to overcome, but the people are gradually learning their rights through the school work and the support of American officials.

They are also proving to be very fair workers, where well paid and well fed. The largest contracting company here is using them exclusively for ordinary labor with entire satisfaction, which was not thought possible at the end of the war.

If we keep out of a foreign war the possession of the islands will no doubt have a great influence in gaining the increasing business of the East. In case of war, however, they will be very hard to defend, so that the whole question hinges on the policy that the Government follows, and the contingencies that cannot be foreseen. Personally I like the Filipinos very well; have some excellent friends among them, and enjoy Manila and my work here immensely.

President Fallière's Blue Tie.

The portraits of the new French President which show him attending ceremonies of state in a blue business suit set off with a flowing blue tie with white dots are as faithful as the photographs which have come to hand. "At the first Ministerial Council," writes the Paris correspondent of The London Pall Mall Gazette, "the Ministers, who had all come in solemn frock coats, were somewhat taken aback by the President's free-and-easy costume; but the hearty handshake with which he greeted them soon set them at their ease.

"M. Fallières did not display the slightest hesitation or nervousness. Without waiting for any invitation to take his seat, he installed himself at the head of the table, and commenced his duties with a little speech in which he told his Ministers that he intended to be quite frank with them and criticise them freely if he thought it necessary. This, he intimated, was the best way of showing that he did not wish to pursue a personal policy of his own."

Not of the Atlas Build?

From The Montreal Gazette.

Mr. Burgess of Texas, member of the United States House of Representatives, wants to give the Philippine Islands to King Alfonso, the Mikado, the Kaiser, or anybody who will take them; and he says he has no feeling against any of the mentioned potentates either. The United States's shoulders do not seem to be right shaped for bearing permanently that white man's burden.

Courtesy and Conviction.

From The Baltimore American.

King Edward, denouncing a particular creed as idolatrous in his coronation oath, and then amiably journeying to Spain to see his niece embrace that same creed, is an instance of how in modern life great convictions courtesy to nice customs.

MAILS WHEN CONVENIENT.

Condition of Postal Service in Regions Remote from Trains.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have been amused to read the complaints of some of your subscribers at the occasional failure of railway trains to deliver their mail on time. What would they think if they lived, as I do, seventy-five miles from a railway, and found themselves minus their mail some ten or fifteen times per month? Theoretically this town gets a mail every day. In point of fact, it is only when the mail train arrives on time at the distant station, and the coach drivers (star route) are in obliging mood, and the weather is not too bad, and no untoward accident happens en route, &c., that we get our mail.

Inquiry as to the cause of dereliction so frequent elicits no satisfactory response; complaints produce no improvement. The rotten Postal Department plumes itself on such achievements as can be widely advertised, but pays no heed to the outrages continually perpetrated on remote and inconspicuous communities. A mail service maintained month after month and year after year, with all its shameful shortcomings uncorrected, would be a matter of solicitude to the officials in some countries, but not so in ours. Shame is a negligible quantity in the United States Post Office Department.

SHAW IN SHAKESPEARE.

John Kendrick Bangs Finds Forecasts of Him in Six Plays.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

"Bard's" note on Shakespeare's prophecies is interesting, but why did he not include the frequent forecasts of G. Bernard Shaw in his examples? In "Hamlet" we have the line "Bernardo hath my place." In "Two Gentlemen of Verona" we find the following:

> Go, go, begone, to save your ship from wreck,
> Which cannot perish, having thee aboard,
> Being destined to a drier death on Shaw.

In "Merry Wives" we have "the Shaw was shelvy;" in "King John" he refers to "that white-faced Shaw;" in "Henry VI." he speaks of "this unkind Shaw," and finally in "Othello" he characterizes "the foaming Shaw."

Is it any wonder that the prophecy fulfilled does not think much of the prophet?

THE JAPANESE DIET.

Wonder Expressed That Any Change Should Be Desired.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Many of us who admire the Japanese intensely can but wonder why it is that Dr. Takaki wishes to change the diet (centuries established) of a people to whom their menu has given the most splendid qualities of any known race. Physical endurance, mental stamina, and quick perception, immunity from diseases that disseminate other nations, their unequaled fighting qualities, their resistance—why should these staying abilities be undermined by habits of diet that are in large degree responsible for the lamentable fact that the Western nations represent a quasi-hospital existence, demanding (at beck and call of each individual) a corps of specialists to keep us at all in repair? Brain, eye, nose, ear, throat, lung, stomach, heart, liver, nerve specialists—each in his own department dispensing coveted professional services among us! What a funny people they must think us, they disease free, while we are weighted with physical and nervous infirmities!

Let the Japanese keep right on in their well-tested line of diet and carefully avoid the dyspepsia-inducing habits of the English and American nations.

Good Work of City Hospital.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

About three months ago my wife was taken seriously ill, and a dangerous but necessary operation was successfully performed at the Manhattan State Hospital, Ward's Island.

I, as many others, have always before had a certain dread of hospitals; even I have had the opportunity to see a great deal of many good institutions, but I was most agreeably astonished and surprised when I saw the quarters on Ward's Island—light, lofty, airy rooms, with polished floors, separate dormitories, comfortable furniture, and even brightened with plants and cages with birds. The food was excellent, both in quantity and quality; the attendants and nurses, mostly young, pleasant women, were untiredly kind and patient; and first of all, I owe my wife's health and complete restoration to the more than extraordinary care and kindness from the doctors.

I find it simply my duty to publish these facts.

Buffalo's Mayor for Governor.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your paper of March 7 a correspondent suggests Justice Gaynor for Governor. That would meet the approval of most Democrats and independents in this State, but I wish to suggest through the columns of your paper the name of one who would meet the requirements of the writer of the letter and the voters of the State. His record as Mayor of the City of Buffalo puts him against the corporations.

An Unpublished Burns Letter.

John Thomson, Hole i' th' Wa' Inn, Dumfries, has added to his extensive collection of Burnsiana, says The Glasgow Herald, by purchasing at a Glasgow auction the following letter of Robert Burns to William Irving:

"Providence appears on some occasions to be an enemy to the extension of power beyond certain limits, and has prevented for many years the enlargement of many countries. Turkey is a case in point, Denmark is another, and the present attitude of the French nation among themselves will prevent them assuming an aggressive attitude to their neighbours.

FOREIGN NEWS IN BRIEF.

Ten thousand guns, in parts, and consigned as sewing machines to a non-existent agent in Helsingfors, Finland, have been seized by the officials there.

The Dowager Empress of Russia will shortly visit her sister, Queen Alexandra, in England, and purposes, according to London Vanity Fair, to purchase an estate in Scotland.

Loud cries of "Order" arose at the meeting of the Church of England Temperance Society at Southwark on Feb. 28, when a layman suggested that the use of alcoholic wine in the Holy Communion should be abolished.

From the crop of a Dorking rooster, which was dying from overfeeding, 15¾ ounces of undigested food were removed recently by a successful operation. The crop capacity of these birds, adds the Melbourne correspondent of The London Express, is usually 1¼ ounces.

The chief officials of the North British Railway Company are experiencing a very anxious time with regard to subsidences of the railway located over the old disused coal mines, over which route the London trains all travel from day to day.—The London Mail.

MARCH 1906

SAYS NEW YORK SCHOOLS ARE MENTAL TREADMILLS

Dr. Shearer Condemns Attempt to Average the Pupils.

UNFAIR TO APT AND SLOW

First of a Series of Papers by the Superintendent of Schools of Elizabeth, N. J.

Over half of the pupils registered in the New York public schools have not progressed further than the Second Reader and the simplest combination of numbers. Only 30 per cent. of these have progressed so far. Sixty-four per cent. of those registered have not gone further than the primary grades, where only the most advanced finish the Third Reader, and gain a fair knowledge of addition, subtraction, multiplication, and division.

Ninety per cent. of those registered below the high school have gone less than half through the grammar grades. This means that only one out of ten registered has progressed far enough to be able to read with intelligence and understand the simplest problems. It means that not more than one out of ten could find the interest of $125 for three months at 5 per cent. But 4 per cent. of those on the register have reached the highest grammar grade. This is certainly the least education that any boy or girl should have to become a good citizen and be prepared to successfully fight life's battle with competition growing more and more keen every day.

New York Behind Philadelphia.

In the number reaching the high schools, Philadelphia stands twenty-third in a list of twenty-four of the largest cities. New York stands even lower than Philadelphia. But 3½ per cent. of the pupils enrolled have reached the high school. The graduates numbered only 3 per cent. of the enrollment in all the high schools, while some fall far below this. With over 1,100 pupils, the High School of Commerce had but twenty-five graduates. Less than one-fifth of 1 per cent. of the pupils in the schools were in the graduating classes, which were the only ones receiving the full benefit of the public schools.

How many thousands are not attending school no one can tell, as no school census has been taken of the number of children of school age. The average daily attendance is 156,000 less than the net enrollment. It is probable that at least 100,000 others are attending no school. Unless part are in private schools, what kind of an education were these 250,000 embryo citizens receiving upon the streets?

Percentage of Loss Grows.

In the New York report it is acknowledged that 192,000 of those enrolled are from one to seven years behind the proper grade for their age. It is probably twice this number. A glance at the table on Page 47 shows that the number losing from one to seven years increases greatly each year. The proportion who have lost time in the second year is 65 per cent. greater than the number losing time in the first year. The proportion losing time in the third year is 100 per cent. greater than the number losing time in the first year. The proportion losing time in the fourth and fifth years is 110 per cent. greater than the number losing time in the first year. The proportion losing time in the sixth year is about 90 per cent. more than the number losing time in the first year.

The report shows that out of 491,000 pupils in attendance at the end of June only 55,000 had reached the higher grammar grades. These are all that are left to represent the "survival of the fittest." Though the sifting-down process has caused many of them to reach these grades years after they should, they have not been forced to stop school.

Is it any wonder that in his last report Supt. Maxwell says: "The most important problem of the day in school administration is how to get the older pupils who are cumbering the lower grades into the higher grades. Their presence in the lower grades is detrimental to the younger children, because they take much of the teacher's time and attention that belong to the children of normal age. * * * To the solution of this problem, the Board of Superintendents, the District Superintendents, and the Principals must devote their best efforts." It is encouraging to note that Dr. Maxwell appreciates the absolute necessity of demanding that the Superintendents "devote their best efforts" to correcting this terrible condition. The careful study being made by such experts as Drs. Edson, Stevens, O'Brien, and others of the Board of Superintendents, justifies the hope that a change for the better may be made.

In Intellectual Lock-Step.

Visits to the schools prove that 500,000 pupils are bound in chain gangs of from thirty-five to forty, and forced to move in intellectual lock-step not only month after month, but year after year for their whole school lives.

Why should 500,000 children be placed upon intellectual treadmills and compelled to move at the same pace for their whole school lives? Who will dare defend the plan which compels the poor teacher, by holding back some and driving forward others, to try to keep all moving at the same rate? Why must teachers with them by companies instead of giving attention to their individual differences?

By everlastingly prodding the slow and by continually trying to hold back the bright, the teachers are trying to make all move at the same pace. It is not work but worry which is greatly injuring the pupils and teachers. Ask any teacher of your acquaintance if the present system of organization does not compel her to strive to make all appear of equal attainments and equal ability. Go from school to school, as I have done, and search in vain for a class containing only those pupils who should be in the class.

Taking the schools visited as fair specimens, it is reasonable to assert that not less than 200,000 children are being greatly injured mentally and morally by being kept where the work is not suited to them. In place of being classified as they should be, it means that many thousands are being dragged over the work faster than they should go. The majority of these soon become discouraged and, having lost not only the confidence of parents and teachers, but, what is far worse, having lost all confidence in their own abilities, they drop out of school only to become ruined characters and dangerous citizens.

It means also that many thousands are being held back by the slow ones and drilled in habits of inattention and idleness by the senseless, unnecessary marking time, waiting for the others to catch up. Is it any wonder that so many lose interest and stop school?

Many Thousands Not Promoted.

The 1st of February probably not less than 150,000 children were told that they could not be promoted. This means that they must lose six months, though probably only a month or less behind those of their own class who were promoted. In June as many more will receive the same discouraging sentence. This will mean that in a year's time 150,000 years will be lost unnecessarily. Whether the number failing to be promoted is larger or smaller than the number above mentioned cannot be determined, for the reason that the Superintendent's report is ominously silent upon this vital subject. Without facts it is hard to judge accurately concerning this and many other important school matters.

That the apportionment of the work in New York makes it impossible to fit the instruction to all pupils in any class will be seen from a brief glance at the conditions. The course of study is divided into a number of parts, each supposed to contain sufficient work for one-half a year. Some teachers say they act upon the belief that the amount of work is suited to the bright pupils. In this case all the rest are dragged over far more work than they can understand, therefore they soon become discouraged and drop out of school.

Regardless of thoroughness, the slower are rushed over the work. They fall behind, stumble for a time at the foot of the class, and then, misunderstood, unappreciated, and discouraged, drop out of school or are quietly obliged to leave lest "they bring down the examination average."

Unfair to Brighter Pupils.

Most teachers say that the work is graded for the slower pupils. If so, this is certainly an outrage on the large majority, who can and should go forward more rapidly. Not only is the progress of all kept down to the pace of these slower ones, but, worse than this, the majority of pupils are drilled in habits of inattention and idleness. Some teachers have been continuing this so long that they believe the pupils do not differ materially in their ability. However, nearly all with whom I have talked realized the great injury done the pupils by such a method of stifling talent.

Most of those who prepare courses of study aim to fit the work to the "average pupil." At first sight this looks reasonable; but could anything be more absurd? It would be just as sensible to say that as the pupils in a certain grade vary in height from three feet six inches to four feet four inches, and as they now average four feet, and by the end of the year should average four feet one inch, those naturally tall must gradually be compressed, and those naturally short must go through a stretching process that all may come up to the desired average.

What a system this would be for the physical development of the children!

The truth is, that, neglecting the ever-present individual pupil of flesh and blood, of soul and life, and infinite possibility, the attempt has been made to reach all by shaping the work for the mythical "average pupil."

Must Lose Time or Leave School.

The truth is that the course of study is nailed to the calendar; when the sign is right, the pupils are subjected to a useless examination, which the lucky pass, while the rest lose half a year or leave school. Thus year after year in chain gangs are the bright and the slow bound and forced to move at the same pace for their whole school lives.

That the work should be suited to all none will deny, yet it is evident that, whether graded for the bright, the slow, or the average, the instruction is not suited to more than one-half the class.

Children are not alike in ability or in any other way, and God never intended they should be made alike. Why, then, should we put them into "educational mills," and attempt to grind them out alike, crushing out that individuality which He meant should be a guide to their education and usefulness, and not a hindrance thereto?

Is there any reason why we should labor to produce uniformity of tastes, of characters, of ability, of aspirations? Is not individuality of more importance than uniformity of work? Is it not the divinity of the child? Should it not be sought for and discovered, that it may be carefully studied and lovingly guarded?

Does not biography teach us that only those have become distinguished who have developed a love for work along particular lines? Is it not time that we cease condemning the teachers because, in spite of all the mentioned differences and many others unmentioned, but not undiscovered, they cannot produce symmetrical nonentities? Must the teachers, limited in power and by conditions, be criticised because they cannot overcome the difference in ability and conditions predetermined by the Almighty?

IKON FOR DR. HOTOVITSKY.

Pontifical Mass Celebrates Anniversary of His Ordination.

The tenth anniversary of the ordination to the priesthood of the Very Rev. Dr. A. A. Hotovitsky, Archpriest and Dean of St. Nicholas Cathedral, in East Ninety-seventh Street, was celebrated yesterday by a notable jubilee service. Archbishop T'khon pontificated at the solemn high mass, assisted by the Right Rev. Bishop Raphael of Brooklyn and other priests of the Archdiocese.

Representatives of the Russian and Greek Governments in this country attended the mass, including Col. Nicholas D. Raspopoff, Military Attaché of the Russian Embassy at Washington; Commander Arkady Nebolsine, Naval Attaché; Nicholas de Loygensky, the Russian Consul General in this city, and Ernest Schilling and Paul Tiesenhausen, the First and Second Vice Consuls. The Green Consul, Demetrius N. Botassi, with his staff, was also present.

The cathedral was crowded to its doors, and an elaborate musical service was rendered. After the benediction the Rev. B. Turkevich, Secretary of the Ecclesiastical Consistory of the Archdiocese, presented the Right Rev. Dr. Hotovitsky with an ikon, "The Resurrection." In making the presentation the part that Dr. Hotovitsky played in establishing the cathedral and other churches in various parts of the country was recited.

At the close of the services prayers were said for the Czar, the royal family, the President of the United States, the Holy Synod, the clergy, and the people. A reception and dinner followed in the archiepiscopal residence next door.

Dr. Hotovitsky was graduated at the St. Petersburg Academy ten years ago with first honors, and coming to this country, was ordained in San Francisco. He was stationed in New York and built up the orthodox congregation in Second Avenue until new quarters were demanded. He personally raised, largely in Russia, the $160,000 expended in the erection and furnishing of the cathedral and enjoys the friendship of the Holy Synod of Russia to the fullest extent.

AUTOMOBILE SAVED THE HERBERT CONCERT

It Rushed Wiley, the Baritone, to the Hippodrome.

MACHINE A DRESSING ROOM

The Singer Finished His Toilet In It, at Least—Another Soloist's Illness Caused All This.

Frederic Thompson's 60-horse automobile saved Victor Herbert's first concert in the Hippodrome last evening.

An elaborate programme had been arranged for Mr. Herbert's opening night. Jean Gerardy, the 'cellist, and Miss Blanche Duffield, the soprano, were to be the stars and the orchestra had been increased to sixty-five pieces. Mr. Herbert, believing that everything was all right, was taking his afternoon siesta at his residence, 31 West 108th Street, when the telephone bell rang.

"Miss Duffield is suffering from a severe attack of laryngitis," came a voice from 336 West Ninety-fifth Street, Miss Duffield's home; "she cannot sing to-night."

Mr. Herbert said into the telephone that he was very sorry, and then began to wonder what he could do. While wondering he got his manager, W. B. Clayton, on the telephone and ordered his automobile. It looked as if there might be use for it. When Clayton arrived, the telephone was put into service again, but all the impresarios that could be aroused were very sorry they could not help Mr. Herbert out.

Then began an automobile hunt for soloists.

"To Brooklyn," was the first order to the chauffeur. Several prima donnas live in that borough, and Mr. Herbert was sure one of them could be induced to step into the breach. It was after 5:30 o'clock then, and the overture at the Hippodrome was only three hours away. The Brooklyn trip was fruitless. The singers were out of the city, and after a parley conductor and manager came to the conclusion that a violinist or a pianist would have to do. Back flew the machine to Manhattan, but through some strange fatality it appeared that every singer and concert soloist was either engaged or in another place. It was after 6 o'clock, and to disappoint a first night audience is a bad start. Then Mr. Herbert suddenly said:

"To the Breslin, quick. Clifford Wiley, the baritone, is stopping there," he told his astonished manager. "It is our last hope."

"Mr. Wiley is in New Rochelle visiting friends," was the answer Mr. Herbert got.

He sighed. Then he found out who Mr. Wiley's friends were and got them on the telephone. Mr. Wiley was out taking a walk. He would call up Mr. Herbert when he returned. Herbert and Clayton went into the Breslin café and tried to forget their woes while waiting.

At 6:30 Mr. Wiley's deep baritone was heard over the telephone. Yes, he would help Mr. Herbert. He would take the first train. Mr. Herbert would meet him at the station. The atmosphere cleared. Then they told the Hippodrome people all about it, and Mr. Thompson's machine, which is a wonder in capacity and swiftness, was rushed to the Grand Central.

It was nearly 8 o'clock when Mr. Wiley arrived. Mr. Herbert had discovered that he must go home and dress, and had left Clayton on guard. The automobile tore up the ground between the station and the Breslin. Mr. Wiley went up to dress. After waiting as long as he thought he ought to, Clayton rushed upstairs, grabbed the singer, half pushed and half coaxed him down to the automobile, and whisked him off to the Hippodrome. Mr. Wiley finished tying his necktie and buttoning his waistcoat and putting on his gloves and overcoat in the automobile. They got to the theatre just as Mr. Herbert swung his baton for the overture. Mr. Wiley was next on the bill. He had recovered his breath, and made one of the hits of the evening. The balance of the programme follows:

Overture, "Si j' étais roi"........Adam

JOSEF LHEVINNE'S RECITAL.

The Russian Pianist Plays in Carnegie Hall.

Josef Lhévinne, the Russian pianist, gave a recital yesterday afternoon in Carnegie Hall, where a large audience heard him with somewhat indiscriminate admiration. Mr. Lhévinne was singularly unskillful in the choice of his programme; some of the music he played was not interesting in itself, and some of it was not so well calculated to bring his best qualities forward. So it resulted that the effect he produced was considerably less than it has been on his previous appearances here. He began with an arrangement by d'Albert of one of Bach's organ preludes and fugues, which he played, as piano virtuosos are very apt to play, for the purposes of display, much too fast; so that it was, notwithstanding Mr. Lhévinne's clear technique, not clear nor rhythmical.

The sonata in C major by Weber (touched up for modern players by Henselt) is far less effective and less musically significant than its brother in A flat that pianists play; this one is seldom set before the public except the last movement, the "Perpetuum Mobile" that is a favorite show piece in various arrangements. The reason it is not played was evident from Mr. Lhévinne's performance, as it is dull and old-fashioned music, with only flashes now and then of Weber's individuality. Yet it seemed as if the andante might have glowed with a more romantic warmth than the player imparted to it, and the "Perpetuum Mobile" might have scintillated more.

There was more pleasure given in his second group, Schumann's Toccata, Schubert's G major impromptu—also lacking warmth and color—Mendelssohn's E major Presto, effectively and brilliantly played, and the polonaise in F sharp minor by Chopin, seldom heard, but a most beautiful and effective work.

SAYS HELL IS HABIT.

Mr. Grant Warns Y. M. C. A. Members Against Disregarding Nature.

Roland Dwight Grant of Portland, Ore., delivered an address to the Twenty-third Street Branch of the Young Men's Christian Association in the Grand Opera House yesterday afternoon, in which he strove to show that hell should be spelled with five letters, h-a-b-i-t.

Habit, said Mr. Grant, is a disregard of the first promptings of nature, which, our friend at first, becomes our enemy when disregarded.

"Men, nowadays," said the speaker, "work too hard. They neglect their food, their sleep, their exercise. Nature warns them, but they strive to overcome nature; then nature, like a woman scorned, turns and becomes the enemy of the scorner.

"It is the law of nature. Look into the doctor's office and see the wrecks applying for a bracer. Look at the platform of life in your mind's eye. See the lusty young men trooping up one side and the old wrecks tottering down the other. The young people, eager for the rush of living, look pityingly across the platform at the old tottering wrecks, thinking what fools they are, while the old wrecks look back at the young ones, knowing what fools the young ones are, or are going to be.

"You remember when you smoked your first cigar, how nature warned you before you were half through the weed. Next time she warned you again, but less. Then she ceased to warn you, and—is it not strange?—turned around and helped you enjoy your cigars and urged you to smoke them at all hours of the day and night. It is the same with drink as with cigars; it is the same in every case where nature's first warnings are disregarded. She is your friend when most unkind, your worst enemy when smiling most.

"The end of it is that you discover that nature would always have been your friend had you taken her first warning and not allowed natural indulgences to become a habit. Law is the basis of everything, including happiness, and hell is habit."

ROCKEFELLER, JR., RESTING.

Will Lead His Bible Class Next Sunday, but Not Regularly Thereafter.

The Rev. W. S. Richardson, secretary of John D. Rockefeller, Jr.'s Bible Class, acted as leader yesterday to the hundred and more men who met in the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church in the morning.

Mr. Richardson announced that he had received a letter from Mr. Rockefeller saying that he would not be able to lead this Sunday, but would lead next Sunday. A couple of weeks' rest, wrote Mr. Rockefeller, was necessary for him. He also reminded his class that in resuming his leadership he could not be expected to lead with any great regularity.

Mr. Richardson continued his study of the character of Moses, and asked the members of the class for their opinion on the hardening of the heart of the great law giver.

Mr. Smith, the Scotchman who has long been a member of the class and who claims no particular religion as his own, but believes that there is much good in all creeds, said that his view of Moses and of things in general was optimistic. He said that Moses could do wrong without violating the law, and in this day there might be found those who could give Moses much interesting instruction along that line.

"But I ken the warl' be better now than ever," he added.

Another member in the rear of the hall quoted the prophets, and declared that "unless the Spirit of God is in you, ye are as dead men."

"The whole bunch of us are dead men," he declared, "unless we keep the spirit within us, and we'll all become hardened if we don't sit up and take notice. All of us should make it a point to find a good preacher and go to hear him regularly."

The colored member of the class gave quite a discussion of Moses's character.

At the close of the meeting the following, who have addressed the class, were elected as honorary members: Ev-Gov. A. J. Montague of Virginia, Senator Everett J. Colby of New Jersey, Dr. Charles P. Fagnani, Hall Caine, J. G. Phelps Stokes, Jr.; James G. Cannon, and Kerr Boyce Tupper.

NO REWARD FOR HIM.

Repentant Dog Thief Restores Buster to His Owner and Escapes.

A boy about 15 years old furtively ran up the steps of the house at 54 West Forty-sixth Street yesterday afternoon, carrying a tired and unhappy looking Boston terrier having a white head and a single black spot between his ears. The boy rang the bell and an elderly woman appeared.

"Lady," said the boy hurriedly, throwing the dog at her, "I guess dis pup's yourn. Good-bye!"

Then he ran.

"Buster!" shrieked the woman as she made a grab for the dog and kissed him on the end of the nose. "My darling Buster! Thank goodness you're home again."

The dog wagged his tail at a great rate. Suddenly the woman, remembering, ran to the steps.

"Come back, little boy, and get your reward," she called. "Here's money for bringing Buster back."

But the boy had disappeared. Around the corner a reporter heard him saying to a group of his friends:

"Gee, fellers, I didn't have de nerve to take de old lady's coin. I stole de dog all right, but when he gits sore and quits eatin' I takes him back."

The woman, as she continued to caress Buster, said she had offered a reward for the dog, but she didn't want her name in the newspapers even if she had.

SOCIETY IN WASHINGTON.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, March 11.—The French Ambassador and Mme. Jusserand entertained the members of their embassy at dinner this evening, the occasion being in the nature of a welcome to Counselor and des Portes de la Fosse, who returned during the present week from a six months' leave of absence abroad.

The British Ambassador and Lady Durand also entertained at an informal dinner party this evening, as did the Speaker and Miss Cannon.

The Baroness von Hengelmüller, wife of the Ambassador from Austria-Hungary, resumed her at homes to-day, when she was greeted by a large number of visitors. The Ambassador and Baroness returned Saturday from a two weeks' visit in New York.

Mr. and Mrs. John R. McLean gave their first large dinner of the season last evening, when they entertained in honor of the Vice President and Mrs. Fairbanks. To meet the latter were present the Russian Ambassador to the United States and Baroness Rosen, the Russian Ambassador to Japan and Mme. Bakematof, the latter a sister of the hostess; the Ambassador from Brazil and Mme. Nabuco, M. and Mme. Wilenkin of the Russian Embassy staff, the Belgian Minister and Baroness Moncheur, Senator and Mrs. Newlands, Mr. and Mrs. Perry Belmont, Mrs. Horatio Slater, and Senator Beveridge.

Mr. and Mrs. McLean entertained a second company this evening in honor of the Secretary of the Treasury and Mrs. Shaw, and to-morrow evening will give a farewell dinner to the Ambassador to Japan and Mme. Bakematof, who leave for San Francisco Thursday.

Lieut. Col. Count Gleichen, Military Attaché of the British Embassy, who recently arrived at his post, has taken the house 1,915 N Street, and bids fair to be among the notable bachelor hosts of the capital.

Albert Clifford Barney entertained at luncheon, followed by an informal musicale to-day.

Gen. and Mrs. A. E. Bates entertained at dinner this evening complimentary to their guests, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick R. Swift of New York.

Mr. and Mrs. Chermont of the Brazilian Embassy entertained at luncheon to-day at their residence on New Hampshire Avenue.

Miss Bessie von Rensselaer of New York has arrived for a visit of several weeks' to Mrs. Richardson, who has reopened her house on I Street for the Spring season.

AUNTIE'S NICE ESCORT WAS A YOUNG WOMAN

Annie's Silk Hat Impressed the Girls for a While.

THEN THEY HEARD HER VOICE

That Was When Aunty Fell Off the Car, and the Young Masquerader Was Arrested.

Several girls who boarded a Hamburg Avenue car in Williamsburg last night were much impressed by the handsome young escort of an elderly woman who got into the car at Leonard Street. The escort was neatly dressed in a black suit, tightly fitting Spring overcoat, silk hat, and black kid gloves. Some of the girls in the car commented on the pretty pink tie that completed what was visible in the costume. When they noticed that he was with the elderly woman, they asked in tones loud enough to be heard whether the elderly woman was "taking Charlie out for a ride."

When the car reached Palmetto Street the elderly woman, starting to get off, tripped on the platform and fell to the pavement on her face. Her silk-hatted companion immediately shrieked a truly feminine shriek. Kneeling beside the prostrate form of the elderly woman, her silk-hatted escort sobbed in feminine tones:

"Speak to me, Aunty, oh, speak! Tell me, are you hurt, or dead?"

Policeman Edward Johnson of the Hamburg Avenue Station, who joined the crowd that had quickly gathered, summoned an ambulance.

"Who is the injured woman?" inquired the policeman.

"She is my aunt," sobbed the silk-hatted person; "she is Mrs. Emma Josephson of 58 Moore Street."

"You are a woman yourself," suggested the policeman, raising the silk hat and examining the coil of long hair tucked up beneath it."

"Yes," was the reply, "I'm Mrs. Josephson's niece Annie."

After the ambulance surgeon had dressed the wounds of Mrs. Josephson, the niece, Annie, who was in men's clothing, was put under arrest and taken to the Hamburg Avenue Police Station, followed by a crowd of several hundred curious men and women. At the station Annie said she was 17 years old. She declared she had masqueraded as a man just to celebrate an Armenian holiday, yesterday, as she and her relatives were Armenians and it was the Armenian custom to masquerade as the boys and girls of New York do on Thanksgiving Day. She also said she lived at 37 Moore Street and was accompanying her aunt to visit the home of an uncle, Harry Eisenbach of 244 Palmetto Street.

In the meantime the clang of the ambulance bell had attracted Uncle Eisenbach to the corner. He was greatly surprised to learn that his niece had been taken to the police station, but he received a greater shock when he went and found her in a cell in men's clothing. The aunt was taken home suffering from several scalp wounds and bruises.

Annie's uncle furnished bail for Annie's appearance in court to-day, where she will be arraigned on a charge of disorderly conduct for wearing men's clothing.

PROMISES FRENCH THEATRE.

Robert Grau Says He Has Backers and Will Found One Here.

Robert Grau said last night that he had arranged to open a permanent French theatre in this city on Oct. 1, in which the plays of Molière and other classic authors will be produced. Mr. Grau said that the venture is backed by several wealthy men who have already subscribed for boxes, and he will soon go to Paris to engage a company.

Mr. Grau also said that on Easter Monday he will produce in Montreal a romantic play entitled "The Younger Son," by Dell Livingston, which after three weeks on the road he will bring to this city.

THE WEATHER.

WASHINGTON, March 11.—The Northwestern area of high pressure and cold weather has overspread the eastern slope of the Rocky Mountains and the plains States west of the Mississippi, the fall in temperature over Northern Texas, Oklahoma, and Kansas ranging from 14 to 48 degrees. A depression of considerable extent still overlies the plateau region and the Southwest, and a second disturbance has moved from Northern Texas to the Upper Ohio Valley. Snow has fallen from the lower lake regions southwestward from the Ohio Valley into Missouri, and light snows continue in Wyoming and Colorado.

For Monday rain is indicated in New England and in the northern portion of the Middle Atlantic States. There also will be rain in Tennessee and the Lower Mississippi Valley and snow will continue in the Middle Rocky Mountain region and along the lower lakes. The temperature will fall sharply in Southern Texas and thence northeastward to the Ohio Valley and it will be colder Tuesday in the East Gulf and Southern Atlantic States; also in the Middle Atlantic States. The temperature will rise in the Northwest and in the Upper Mississippi Valley Tuesday.

The winds along the New England Coast will be fresh and variable, becoming northwest; Middle Atlantic Coast, fresh, southerly, shifting to northwest; South Atlantic Coast, fresh south; East Gulf Coast, light south; West Gulf Coast, brisk northwest; Lake Michigan, fresh to brisk northwest.

FORECAST FOR TO-DAY AND TO-MORROW.

New England and Eastern New York, rain in south, snow in north portion Monday; Tuesday, fair and colder, variable winds, becoming fresh northwest.

Western New York, snow and colder Monday; Tuesday, fair, except snow flurries along the lakes.

Eastern Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Delaware, rain, probably turning to snow, and much colder Monday; Tuesday, fair, fresh to brisk northwest winds.

Western Pennsylvania, snow and much colder Monday; Tuesday, fair, continued colder, fresh northwest winds.

The temperature record for the twenty-four hours ended at midnight, taken from the thermometer at the local office of the United States Weather Bureau, is as follows:

	1905.	1906.		1905.	1906.
3 A. M.	31	32	4 P. M.	36	43
6 A. M.	25	31	6 P. M.	36	41
9 A. M.	27	36	9 P. M.	34	43
12 M.	32	41	12 P. M.	34	42

This thermometer is 108 feet above the street level. The average temperature yesterday was 37 degrees; for the corresponding date last year it was 32 degrees; average on the corresponding date for the last twenty-five years, 36 degrees. The temperature at 8 A. M. yesterday was 32 degrees; at 8 P. M. it was 42 degrees. Maximum temperature, 44 degrees at 2:30 P. M.; minimum, 31 degrees at 5:45 A. M. Humidity, 57 per cent. at 8 A. M.; 58 per cent. at 8 P. M.

A LADY IN WAITING
By CHARLES WOODCOCK SAVAGE.
Every one wants to know what actuates a girl to be cruel to the man she loves. The author of this book has dipped into the psychology of girlhood and interprets the motives of a little aristocrat in France in her first love affair in a most wonderful manner. Later she is separated from her lover, and bitterly regrets her cruelty, her positive inability to be kind for fear of seeming to yield too quickly. It is not until after the dark days of the Revolution that they are reunited and happy at last.

STARS SING STABAT MATER.

Rossini's Work Given with Full Opera Chorus and Orchestra.

The Metropolitan Opera House was crowded last night with a typical Sunday night audience of music lovers. Rossini's "Stabat Mater" was the chief attraction. This followed a miscellaneous concert, after the intermission. The soloists were Miss Bessie Abott, Mme. Marie Rappold, Mme. Louise Homer, Andreas Dippel, and Pol Plançon. The entire Metropolitan Opera House chorus and orchestra were under the direction of Arturo Vigna.

Rossini's "Stabat Mater" was splendidly rendered. Mmes. Rappold and Homer, with Dippel and Plançon and the chorus, sang the introduction "Stabat Mater Dolorosa." M. Dippel sang the aria, "Cujus Animam." Mmes. Rappold and Homer gave the duet, "Quis est Homo." M. Plançon sang the aria, "Pro Peccatis," and with the chorus the aria "Eia Mater." The quartet, "Sancta Mater istud agas," was sung by Mmes. Rappold, Homer, and by MM. Dippel and Plançon. Mme. Homer sang the cavatina, "Fac ut Portem," and Mme. Rappold, with the chorus, the aria, "Inflammatus." "In Sempiterna Saecula" was sung by the chorus.

It was the sixteenth and the last but one of the Sunday night concerts at popular prices. Many were turned away because the Opera House could accommodate no more.

Edward Chesley Swett.

Special to The New York Times.

PORTLAND, Me., March 11.—Edward Chesley Swett died to-night in the insane asylum at Augusta. He was born in Portland Jan. 5, 1843. He was a veteran of the civil war, serving in the Twenty-fifth Maine. He was appointed Post Office Inspector for the Middle and New England States by President Cleveland, and was a member of the committee that notified Mr. Cleveland of his nomination. Since 1896, when he turned Republican, Mr. Swett had twice been elected to the State Legislature.

Obituary Notes.

GEORGE S. FOX, one of the owners of The Morning Mercury of New Bedford, Mass., and long identified with the newspaper business, died at his home in New Bedford yesterday at the age of 59 years.

MARGARET NICHOLAS HOGAN, widow of Timothy Hogan of the firm of T. Hogan & Sons, members of the Produce Exchange, died on Saturday at her residence, 131 West Eighty-sixth Street. Francis M. Wilson, a son by her first husband, Thomas W. Wilson, survives her. Funeral services will be held from her home at 10 o'clock this morning; the interment is to be at Greenwood.

THOMAS E. McKENNA, managing editor of The Rocky Mountain News and of The Denver Times, died on Saturday night at a Denver (Col.) hospital of heart disease, aged 45. He was born in Montreal, Canada, and for four years was secretary and manager of the Shamrock lacrosse team, which held the championship of Canada and England. Mr. McKenna had been connected with The News for seventeen years, and managing editor of the paper for the last ten years.

MARC DE VENOGE, 75 years old, who died at his residence, 1,177 Third Avenue, on Saturday after several weeks illness, was born in Paris. He came to this country 45 years ago and until 1888 was head of the wine firm of De Venoge & Co. At that time he was appointed to a place in the Park Department which he held until his last illness. He was a member of the Delaware Club and Tammany Hall.

SIGMUND ZEIT, seventy-seven years old, formerly well known in the wholesale jewelry business in the Maiden Lane district, died on Friday at his home, 201 West One Hundred and Eleventh Street, after a brief illness. He was born in Germany and came to this country when he was twenty-two years old. He retired from business twenty years ago. Since then he had been living in this city. He leaves four sons and two daughters. The funeral services will take place at the residence to-day. The burial will be at Cypress Hills.

JOHN TAYLOR SHERMAN of 35 Remsen Street, Brooklyn, died at his home yesterday of heart trouble. He had been ill for several months. He was a son of the late Charles T. Sherman and was born in 1831 at Sheffield, Conn. He came to this city when a young man and engaged in white goods importing, becoming the head of the firm of Sherman & Sons Company of 64 Leonard Street, Manhattan. He retired from business two years ago. He leaves two sons and three daughters.

Miss Primrose
The freshness and tender simplicity of Roy Rolfe Gilson's works have won for him a large circle of readers. Readers of "In the Morning Glow" and "When Love Is Young" know the potent charm of this perennially refreshing fiction. Mr. Gilson's portrayal of little Bertram has the same simplicity and charm that have made his former books so popular. The pictures of village life are exquisitely shaded, and Miss Primrose's romance adds a touch of sentiment and humor to a story of delightful originality.

COAL STRIKE'S EFFECT

Market Rose During Anthracite Struggle in 1902.

PRICE MOVEMENTS THIS YEAR

Recent Decline Probably Due Partly to Discounting of Possible Coal Strike—Firm Money Another Factor.

The possible effects upon the stock market of a strike in the anthracite coal fields have naturally been given attention recently by speculators as well as investors. The apprehension on the subject is regarded as one of the factors which have helped to bring about the recent decline in prices on the Stock Exchange. The last great coal strike is still fresh in the memory of all who suffered loss and inconvenience as a result of it, but the bearing of that strike upon the stock market has apparently been lost sight of in recent discussion of the probable effect upon the market of a recurrence of the struggle between the operators and the miners in the Pennsylvania coal fields.

It is a noteworthy fact that during the coal strike of 1902 new high prices were being made in a number of securities on the Stock Exchange. Even the coal stocks themselves with very few exceptions sold lower during the two months immediately preceding the strike than at any time during the period when the mines were actually shut down.

The great anthracite strike began on May 12, 1902, and continued until Oct. 23. The course of prices during that year up to the termination of the strike shows clearly how little effect was exerted by the actual strike even though prices were disturbed by its approach. The table given below shows the range during the first three months of 1902, the low for May, the month in which the strike occurred, and the high point reached during the strike for the principal anthracite and bituminous coal stocks and for a number of other railroad and industrial issues:

It will be seen that in most cases the prices of stocks were lower before the strike than they were in May, when the strike occurred, and that after that date instead of further declines large advances occurred in many issues. The most striking case among the anthracite stocks was Reading common. Before the strike was declared it sold as low as 52¼, but recovered to about 60 in May. During the period of the strike the stock advanced 18 points further, to 78½. In general the movement of all the anthracite stocks was toward improvement as soon as the strike went into effect. The inference, of course, is that the influence of the strike upon the earnings of the coal roads had been fully discounted in the market before the strike began. The course of these stocks from May until October, when the strike was brought to a close, suggests that the market was governed largely by the view that each week brought the strike nearer to an end, and that therefore each successive week made purchases of these stocks safer.

The bituminous coal roads profited of course by the shortened supply of anthracite, but the improvement in these stocks was in some cases no larger than that which occurred in the anthracite stocks themselves. Taking the list as a whole it will be seen that in a number of cases the high prices of the year were recorded while the struggle between the miners and the operators was still in progress. It was during this period that Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul sold up to 198¾ and that Pennsylvania reached 170.

Curiously the low prices of the year, even in some of the issues most directly affected by the coal strike, were reached after the differences between the miners and the operators had been settled by arbitration. This was due, however, to the abnormal stringency of the money market during the latter part of 1902, and had apparently no reference whatever to the coal strike or its consequences.

How far the recent decline in the stock market has reflected a discounting of a possible coal strike cannot of course be determined. It is not possible to separate the effect of this factor from others which have been at work, including the unseasonable firmness of the money market. It is nevertheless interesting to note this year's movements in the coal stocks and in other issues.

The high and low prices so far this year, the price at the close of last week, and the net recovery from the low of the year for the stocks, contained in the previous table, are shown below:

RECORD STEEL EXPORTS.

February Shipments the Heaviest—This Port at the Head.

The exports of various iron and steel material again broke all monthly records in February. Almost 14,500 tons of wire, nails, and iron pipe were shipped abroad last month through New York and other Eastern seaboard points. These form the largest consignments ever made to foreign countries in any one month in the history of the trade. The shipments of steel rails, billets, &c., were also exceptionally heavy, aggregating nearly 50,000 tons. In addition to these huge shipments, big lots went overland to the Pacific Coast for export to the Far East, and considerable quantities were also sent abroad by way of Southern ports.

In February exports this port handled more than the combined shipments made through Philadelphia and Baltimore. These ports, especially Baltimore, have previously taken care of the bulk of the shipments made to foreign countries from the Atlantic Coast. New York shipped nearly 36,000 tons out of the 64,000 tons exported last month. Another feature of the February shipments was the large consignments which went to South America, hitherto a stronghold of the German and British iron and steel manufacturers.

The steel rail exports of the month were 26,818 tons, of which 14,132 tons went to the Argentine Republic.

OLD TREES FOR NEW CARS.

Some Historic English Oaks That Have Gone Into Dining Cars.

Since the passing of the old style of railroad car design that loaded every available space with scroll work and passementerie, the car-building companies are paying more and more attention to the perfection of details which makes the cost of the simple interiors of the hygienically designed cars of the new idea mount up to even higher figures than were paid for the old.

One of the best-known car-building concerns has just completed two diners that are paneled with the wood of one of the famous English oaks of Rockingham. A few years ago the Watson family, owners of Rockingham Park, were compelled to sell some of the old trees to raise money. Twenty-seven of the largest of the ancient oaks were cut and sold to the American car builders. The tree which furnished wood for the diners mentioned was nearly eight feet in diameter, and within its bulk the sawyers found relics of three periods of English history. The first find was a flattened musket ball under six inches of new wood. It had evidently belonged to a type of gun used in the eighteenth century. Deeper in the trunk the workmen came on a matchlock slug which the antiquarians said was of the Cromwellian period. Most interesting of all was an ancient gate-hook of wrought iron imbedded almost at the tree's heart which must have been driven home when the eight-foot trunk had been little bigger than post-timber. Experts said the growth of wood over the iron had taken at least eight centuries in its making.

THE STEEL TRADE POSITION.

Pittsburg Reports Dullness, with Firm Prices—Heavy New York Orders.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, Penn., March 11.—Trading in iron and steel remains slow. Prices are firm, however, in most lines of finished material. Pig iron prices are somewhat lower. Deliveries in most lines are getting better. Structural shapes still have the call, and the demand seems to be taken care of with a little exertion on the part of the structural manufacturers. The dullness in buying is prevalent over the whole country. It has reached a stage where the manufacturers are looking abroad for a market to dump their surplus output unless orders are secured to follow the contracts being filled.

New York orders for structural shapes are as large as the whole country combined. The prospective orders for New York building material are also larger than the tonnage needed by all the cities combined. The structural mills are not demanding any premiums on this mass of business offered, but are booking at $1.70 per hundred pounds.

The small buying of pig iron indicates that there is not much to be had. Sales of Bessemer pig iron in this district have been made at $17.50 in small lots. No doubt a large order for delivery in the latter part of the year could be placed at $17.25 at the furnace. The Pittsburg concerns that were buyers earlier in the year are now out of the market, and it is doubtful if the United States Steel Corporation will need any extra supply of pig iron from the merchant furnaces later in the year. Requirements for the first six months are all filled.

Foundry irons are much weaker in price, better in delivery, and large orders are scarce. This is alleged to be due to the heavy buying during the Winter. The foundries are working very well, and it is said will have to come into the market later. By that time, if they hold off long enough, it will require some active buying to advance the price to where it was a few weeks ago. Foundry No. 2 is selling at $17 per ton at the furnace, basic $17.25 and less, and forge iron $16 per ton.

The plate mills, while well stocked with orders for the present, are looking for orders to keep the rolls in motion during the latter half of the year. The plate pool recently reaffirmed prices. A number of shipbuilding plants were on the eve of placing orders for quite a tonnage. They withdrew their inquiries for some reason. It is suspected they are feeling for lower prices. There seems to be a combined attempt in some directions to bear the market. It is doubtful if this can be accomplished with plates because the present price has held so long it has become fairly well established. The plate producers can point to the fact that last Winter when they were rushed with business they refused to advance the price $2 a ton at the behest of some members of the plate pool.

The sheet and tin plate trade is excellent and will continue so throughout the Spring. Prices are firm and stationary. The independents are not in a position to cut prices as they did last year after the price had been established by the American Sheet Steel and Tin Plate Company. Billets and bars are too high in price. The independents, as a rule, have no billet or bar supply, and they have to buy from the United States Steel Corporation and the Republic Iron and Steel Company, Jones & Laughlin, and other concerns, members of the billet pool, which are maintaining the price at $27.50 per ton for Bessemer billets. The output of independent billet and bar mills is very small. Several new billet mills are projected, however, and in a year from now the independent output will be considerable.

Coke prices, which became firm with the talk of a strike in the bituminous coal region, are now getting easier. Contracts are being made at $2.20 per ton for furnace coke, and $2.75 for foundry coke, at the furnaces.

Ferro manganese is getting lower in price daily. Muck bars, which have been selling at $32 per ton, are down to $30 per ton, and deliveries can be had readily. Bar iron prices are said to be in danger of a decline owing to a united action among a class of buyers who refuse to contract ahead for their requirements. Steel bars are also weaker in the line of orders, but not in price. Iron bars are quoted at $1.85, Pittsburg; steel bars $1.50.

BOSTON COPPER GOSSIP.

Heavy Inquiries for Copper—London and Paris Investigating Properties.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, March 10.—"I have received more inquiries for copper in the last ten days than in the previous sixty," said the President of one of the leading copper companies, which sells direct, to-day. And this expresses the situation accurately. Naught but the most sanguine talk is heard about the market and among the producers of the yellow metal.

"After April 1 I expect a great bull market in all lines," said one of the best informed brokers. "As to copper," he continued, "the price of the metal will be in the vicinity of 20 and the demand strong, and the stocks of producing mines buoyant. The recent revolution in the market was due to the big fellows shaking out their weak-kneed followers, and now things are in form for an upward movement of great proportions."

A bull on Amalgamated and North Butte likens the present market situation to that of 1899, when the Western contingent came East with pockets full of money and left most of it in Wall Street. "The present movement reflects only the shaking down of stocks in strong hands," he said. This gentleman is quite sure that people do not know what the Butte consolidation means, and that if they did they would be more in the market.

London and Paris capitalists are known to have engineers at work in the Butte camp at this moment, and they buy no gold bricks now, whatever they may have done in the past.

A friend of Mr. Cole tells THE TIMES correspondent that in his opinion the great men in copper plan for units in Utah, Montana, and Arizona. The Lake people are rich enough not to want more, and they are counted out of the gigantic plans now incubating.

Cole's next overt act is likely to be, according to this authority, the acquisition of Arizona Commercial—not of the stock, but a consolidation with his neighboring properties.

The February output of Calumet and Arizona was 382,510 pounds; a furnace is to be added and the output increased to 5,000,000 pounds.

Cumberland and Ely, which is selling at 6½, an adjoining property to Nevada Consolidated, is favorably regarded by the younger element in the American Smelting Company, and is said to be bought for their account. As Nevada Consolidated has, according to a late report, no less than 22,000,000 tons in sight, its next-door neighbor ought to be in request.

Owing to the rise in the price of the metal, Copper Range reports that with a decreased production of 490,000 pounds in January and February, its profits are greater than in the corresponding months of last year. The company is taking advantage of the high price to treat its low-grade ores, keeping the others for the time when the price will be lower.

Advices from Utah are to the effect that Uncle Sam has made the richest strike in its history, and that May Day is higher in sympathy and because there is a contest for control.

Bisbee reports the sale of the Blue Bell group in Yavapai County to members of the Arizona Smelting Company, which is erecting a large smelter in the district. A tramway is building to the nearest railway point.

U. S. Light & Heating Co. Reorganizes.

The United States Light & Heating Company has just been reorganized, with the following officers: Charles A. Starbuck, President; Edwin R. Hawley, Vice President, and William S. Crandall, Secretary and Treasurer. Control of the company is in the hands of the New York Air Brake Company, which has the same officers.
